Gymnasts fifth in Clare Talen Classic

by Lisa Hille

The Third Annual Clare Talen Classic was held January 16-17 in the Johnson Fieldhouse. The Clare Talen is an invitational sponsored by the Talen family and the First Bank and Trust of Menomonie.

The participating teams and their final results were as follows: Winona took first place with 135.95 points followed by Northern Michigan's score of 131.15. Canada's Manitaba took third place with 130.40 points followed by Hamline's score of 125.65. Stout squeaked by with fifth place scoring 117.65 beating Valley City's score of 117.15.

Three out of the six teams participating were scholarship schools, proving the invitational to be a good display of athletic excellence.

"We knew our competition would be with Valley City. Our battle for fifth or sixth place came right down to the last competitor for each team on their last event. We ended up .5 ahead to gain the fifth-place spot," Coach Zuerlein said.

Friday night, the team competition was held. The first event for Stout was floor exercise. The Stout competitors began the meet with good spirit. Routines flowed well despite a few stumbles on tumbling passes.

Due to the highly competitive nature of an invitational, the scores are generally lower in the first event. Sophomore Patti Roenitz had a well-executed set, leading Stout on the floor exercise with a score of 8.2

The team carried the spirit through to vault. The vaults were clean and most of them reached the required height and distance.

Vault scores were consistent with each other. Sophomore Carolyn Bjerke received the top score for Stout with an 8.05.

The meet continued with an exceptional performance on the uneven parallel bars. Freshman Kelly Kramer excited the team by finally executing a frustrating move with ease.

> "Christmas break agreed with everyone
> —Coach Zuerlein"

Leading Stout on bars were Senior Tammy Dennis and Sophomore Kim Nelson who hit smooth routines, turning in scores of 7.85 and 7.75, respectively.

Probably the toughest event, balance beam, was left as Stout's last performance. Jodi Shaefer, a freshman, began the rotation by executing a difficult combination for the first time in a meet scoring a 6.2.

Roenitz, the final competitor for Stout performed a no-fall routine which scored an 8.65. Roenitz's score not only enabled her to continue on to finals, but also broke the previous school record of 8.6

"I felt very confident on beam during this meet. After hitting my back handspring series, my routine really flowed well," Roenitz commented.

Finals were held on Saturday. The top ten scores in each event contended for the top six places, receiving a medallion designed especially for the Clare Talen Classic.

The finals competition is where the qualifying gymnasts further prove their ability under intense circumstances. Roenitz was the only Stout gymnast to qualify for finals.

Performing a no-fall routine, Roenitz scored an 8.2 and secured second place in the balance beam competition. Roenitz felt she had a good chance to take a place in the event after Friday's performance.

On January 10, Stout beat top rival UW-Eau Claire 116.10 to 115.10 in a meet held at Eau Claire.

"Christmas break agreed with everyone. We had a very productive week of practice before going to Eau Claire and producing our first dual meet win since the beginning of last year's season," said Coach Zuerlein.

Vaulting scores were within .5 of each other. Senior Cosmas Whitten took third place on vault with an 8.0.

Bars went a bit tough but Roenitz pulled through with a 7.9 to capture second place.

Stout gymnasts were looking good on beam. Roenitz scored an 8.0 to take first place followed by Freshman Michelle Scott who took second place with a score of 7.9.

Stout gymnasts really cleaned up on floor. Taking the top three places were Roenitz with an 8.3 for first place, followed by Whitten who scored an 8.1 for second place and Scott taking third with an 8.0.

Kelly Kramer took fifth place in the all-around scoring 25.80 points while Whitten took first place with her personal best score of 28.60.

The Stout women's gymnastics team will continue their competitive season this Saturday with a home meet against UW-River Falls, UW-Superior and UW-Whitewater. The meet will be in the Johnson Fieldhouse beginning at 11 a.m.

Stout swimmers drop dual meets with UW-Eau Claire

Stout Swimming and Diving teams have produced more All-American athletes than any other athletic team at Stout in the past four years. An example of this is freshman diver Natalie Wicks who has already qualified for Nationals.

by Slash La Freniere

On January 17 the UW-Stout swimming and diving teams hosted a dual meet against UW-Eau Claire. The Eau Claire teams are much larger than Stout's and Eau Claire also has a great deal of depth which was reflected in the overall scores. The Stout women's team was defeated by a score of 99-69 and the Stout men were downed by a score of 95-80.

Both teams had many people that were not swimming in their normal events. This is not to say that the two teams used this as a practice meet. It was used more as an opportunity to test new waters. Any time that an athlete is competing they try to give everything that they can and they perform to the best of their abilities, regardless of the circumstance.

The whole key to the swim team's season is not necessarily to win every meet, but to gradually improve over the whole season in order to qualify for Conference and National meets. Every swimmer shares the goal of qualifying for the Nationals and their season's long training is geared toward peaking at the time of the National meet.

Performance is not judged by the team's overall record, as in football or baseball. Rather it is based on individual improvement over the season.

In women's competition, the Stout swimmers were consistently second and third. In the greuling 1000-meter freestyle, Freshman Wendy Heineke was second with a time of 11 minutes, 40.73 seconds. Although Heineke's time was twenty seconds behind the winners, she has been a three-time conference champion in the 100-meter butterfly and the 100- and 200-meter backstroke.

In the 200-meter freestyle Sophomore Tri-captain Laurie Potter (the others are Freshman Jackie Gilbert and Heineke) was second with a time of 2:13.35. Potter has made All-American the last two years. In fact, the Stout swimming and diving teams have produced more All-American athletes than any other athletic team at Stout in the past four years.

In the hotly-contested 100-meter freestyle event, Jackie Gilbert finished second, just 0.26 seconds behind the winner. Gilbert was followed closely by Lara Perkins who was a mere 1.14 seconds behind her. Jackie Gilbert had earlier victories against UW-La Crosse in the 500-meter and 200-meter freestyle events. Gilbert has also qualified nationally in the 100-meter and 200-meter freestyle event as well.

In the 200-meter freestyle relay, the team of Heineke, Gilbert, Potter and Freshman Kristin Poncius were second with a time of 1:48.60, two seconds off of the pace.

Freshman Natalie Wicks is another member of the Stout women's team to have already qualified for Nationals. Wicks will be competing in diving.

A longtime and original member of the women's team is Cheryl DeBaker. DeBaker is the last remaining member since the swim program was restarted at Stout four years ago. She has also achieved the status of Academic All-American as well as being a steady performer over the years.

For the men the most pleasant surprise has been the addition of diver Conroy Ninham. Ninham was first in the one-meter spring board against Eau Claire and he also added two more first place finishes against La Crosse in the one meter and three meter springboard events.

In the 200-meter freestyle event against Eau Claire, Mark Kukuzke was first followed by Senior Kurt Seibert in second place. Kukuzke is What is a loser?

Jockey Shorts

This Sunday most of America will be sitting in front of a television set watching two top football teams battle it out for the Superbowl championship.

Both teams have been practicing hard since this summer. Each individual player has challenged his own endurance. Many players are at their top physical performance level while many others with injuries painfully continue to play the sport they so love.

In the end one team will win and one will lose. After the game, television cameras bring many viewers into the locker room of the champs. Reporters ask players questions as to what a victory feels like.

The losers on the other hand just walk away to the showers. Their fans are not happy with them. There team made it to the Superbowl and almost won. Too bad almost only counts in horseshoes, right?

To many athletes, just making it is a dream come true. My example is not a Superbowl football player but someone with a basic desire who has a goal that is easier to relate to.

His name is Joey and he is eight years old. Joey is not like most kids. He was born with one extra chromosome. The race he is running is the 50-yard dash in the Special Olympics.

Joey practiced by running around in his back yard and throughout the hallways and rooms of his house. At nights Joey had a hard time falling asleep. He worried about his performance as a runner.

The day of the special Olympics finally came. Joey was the first one to awake. He ran around the house waking up his parents and sister because Joey did not want to be late.

For breakfast Joey's father bought donuts — donuts for breakfast are only bought for special occasions. After breakfast Joey dressed in his running uniform. The number 12 had already been sewn on the back of his shirt. Surely, thought Joey, no jacket would be worn to cover up his official number no matter how windy it may become.

Many hours later Joey was on the starting line. He looked at the other runners he would be competing against. He thought how excited they too must be about running this race.

The whistle blew and the runners were off. Joey was keeping pretty even with the other competitors until suddenly Joey fell, scraping his knee on the pavement.

All eyes were on Joey. Would he get up and finish the race he was already defeated in. To Joey this race was now against no one but himself. Suddenly Joey was on his feet headed for the finish line.

Even though number 12 placed last in the race, he was happy. He had proven to himself that he could cross the finish line.

The question at hand in the case of Joey and the Superbowl is this: Is the person or team that places last always a loser?

Lady cagers still searching for right combination to notch first win

by Paul Emerson

The UW-Stout women's basketball team wasted little time getting back into the regular season schedule by playing four games in six days, the last being on January 14.

Coach Lynda Lee summed up the four games by stating, "In all of the four games we've had one good half, but we need two good halves to do well."

The Lady Blue Devils were plagued by that one poor half and dropped all four games during the exhausting week.

Stout first played St. Scholastica of Duluth, Minn. on January 9 and after being down by 19 points at the half, lost the game by a 73-52 score.

The Lady Blue Devils then took on Northland College in Ashland, Wis. the following afternoon. A poor first half again proved to be Stout's demise and they dropped the game 63-44.

Senior forward Patti Cook and Junior Janet Turowski each had eight points to lead Stout. Junior Renee Kasten scored six points and pulled down an impressive 18 rebounds.

Stout shot 29 percent from the floor, making 17 of 59 shots, and hit on 10 of 18 free throws for 55 percent. Northland connected on just 21 of 73 shots for 29 percent but sank 21 of 34 free throws for 62 percent.

Stout was plagued by 24 turnovers in the game to just 12 by Northland.

UW-River Falls was the next test in the Lady Blue Devil's hectic week. Early in the game Stout hung tough, but with the score knotted at 25, River Falls then went on a 15-4 scoring spurt to lead at the half, 40-29. The final score was 86-44 in River Falls' favor.

Kasten again led Stout's attack with 15 points and 9 rebounds, while Cook, Turowski and Freshman Jacki Gilbert all chipped in six points.

> "We have good depth on the bench
> —Coach Lee"

In the first half Stout shot 45 percent, hitting on 14 of 31 shots from the floor, but made just 7 of 32 shots in the second half to fall off the pace.

On January 14, the Lady Blue Devils traveled to UW-Superior and found the Lady Yellow Jacket's sting to be too much to handle as they lost the game by a 71-49 score.

Janet Turowski led Stout in scoring with 14 points. Renee Kasten had 12 points and 12 rebounds. Kasten leads the WWIAC in rebounding thus far with a 16.0 average.

For the game Stout shot 35 percent from the floor (20 of 57) but just 32 percent from the line (9 of 28). Superior made 30 of 75 field goals (41.3 percent) and 11 of 19 from the free-throw line (55 percent).

Stout had 32 turnovers in the game to 24 by Superior. Superior won the battle of the boards 47-34.

Coach Lee has tried several tactics to get the team that first big win but is still searching for the right combination.

"It's early in the conference yet. We still want to win at least two, maybe three or four. We are getting closer if that's any consolation. It's just not showing in the stats," Lee said.

Lee also credits the bench with a lot more support this year, and that is helping the team. "We have good depth on the bench. They come in and play real well."

Lee also announced that Lisa Blume has rejoined the team. Blume, a sophomore, is slowly working her way back into the starting line-up at her old point guard position.

The Lady Blue Devils were scheduled to play at UW-Eau Claire this past Tuesday and Lee says that this could be the game they break the jinx and get that first win.

Then on Wednesday Stout was to host UW-La Crosse. On Friday the women play host to UW-Stevens Point in a 5 p.m. contest, and on Saturday they host UW-Oshkosh in a 4 p.m. tip-off. Then on Tuesday, Northland College invades the fieldhouse for a 6:30 p.m. game.

Tracksters optimistic following Badger Classic performance

by Denise Cain

With the return of track coordinator Steve Terry, the UW-Stout track and field team looks forward to being back on the right track.

Terry has resumed full responsibilities as head coach of the Blue Devil squad after taking a leave of absence last January to work on his doctorate at the University of New Mexico.

Coach Terry brought the enthused men's track team to their first meet January 17 at the Badger Classic in Madison, Wis. Terry felt that this meet would give the runners an indication of where their conditioning development is right now.

Sophomore jumper Gary Klopp led the Blue Devils by placing fourth in the long jump with a distance of 22 feet, 1 3/4 inches. It was a personal best for Klopp who has not participated in track since his senior high school track season in 1984.

Having already achieved his primary goal of 20 feet, Klopp said, "Jumping that well really surprised me. I am anticipating a good season."

Another promising performance was given by Dan Doucette who was a national qualifier in the intermediate hurdles last spring. Doucette, who ran the 440-yard dash on Saturday placed seventh overall in a time of 51.85 seconds.

Doucette's outlook for the season is one of high hopes, stating that, "I feel we do have a young team but we also have some good returning upperclassmen. We can place high in conference."

No hurdlers, sprinters, vaulters or shot-putters participated in the meet at Madison because they have not had a chance to work on their events during practice. They will join the runners and participate along with the women's team this Saturday as they all travel to the University of Minnesota to compete in the Northwest Open.

The track team looks forward to participating at Minnesota because it is a Big 10-caliber meet and the competition will be tough. The meet will give the runners and field people a chance to turn in some good early performances.

Coach Terry feels the strong points of the team are in the hurdle crew, focusing on Dan Doucette, Brian Kohl and Zack Adams; in pole vaulting where Scott Romenesko stands dominant and in the distance runners led by Paul Bons, Matt Christenson, Bob Hackley and Mike Todey.

Coach Terry cited that the women's team lacks overall depth while the men's team is lacking in sprinters. Anyone interested in participating is asked to contact Steve Terry before the end of the week.

Stout grapplers raise record to 2-4 with 36-11 victory

by Tim Nichols

The UW-Stout wrestling team rolled to a 36-11 victory over Northwestern (Wis.) here at Johnson Fieldhouse last Thursday night. With the help of Northwestern forfeits at the 118, 126, 134, 177, and heavyweight classes, Stout had little difficulty in notching the win.

Individual winners for the Blue Devils included Wayne Hendrickson by technical fall in the 167-pound class and Jim Miotke by fall at 158 pounds. Hendrickson dominated his opponent in recording the technical fall in the first period while Miotke sealed his victory by pinning his opponent at 2:21 of the first period.

Jeff Zeiling lost a close match at 142 by a score of 6-4. Scott Abbrederis lost by decision in the 150-pound match.

Perhaps the most exciting match of the evening was the 190-pound class bout pairing Bart Milton of Stout against Ringo Burg of Northwestern. The two grapplers were constantly reversing control in the match with Burg tallying an 11-4 lead in the first period. Throughout the rest of the match Milton slowly narrowed Burg's lead but came up short in losing by a 17-12 decision.

Blue Devil wrestlers Keith Rusch, Kevin Burbach, Steve Smith and Rich Rupp received forfeits. The victory raised the Blue Devils' dual meet record to 2-4.

Last Friday and Saturday, the Blue Devils competed in the Cornell Invitational at Mt. Vernon, Iowa. The tournament included many of the top NCAA division III teams in the Midwest.

The most notable place-winner for Stout was Wayne Hendrickson in the 167-pound class. Hendrickson placed second while tallying a 3-1 record for the tournament. In the finals, Hendrickson lost to a tough opponent form Central Iowa by a 14-4 decision.

Steve Smith placed fifth at 177 and Rich Rupp placed seventh at heavyweight. Both wrestlers earned 3-2 records.

The Blue Devils next wrestle against UW-La Crosse at Johnson Fieldhouse on Thursday, January 22 at 6:30 p.m.

Sandin captures title

by Cosmas Whitten

Stout Senior Gary Sandin took first place in the King Classic, a body building competition held December 6 at the Martin Luther King Center located in Milwaukee, Wis.

Sandin was sponsored by the Stout Weight Training and Fitness Club in which he is currently an active member.

Sandin, a former member of the men's first place 1984 NAIA National Gymnastics Team, has incorporated planched handstands into his one minute, 45 second routine which is done to a Simple Minds recording entitled "Alive and Kicking."

Sandin is frequently asked if he uses steroids. "I feel strongly against the use of anabolic steroids because I think it is very unfair to people who body build using natural methods," is Sandin's reply.

For two and one half years Sandin has been training for body building. Sandin trains by lifting five days a week for two hours a day with his lifting partner Senior Scott Gay.

The King Classic was the third body building competition Sandin has participated in. Sandin said he felt very confident going into the competition. "I was in the best shape I've ever been in for this show."

Due to plans for a May graduation, Sandin does not foresee further competition for nearly two years. Until then Sandin said, "There is a lot of muscle mass that I want to add to my physique."

more of a middle distance specialist and he did qualify for Nationals last year in the 1650-meter freestyle event. Earlier, against La Crosse, Kukuzke finished second in the 1000-meter freestyle by only 0.07 seconds.

Against Eau Claire Steve Kostrova swam in the 1000-meter event. He was well behind the leader for most of the race and Kostrova almost looked lonely as he was swimming. "You just can't worry about everyone else. You have to concentrate on yourself," Kostrova said.

Kostrova's concentration paid off earlier in the season. Against La Crosse he was first in the 200-meter butterfly event. Kostrova also holds the conference records for both the 100-meter and the 200-meter butterfly and he is a consistent team leader.

The 400-meter medley relay team of captain Stu Boese, Kostrova, Carlson and Seibert won against La Crosse. The event consists of four legs with each man swimming either the butterfly, freestyle, breaststroke or backstroke.

The men were also victorious in the 400-meter freestyle relay. Captain Boese, Seibert, Peterson and Kukuzke made up the team against La Crosse.

With only a handful of meets remaining before the Conference and National championships, it will be up to Coach John Miller and each individual swimmer to help each other to motivate themselves to compete to the best of their abilities in order to become national champions.

Stout Basketball ranks 11 in NAIA

by Paul Emerson

There's an old saying that goes, "All good things must come to an end," and the UW-Stout men's basketball team reluctantly found that saying to be true as they were dealt their first loss of the season by the UW-River Falls Falcons on January 10, by an 81-72 score.

The Blue Devils ran their season-opening winning streak to 12 games, but a baker's dozen thirteenth was not to be. Head Coach Dewey Mintz credited River Falls with playing a super game but noted that illnesses to several players on his Blue Devil squad could be blamed for the team's sluggish performance.

Stout utilized its strong inside game to take a one point lead at the half, 34-33. But River Falls came out in the second half with a zone that shut down the Blue Devil's offensive strong point, while the Falcon's offense caught fire and enabled them to come away with the big win.

River Fall's Steve Justice took game scoring honors with 19 points, but it was the Falcon's Neil Yost who proved to be Stout's nemesis throughout the game.

Yost, who according to Mintz played, "the game of his career," scored 17 points on 8 of 9 shooting, including 6 straight shots in the second half. Paul Denny, the Falcon's main offensive threat, was held to 16 points.

The Blue Devils were led in scoring by Ron Hunter who scored 13 points and Dave Sandstrom and Brian Ellingson, who chipped in 12 each.

The Blue Devils wasted little time getting back on the victory trail as they traveled up to UW-Superior on January 14 and stung the Yellow Jackets with an 87-77 loss.

The last time the two teams met, Stout dominated throughout enroute to a 93-58 win at the fieldhouse. This time however, Superior gave the Blue Devils quite a scare early, before Stout turned it around in the second half.

The Yellow Jackets held a 13 point lead at one point in the first half, but the Devils, inspired by the defensive play of Luther Forrest and the all-around play of John Patterson, took the lead by one point at the end of the first half on a 3-point field goal by Brian Ellingson.

Then in the second half, the Blue Devil's inside game really turned on and left little doubt as to the outcome of the game. With the win Stout moves to 4-1 in the WSUC and 13-1 overall.

> "This year's team knows the offense better
> —Coach Mintz"

Tom Gomolak led the Blue Devil's in scoring with 18 points while Ellingson scored 15 points. Patterson had 14, and Ron Hunter 11.

Stout hit on 35 of 69 shots for 50.7 percent and sank 13 of 17 free throws for 76 percent. Superior connected on 31 of 54 field goals for 57.4 percent and was 8 of 15 from the line for 53.3 percent.

Stout hosted the Hardee's Classic December 19 and 20. The Blue Devils successfully defended their title with an easy 89-67 victory over Northland College in the championship game.

Mintz noted that the Blue Devil's real test was in the semi-final game against Mayville State, ND, who Stout also defeated easily, 88-71. The Blue Devil's John Patterson was selected the tourney's MVP. Patterson scored 35 points and grabbed 27 rebounds in the two games to lead Stout.

Other top players in the tourney for Stout were Brian Ellingson, Dave Sandstrom, Rick Wynveen and Luther Forrest.

Mintz noted that Mark Stevens, a starter last season, is slowly returning to form and will be a big help off the bench. Stevens broke his foot in preseason drills and is still hampered by the injury.

The Blue Devils also competed in the Bethel College tourney on January 2 and 3 and defeated host Bethel in the title game with a 68-50 win. Stout was up by only one at the half, 32-31, but blew the game open in the second half.

Stout crushed Concordia College in their first game, 86-43. Stout's Ron Hunter was voted the tourney's MVP. Hunter scored 35 points in the two games. Brian Ellingson and Tom Gomolak were also voted to the all-tourney team, along with Hunter.

The Blue Devils were to open a three-game home stand starting this past Tuesday with UW-La Crosse. Stout won the first meeting between the two teams back on December 6 in La Crosse, 64-60.

Stout hosts the UW-Stevens Point Pointers on Friday night and the UW-Oshkosh Titans on Saturday night. Both games have a 7:30 p.m. tip-off time.

Stevens Point, coming off a big win over UW-River Falls last Saturday, is 12-3 on the season and is ranked 8th in the NAIA poll this week. Stout, 13-1, holds down the number 11 spot in the NAIA top 20.

"They are a good all-around ball club and they run a deliberately slow offense and wait for the shots to open up," Mintz said.

Oshkosh is led by the conference's leading scorer and rebounder Jeff Skagstead, who is averaging 31.0 points and 11.0 rebounds per game.

"They throw the ball out like a piece of meat to a bunch of hounds," said Mintz in reference to the Titans fast breaking offense.

When asked what he felt was the difference between this year's team and last year's, Mintz said the teams are actually very similar. "However this year's team knows the offense better, and they run it instinctively better," added Mintz.

Minnesota Twins players promote Menomonie Area Youth Baseball

by Slash La Freniere

When I found out that the Twins refused even to negotiate the deal offered to them I was angry. But Jack Morris has his own price and he was unwilling to negotiate his price downward."

Catcher Tim Laudner said that he has confidence in the current Twins pitching staff and also in new manager Tom Kelly. With Bert Blyleven and Frank Viola being the only potential 20-game winners on the staff, Jack Morris would have been a welcome addition.

Laudner continued on to say that the Twins will be looking to their offensive strengths to produce early runs. "If we could get a late inning relief pitcher with some heat it would help us a great deal," added Laudner.

On a lighter note, Kent Hrbek often referred to his onfield fight with Milwaukee Brewer Jim Gantner. In the scuffle between the two players, Hrbek suffered numerous cuts and bruises.

When Hrbek was asked if the whole situation came about as a result of a cheap shot he replied, "I don't think that our fight was a result of a cheap shot by either of us. The Twins and Brewers have a great rivalry and Jim Gantner just plain doesn't like me."

On Monday members of the Minnesota Twins promotional caravan were in Menomonie to help promote the Menomonie Area Youth Baseball Association and also to promote the Twins organization.

Twins first baseman Kent Hrbek and catcher Tim Laudner were the featured guests of the luncheon as well as the longtime radio voice of the Twins, Herb Karneil.

Guests at the luncheon were treated to the Twins highlight film and an open forum of questions were fielded by players Hrbek and Laudner. Although the Twins' season last year was pretty lousy, the players reflected back on the season with humor and they also maintain a high level of optimism for the upcoming season.

The most interesting point that was brought up was the Twins' pitching staff and the speculation into the acquisition of Detroit Tiger ace Jack Morris.

Kent Hrbek said, "I was upset at first when I heard that they [the Twins] didn't sign Jack Morris.

Kent Hrbek and, to a lesser extent, Tim Laudner are prolific power hitters with some impressive longball statistics. Hrbek broke into the Major Leagues with a home run in his first at bat and Laudner has delivered many clutch homers over the years.

When asked if either of them go to the plate looking to hit the long ball, Hrbek said, "Not really. The home run happens more as an accident than anything else. I think that a line drive is a more true hit. When you are looking to hit a home run it seems more difficult."

It is nice to see members of a professional baseball organization supporting youth baseball. Herb Karneil said it best: "Almost every boy who has ever played baseball dreams of some day playing in the Major Leagues."

Both Hrbek and Laudner grew up and played youth baseball in the Twin Cities and dreamed of playing Major League baseball. They encourage people to support youth baseball and help to support a dream.

MEAL PLANS FOR OFF-CAMPUS BOARDERS
Semester II - 1986-87

Residential Dining Services recognizes that off-campus students require some special flexibility because of their need to travel to and from campus. As a result, two meal plans have been developed and are known as limited participation plans.

A. CENTURY PLAN - Breakfast, Lunch/Brunch or Dinner meals

Enables the off-campus diner to partake in any 100 meals during a semester. This may be any combination of breakfast, brunch/lunch or dinner. The cost for this plan is $299 and represents a $345 value if used exclusively for evening meals. While meals are non-refundable at the end of the semester, the plan does allow you to treat guests. Note that weekly steak meals require paying an additional $1 75 per meal. THIS IS A LIMITED PLAN AND IS NOT VALID FOR THE STUDENT CENTER DINING SERVICES OR FOR P.M. OPERATIONS. However, those who subscribe to this plan will receive a 10% discount for their cash purchases at the P.M. Operations at the Price Commons or Tainter Dining Services.

B. MODIFIED CENTURY PLAN - Breakfast, Lunch/Brunch ONLY

Those off-campus students who find they are seldom on campus for the evening meal might want to consider this plan. It is priced at $199 a semester and allows a student to participate in any combination of breakfast, brunch or lunch for a total of 85 meals. This represents a $225.25 value. IT DOES NOT ALLOW STUDENTS TO PARTICIPATE IN THE EVENING MEAL NOR TO EAT AT THE STUDENT CENTER DINING SERVICES. As with the Century Plan, however, participants can treat guests and will enjoy 10% off their cash transactions at the Price Commons or Tainter Dining Services.

Cancellations by the student are subject to the following refund policy:

	Century	Modified
Cancellations will forfeit:	$10.08/week	$1.45/week
Plus:	$1.28/per meal	$1.05/per meal

THESE PLANS ARE NOT USABLE IN ANY STUDENT CENTER OPERATION.

Active student group organizes Speed Run

by Masha Roberts

The nationally sanctioned snowmobile race on Lake Menomin, organized by the UW-Stout Vet's Club, provides most of the funds for the club's activities.

The 3rd Annual Budweiser Vets Club Snowmobile Speed Run will be held on Lake Menomin on Feb. 1.

The work of Vet's Club members was replaced by computers in 1984, when the registration process was moved from the fieldhouse to Bowman Hall. Club members who worked to register Stout students earned money under the old system. Pay for their work was given by the university to their organization.

The computerization of the registration process eliminated the club's source of income and inspired them to organize the annual snowmobile races in Menomonie. The race is now a Budweiser sponsored and National Snowmobile Speed Runs Inc. sanctioned event. "The club members are aware that the snowmobile speed run is the race that will keep their club functioning," said Mike Oliver, president of the club.

"Members are very anxious, as well as excited, about the whole event," Oliver added.

> "Members are very anxious, as well as excited
> —Mike Oliver"

The club's event has been included this year in the Menomonie Winter Carnival which will run throughout the weekend. The Menomonie Chamber of Commerce sponsored the Winter Carnival and expects community participation in the Vet's Club race.

James Kruger, chairman of the Chamber's Winter Carnival Committee said that several local snowmobilers will be participating in the speed run.

The Chamber of Commerce is offering a $200 award to anyone who breaks the current world speed record for snowmobiles.

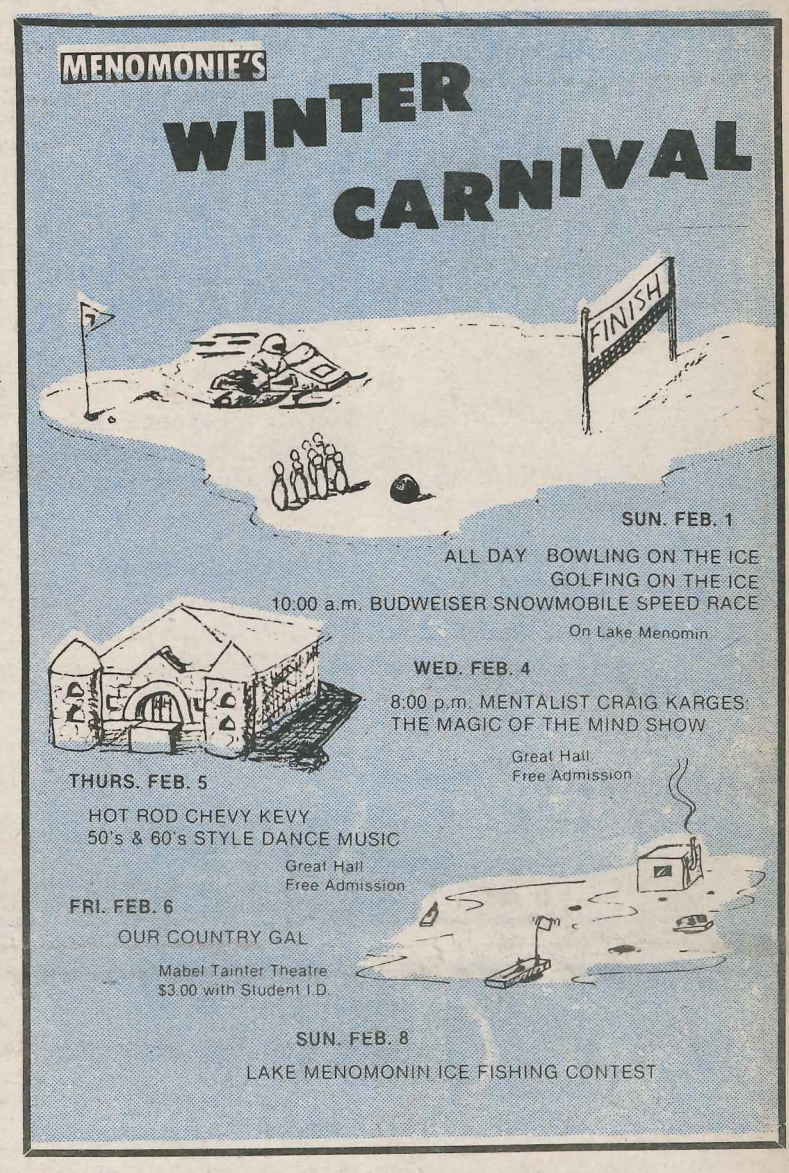
"It has been a pleasure working with the Menomonie Chamber of Commerce," said Oliver. The Vet's Club has offered a $1000 purse to the winner, making the total prize for breaking the record $1200.

Oliver said that the Chamber's donation combined with the Vet's Club's "will make the race the biggest winning purse of the whole race series, if the record is broken."

The record standing before the Vet's Club race last year was broken by the Chopper City Special, driven by Marv Jorgenson. The Special reached a speed of 159.03 mph in a quarter mile.

This speed record has since been broken again and stands at 160.37. The same Marv Jorgenson holds this record and is expected to run the Vet's Club race.

Proceeds from the race will be donated to the Viet Nam Memorial Park in Neilsville, Wisconsin and the United Way.



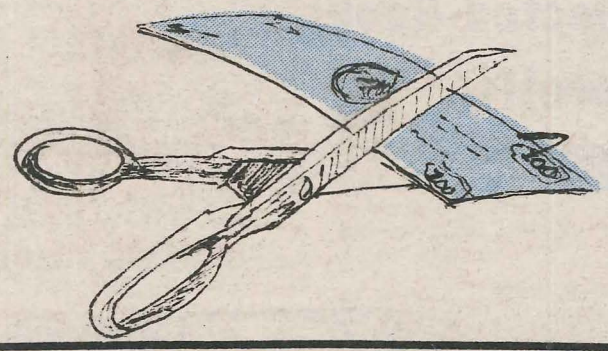
Wisconsin higher education grant checks $25 short

WISCONSIN HIGHER EDUCATION GRANTS

BUDGET - $13 MILLION

DEFICIT - $800,000 Due to over allocation

RESULT - The Higher Education Board of Wisconsin decreased each recipients check by the amount of $25.00



by Judy Weitzer

Students who picked up their Wisconsin Higher Education grant checks last week noticed a $25 reduction in funding.

Because of the large number of students that applied for grants for the 1986-87 academic year, the amount of money allocated to cover these grant checks overshot the budget allotted for them by $800,000.

The Higher Education Aids Board of Wisconsin (HEAB) had a budget of $13 million to allocate between all applicants of financial aid grants in both the UW-System and Vocational schools, according to Kurtis Kindschi, Director of the Financial Aids Office at UW-Stout.

To offset the deficit, the HEAB decreased the amount of each recipient's check by $25.

This type of reduction has occurred four times in the last 12 years, according to Don Fowler, program and policies administrator of the HEAB. Deductions, he said, have been as much as $100 in the past.

Only Wisconsin residents can apply for this type of grant. The process involves completing the standard financial aid packet, and eligibility is determined by financial need.

Each year the board must predict the number of students that will apply and, based on that number, determine a formula for distribution.

This is difficult because there is no deadline for application. At the time the award grants are calculated, only 40-50 percent of the total applications have been received.

This year, approximately 1400 Stout students were eligible for grants. The average amount of a grant check was $435.

Fowler said that in September, the HEAB approved a proposal for a $6 million increase in next year's budget.

The formulas used for the calculation of grants are elements of state law and will be in effect for the 1987-88 academic year.

However, a group will begin working on amendment to the laws that set the formulas for eligibility this year. The Council on Financial Aid, in session from September 1, 1987-August 31, 1988 will work on amending the laws.

Fifty percent of the Council members are students, including three representing students of the UW-System. These delegates are chosen by the United Council, the statewide association of student governments of each university in the system.

At a time when Chinese leadership has cracked down on dissidents, an American journalist has been barred from the country for accepting what the government called "intelligence" from a Chinese student.

Agence France-Presse reporter Lawrence MacDonald, a Chinese-speaking Californian, has denied any illegal activity and called the charges against him "totally absurd."

MacDonald, 32, has been working in Peking for two years and has had excellent contacts, particularly with scholars and university students.

Deaths caused by abuse increase

Reports of deaths caused by the abuse and neglect of children increased 29 percent last year, according to a report on data collected in 24 states.

The National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse, which released the report, said that state agencies are getting too overburdened to cope with the problem.

"Caseloads are getting too high," said Anne Cohn, executive director of the committee. "Some families who might have been helped by treatment, didn't get it. Death is one of the outcomes."

Advisory on Great Lakes trout

Tests indicate that lake trout longer than 30 inches taken from the Great Lakes tend to contain high levels of the toxic substances, polychlorinated biphenyls, also known as PCBs.

Eight states, including Wisconsin, have joined in an advisory recommending that consumers not eat trout taken from the Great Lakes. The advisory notes that some states have advised against eating even the smaller trout, those measuring less than 30 inches.

Gathering in front of the Memorial Student Center, a group of marchers paraded across the UW-Stout campus on Thursday, Jan. 22. That date is the anniversary of the Supreme Court decision which made abortion legal in the United States. The march at Stout was organized to protest the decision and call for laws to make abortion illegal once more.

Lobbying goals set by UW student reps

by Doug Hisson
Courtesy of UWM Post

Capping tuition, civil rights, increased financial aid and minority retention were set as the lobbying goals of the UW-System student lobbying group at its monthly meeting, hosted by UW-Stout on Saturday.

The United Council (UC) General Assembly, which met at the Menomonie High School, also challenged the UW administration to explain alledged mistakes in the budget request it submitted to the legislature and, in what cased emotional debate among the more than seventy delegates from around the state, reaffirmed a commitment to the First Amendment Rights of campus newspapers.

The resolution challenging the UW-System came in response to a report from the Legislative Audit Bureau (LAB) that the system's request for an additional $88 million in funding over the next two years was overestimated by $55 million.

System administration said the increase is needed to bring per student spending up to the national average.

The system budget request also includes tuition increases, which would amount to 27.1 percent over the next two years.

In response to the threat of major tuition increases, the UC general assembly passed a resolution calling for a cap on tuition at 30 percent of the cost of instruction for residents and 100 percent for non-residents.

Currently, residents pay about 34 percent of the total cost of their education, with the state picking up the balance. Non-resident students pay 105 percent of the cost.

The UC General Assembly also supported a resolution calling for Wisconsin to enact civil rights legislation to counter the Supreme Court decision in Grove City College vs. Bell.

The Grove City decision determined that a university which receives federal funds can be penalized for discrimination only in the department or program that receives those funds.

A Wisconsin civil rights bill, which would apply the non-discrimination law to the entire university, was introduced in the state legislature last session but failed to be considered before the session ended.

Honoring January as "Freedom of the Campus Press Month," the assembly passed a resolution "reaffirming United Council's dedication to protecting the presses' First Amendment Rights and freedoms."

The resolution inspired the most debate of any topic during the meeting, when student government representatives who said they had problems with their campus newspapers would not support the motion.

"I support this, but we're having some problems with one of our newspapers on campus," said UW-Milwaukee delegate Wendy Fulcher.

"We do not have unbiased coverage," she said. Fulcher explained her position on the resolution, saying, "There's such a thing as taking these things too far."

Stout Student Association President Paul D. Nelson disagreed.

"We should be big enough to accept criticism," Nelson said of the role of the press.

"Not passing this (resolution)," Nelson said, "would show we are not amenable to basic rights in this country."

A request by members of the UW-Madison group to join UC as Associate Members was denied on procedural grounds. Students at Madison voted to pull out of the lobby goup in October but the student government still sends a delegation to each UC meeting.

Associate members of UC cannot vote but do have a voice in setting policy.

Madison delegate James Nell said the rejection would only increase bad feelings between the Madison student government and UC.

"Some people in United Council just don't enjoy Madison's presence," Nell said. "They might want Madison's money but they don't want to hear what Madison has to say."

Each student at a member campus pays a one dollar refundable fee to finance UC. When the students of Madison voted to withdraw from the organization, UC lost about $60 thousand in revenues for the second semester.

Group formed for victims of false accusation

by Jill Huppert

A Menomonie group, VOCAL, is working to protect the rights of persons falsely accused of child abuse.

Members of VOCAL feel they and their children are being manipulated and abused by the Social Services system and laws designed to protect children.

The founders started the group last March, after having been accused of child abuse four times. David and Julie Ulberg said they feel they, and that others like them, have been falsely accused.

VOCAL is a national organization with over 3500 members.

The Wisconsin chapter began in Menomonie with 13 people. They now have 35 members in Menomonie and affiliates throughout Wisconsin.

Nationally, approximately 65 percent of all child abuse cases reported are proven to be unsubstantiated, according to the National Center for Child Abuse and Neglect.

In Wisconsin between the years 1979 and 1984, 47 out of 55 thousand reported cases of child abuse were found to be unsubstantiated, David Ulberg said.

Rebecca Lund, a member of VOCAL, lost custody of her son after a doctor reported her son's stress fractures to Social Services employees.

"They took my son," Lund said, "and put him in a foster home and took me to court, even though they had no proof how the fractures happened."

Lund said that she feels she is a victim of the family court system which, she said, should remove children from the home only if they have "reasonable cause" or evidence of abuse.

In criminal court, "probable cause plus a reasonable amount of evidence" must be presented, Lund said.

The Ulbergs were reported to Social Services by their childrens' school. The Ulbergs said they were treated as though they were guilty until proven innocent.

"They manipulated us," Ulberg said. "They can do what they want and they are immune to the laws."

> "We can't go back and sue anonymous reports
> —Julie Ulberg"

The VOCAL group believes the reason for the high number of false accusations is a stipulation in the 1974 Child Abuse Protection Act which legalizes anonymous reporting of abuse.

"If somebody sees you spanking your kid in the grocery store," Julie Ulberg said, "they can call Social Services, and they'll come and take your child from you."

"There is no recourse for us," Lund said. "We can't go back and sue anonymous reports."

People who report under the 1974 law are granted confidentiality.

VOCAL believes the 1974 law should be modified to truly protect the children. They claim that much of the Social Services Department's time is wasted investigating people falsely accused by anonymous reports.

"We are against child abuse," Ulberg said, "and we know there are people who do abuse. But the honest people are being damaged by the system."

Lund said in cases of divorce, if one parent is accused of abuse, the other parent will get automatic custody, whether or not the first parent is found guilty.

The abuser should be removed from the home, rather than the child, David Ulberg suggested.

Social Services employees who handle abuse reports in the county deny that the investigations are handled improperly.

"All of our efforts are towards unification of the family," said Larry Rhead, Dunn County supervisor for Children Services.

"In all child abuse cases reported," Rhead said,"there must be a thorough investigation within legal criteria. There must also be positive proof of abuse, determined by a judge, before children are removed from the home."

"It is easy for the public to misunderstand," Rhead said, "because we can't talk about confidential scenario. It would be unethical for us to do that."

Rhead added, "A group like VOCAL can be vocal because they're not bound by that confidentiality."

Getting organized the most important step in stopping tuition increases

by Rose Shakal

"The most important thing for students to do regarding the tuition increase is to get organized and involved," said John Schenian, a university student who serves on the Board of Regents and who was on campus Jan. 23 and 24.

Student Regent Schenian is a full regent, along with 16 others. The regents serve a two-year term and their duties include attending the Regent's monthly meetings and serving on a committee.

This past year, the Regents' time was devoted to their report on the future of the UW-System.

"I voted, along with all the other regents," Schenian said, "for approving the study as it is."

Currently, he added that the Regents are amending some parts of the study.

Part of the study focused on increasing the efficient use of the UW-Center schools. Changes are being proposed by the Regents so that a students can go to a UW-Center school for one or two years and transfer to a university to finish their degree.

This plan would require that a student could have all of their credits transfer from one UW-System school to another. This, Schenian said, would efficiently cut enrollment and relieve overcrowding of system campuses.

Brian Schenian

"I think the most important thing for students right now is to lobby the state legislature," Schenian said.

Schenian outlined four basic steps to accomplish this.

First, student leaders must work with local legislators. Student representatives need to explain the problems they have to Representative Dick Shoemaker, Schenian suggested.

Secondly, students should work with other groups on campus, such as the staff and the office of the Chancellor.

Thirdly, through United Council, the state-wide student governance association, students need to organize at a state level and not fight amongst themselves.

Schenian said that students need to point out specific, tangible needs to the state Legislature.

Schenian speculated that such organizing efforts on the part of student leaders would be very effective.

"I think students will see a marked increase in the quality of education," Schenian said. "More class sections, more library materials, labs, and more teachers."

Best of Show awarded—

A cash prize of $75 is awarded to Todd Anderson, center, of Shakopee, Minnesota, for his participation in the first annual Arts and Crafts Christmas Fair at UW-Stout. Todd is a 1981 graduate of Stout with a degree in industrial education. Anderson designs and produces quality custom furniture in Shakopee. Dr. Jim Bensen, dean of the school of industry and technology, left, and Jim Bjornerud, director of the Center for Craftsmanship, right, present the award to Anderson. The Christmas Faire was sponsored by the Center for Craftsmanship at the university. It was held December 12 and 13 at the Memorial Student Center. The Christmas Faire featured 31 booths and a wide variety of high quality crafts; including ceramics, stained-glass, wood-work, fiber art, jewelery-making, drawing and painting. Artisans from Wisconsin and Minnesota participated in the juried event.

Public relations exec appointed by Catherine Schnieder

"The Media Advertising Coordinator shall chair the public relations committee and be responsible for all the public relations for the Stout Student Association (SSA)."

These words, taken from the SSA constitution, are the guidelines in which the new Media Advertising coordinator, Jim Falkofske, will be working.

Jim Falkofske

Paul D. Nelson, SSA president, recommended Falkofske's appointment to the SSA senators at their meeting on Tuesday.

The senators approved Jim Falkofske's appointment as Media Advertising Coordinator. Falkofske is replacing Denise Hoeft, who resigned the position last semester.

Minimum requirements for the position include status of a full-time student and good academic standing at the school, which means a grade point average of at least 2.0.

Good writing ability, knowledge of advertising practices, and the ability to delegate tasks were some of the other skills Nelson is looking for in his reviewing of applicants.

The coordinator chairs the SSA's Public Relations Committee. This committee is one of six standing committees within the SSA. Three to four SSA senators work with the coordinator to do the committee work.

The coordinator handles public relations for SSA.

"It is a clearing house for all information that is supposed to go out to the students and the public," said Nelson.

"The Public Relations Committee aids in keeping the advertising tasteful and properly handled," said Nelson.

"It lets the other committees," Nelson added, "spend time making changes rather than making posters."

The coordinator is responsible for setting up the interviewing process and paperwork for selection of "Who's Who Award" recipients.

The criteria for the the Medallion Award is set by the Public Relations Committee, also. This award is the highest non-academic award given at Stout, recognizing service to the university.

The coordinator is also in charge of the SSA spring banquet and the general election of SSA officers in the spring.

"Writing press releases to the media on issues of great importance" is one of the ways in which Nelson plans to expand the position in the upcoming semester.

The coordinator is a non-voting member of SSA, as are the other executive positions of SSA.

A salary, equal to in-state tuition, is paid to the coordinator for their work. The position requires a minimum of ten office hours per week and attendance at SSA general meetings.

Banned South African brought to UW-Stout

by Tracy Lea Landis

A white journalist who was forced to flee South Africa with his family because he published accounts of the life and death of Steve Biko, a black South African leader, will be speaking at UW-Stout on Tuesday, Feb. 3.

Fifth generation South African Donald Woods' appearance is being sponsored by the Speakers Series Commission (SSC), a segregated fees funded organization. Admission to the event is free.

The SSC, consisting of students, staff and faculty of the university and members of the Menomonie community, hired Woods with money allocated to them by the Stout Student Association, as part of their annual program of speakers brought to the university to present socially and politically controversial issues.

Speaker topics selected by SSC are intended to "raise the level of debate" on important issues, according to Bill Oneill, faculty chair of the commission.

South African policies of apartheid was seen by last year's SSC members as an increasing concern. Woods was chosen from the available speakers on the topic.

After drawing increasing fire from the South African government and many white readers of the Daily Dispatch, the newspaper Wood's was editor of, for his editorial attacks on the racial policy of the government, Woods was arrested and punished in 1977 for publishing details of the killing of his friend, Steve Biko, a leader of the Black Consciousness Movement.

Biko died while being interrogated by officers of the State Security Police.

Woods was subjected to banning orders, forbidden to write, to speak publicly, to be quoted in the press or to speak to or be in a room with more than one person at a time.

Three months after his arrest, Woods escaped the country with his wife and five children.

Woods now lives in London where he continues to work as a writer, broadcaster and lecturer on apatheid. He is the author of a biography of Biko, an autobiography titled "Asking For Trouble," and other books.

Wood's books are the basis of a forthcoming motion picture to be produced and directed by Sir Richard Attenborough, who directed the film "Gandhi." Universal Studios is expected to release the film later this year.

Scholarship fund set up in memory of Vander Heyden

by Jill Huppert

Timothy S. Vander Heyden, a 1985 graduate of UW-Stout, died in a two car accident on December 11, 1986, in the town of Tainter.

Vander Heyden was on his way to pick up a deer he had shot during bow season when the accident occurred, according to Bob Christoffel, his friend and Hall Director of South Hall.

Timothy Vander Heyden

Vander Heyden had been a resident of South Hall for four years.

"He was a real prominent person in the hall," Christoffel said. "Everybody knew him."

After receiving his Hotel and Restaurant Management degree from Stout, Vander Heyden managed a Chi Chi's restaurant in Chicago.

In August of last year, he married Julie L. Carmody, a 1986 graduate of Stout.

At the time of his death, Vander Heyden was the restaurant and bar manager of the Sheraton Airport International Hotel in Minneapolis.

Vander Heyden strongly believed in the hotel and restaurant program at Stout, according to his wife, Julie Vander Heyden.

A scholarship fund has been set up in his name in the school district of West Bend, WI, Vander Heyden's hometown.

The scholarship will be presented to a graduating West Bend senior enrolling in the hotel and restaurant program at Stout. There is currently $550 in the fund.

Memorials can be sent to the Columns Scholarship Fund, Julie Vander Heyden, 1509 Pinewood Lane -1, Hudson, WI 54016.

SSA recognizes active students through 'Who's Who' selections

by Gretchen Eke

Ten Stout students have earned a place in the 1987 edition of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges.

This publication reports the individual accomplishments of recipients of the Who's Who Award across the country in 1986-87.

The following students were chosen from Stout: Angela Abrahamson, Cheryl DeBaker, Colleen Hartmon, Sandra Kampen, Julie Koller, Timothy Korsmoe, Robert Neitzke, Paul Nelson, Mark Nickels, and Laura Rogers.

The award recipients were selected by Senators of the Stout Student Association (SSA) out of a pool of 39 applicants.

The Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges program recognizes students for their outstanding scholastic, leadership, and community achievements.

Award recipient Nickels said that the award "recognized people who got involved with a variety of activities, both college related and community related, while also maintaining a high standard of academic performance."

"It makes me feel better about myself," Sandra Kampen, another award recipient, said. "It's nice to be recognized."

> "...Nominated...by faculty or staff member, or they filled out an application
> —Denise Hoeft

Kampen is a resident advisor, SSA senator, and treasurer of Students Understanding Drinking Sensibly. She was involved with the South Hall Executive Board, Campus Facilities and Grounds Committee, and Amnesty International.

According to Denise Hoeft, who chaired the SSA committee that chose the winners, the students were evaluated by a panel of 18 judges; six staff members, six faculty members, and six senators from SSA.

"The applicants were evaluated on the basis of scholarship, leadership, extra-curricular activities, and citizenship," Hoeft said.

"Students were either nominated for the Who's Who award by a faculty or staff member, or they filled out an application to be eligible for the award," Hoeft said.

Besides national recognition, the award winners benefit by the exclusive use of a special reference service for students seeking post-graduate employment or fellowships.

The awards will be officially presented to the recipients in April at the SSA Awards Banquet.

Credit outside school

Some adults may be able to receive college credit for knowledge they have gained in the work place, even though they have been out of school for many years.

Persons interested in exploring the possibility of gaining such credit are invited to an informational workshop from 6:30-8:30 p.m., Wednesday, Feb. 4 in the Badger Room of UW-Stout's Memorial Student Center.

The workshop will be conducted by Gerit Grben from Metropolitan State University in Minneapolis, an institution involved for the past 16 years in a process known as "assessment of prior experience."

Groen said persons who have either gone back to school or who wish to resume their education after a number of years of occupational or avocational experience can have their learning accomplishments evaluated to see if they can be applied to college credit.

"We are validating learning they (adults) have accomplished outside the classroom when it is comparable to college level learning," Groen said, adding that all assessment is done by college faculty members.

Groen stressed that the Feb. 4 meeting at Stout will be simply an informational session.

"It is not a session which will prepare people for assessment of prior learning," Groen said. "It is intended to help people make a decision on whether they will go in that direction."

Women helping

Women who plan to be employed in caregiving agencies that would profit from specialized training in counseling women can now apply for acceptance into an intensive training class, the Women Helping Women — Peer Counseling Training class at UW-Stout.

Applications are being accepted for places in the summer session class which will be held on campus from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., weekdays during July 6-31.

The course will be preceded by a month of self-study during which the trainees will use a study guide to complete assigned readings, a reaction paper and an open book test on the life cycle of women. Students will also be given an introduction to peer counseling practice.

Women Helping Women — Peer Counselor Training is a model national training program which was established in 1975 under National Institute of Mental Health funding to train housewives for employment as paraprofessional counselors in a variety of caregiving agencies.

Since that time, the program has become self-sustaining. Nationally, 200 women from 29 states have completed the training. Many of these work in hospitals, hospice units, community action agencies, mental health clinics, businesses, vocational schools, churches and a variety of other community agencies.

Cost of the eight-week training is $700 and carries 21 Continuing Education units. For more information or to obtain an application blank, phone 232-2644.

The application deadline is April 1.

Judged by users

Design of UW-Stout's new Memorial Student Center has received an award judging architectural projects from the point of view of the general public and those who use and see the building.

The "People's Choice Award" from the Wisconsin Society of Architects and the American Institute of Architects has been presented to the firm which designed the building, Seymour Davis Seymour Architects-Engineers, Inc. of Eau Claire.

Selection was made by a jury of non-architects who spent nearly a month reviewing plans, photos and project descriptions for each entry in the award contest.

The award states it is given in "recognition of excellence in architectural design."

Budget unacceptable

President Reagan's budget recommendations would drastically cut grant and loan programs to college students and, for that reason, is unacceptable, according to Congressman Steve Gunderson.

Gunderson said that he thinks the recommendations should be rejected by Congress.

"Just three months after signing a five-year reauthorization of the Higher Education Act, President Reagan has submitted a budget that calls for cuts of nearly 45 percent in federal student aid programs," Gunderson said.

Gunderson served on the conference committee which worked on the Higher Education Act, determining the guidelines of eligibility for and limits on grants and loans.

The budget which passes through the House and Senate will set the amount available for grants and loans to students of higher education.

"In many instances, the new law expanded these programs," said Gunderson, "and it makes absolutely no sense for the President to go back on this commitment before the ink on his signature is barely dry."

Reagan's budget for the 1988 fiscal year calls for a reduction of more than $3.5 billion in student aid funding. Also, the President proposes total elimination of the College Work-Study program.

Guests need beds

Housing is still needed for the 26 Welsh educators who will be coming to Menomonie during the weeks before and after Easter, April 9-22.

UW-Purple Heart

An organization of veterans wounded in combat has chosen UW-Stout as a 1987 recipient of an $11,000 award to prepare educators to work with youngsters with disabilities.

Stout was one of nine recipients of this year's Military Order of the Purple Heart Award. The Military Order of the Purple Heart has awarded similar grants for the past five years.

The grant, given in conjunction with the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education, will include stipends to be given to education majors.

Financial aid cutback limits pursuit of dreams

President Reagan's proposed 45 percent reduction in financial aid to students to help lessen the federal deficit this year represents a short sighted policy which is blind to America's educational needs.

America has always worked to establish equal opportunity in education as well as in the work place. The proposed reduction in financial aid comes at a time when students need financial aid more than ever before.

The Reagan administration overlooked the question, what will be gained by denying a college education to the college students who can only afford their education through financial aid?

These proposed cuts in financial aid will most hurt the people financial aid was designed to help. Such policy making discriminates against the middle class to the benefit of the upper classes. If the proposed financial aid cuts are approved, the American dream will become an unattainable fantasy for many people.

It is recognized that an American education is costly. On many occasions, American students pay more to receive an education which does not match up with the quality education a student can expect to receive in other nations such as Japan.

America needs to learn how best to make our educational system effective so that America gets a substantial return for its investment in education.

Cutting financial aid is a near term solution that will be detrimental to America in the long run, a subtle form of increasing the taxes paid by the lower income groups if they choose to attend college. This financial aid policy will relegate thousands of Americans to dismal futures because the government never tried making the serious budget cuts which could be made without further restricting the opportunity any one has to pursue the American dream.

Our educational system needs serious restructuring and the financial aid system needs renovation. Those who can least afford to pay should not be asked to pay for the debts which they never created in the first place.

Radical by choice

Seeds of Change

Science may have found a cure for most evils, but it has found no remedy for the worst of them all --the apathy of human beings.
Hellen Keller

Some of my friends have told me that I would have been better appreciated in the 1960's. Back then, radicals are commonplace. There were people with strong heartfelt convictions everywhere you looked, protesting this and demonstrating against that. The 1960's were a time for challenging the old and ushering in the new. You might say that a revolution took place.

Today, in modern civilized America, the radicals have gone on to be what they vowed to each other that they would never be --prosperous professional types that wear three piece suits. Most of the hippies of the 1960's have assimilated quite well into the machine.

There will always be a few radical thinkers in society. Today, however, I can see a trend in America to maintain status quo. "Don't rock the boat or make any waves." Follow their advice lest you should be thought a nonconformist or worse yet, a radical.

Somehow, America has come to think that there is a link between being a radical and not paying full rent upstairs. Most of the radicals that I associate with on a daily basis are not insane. I will admit, however, that to be a radical you have to lose the fear of man, or what man thinks of you. This has a tendency to try off-the-wall things. Behavior of this type may be interpretted as insanity by some.

There are many issues today that need some radical input. The national debt, aid for the freedom fighters in Central America, and civil rights for the unborn are but a few of them. Everyone has an opinion on each issue (some feel more than others). The American government's policy on each issue reflects how much "feeling" made it from the minds of America to the minds of the government.

If you disagree with current policy on any issue, you have avenues for action. Policy can be changed. The incumbant doesn't have to be re-elected. If you choose not to use your right to vote and speak out, then you have no right to grumble and complain. If you are looking for some one to blame, blame yourself if you didn't vote to put someone better into office.

By the way a radical by dictionary definition is a conservative (radical equals basic or root).

One issue in particular sticks out in my mind Pro-life vs. Pro-kill. There are many pro-life students here at Stout. On January 22nd however, only a few that would stand up and be counted. Most of the pro-life supporters on this campus didn't even bother to stop by the booth in the Student Center to give the people who were there some support or encouragement.

I hear the grumbling and complaining all week before, "Abortion is a crime," Then they would say, " We've got to stop this holocaust." Well that is all I hear out of them, a lot of grumbling and complaining to the wrong people. NO action, just a lot of talk. Well, talk is cheap, babies' lives aren't.

It all boils down to apathy. When people care they act. When people don't care, they ignore.

Since the majority of my readers are the Christians on this campus, I shall direct the brunt of this column to their shoulders.
Christians:

Do your friends even know what your convictions are?

Have you ever prayed that God would move you on behalf of the unborn?

Is pro-life literature readily available from you for those who would want it?

If you answered "no" to any of the above questions, ask yourself this. If not, why not?

Don't feel condemned, just convicted. Repent and ask for forgiveness. Then "rise up for the service of our king. Don't be a wimp, be a champion!!!

Christians, don't even forget that you are an ambassador for the kingdom of God. Others will judge Christianity by your words and deeds, or lack of them.

So, rise up! Know your God. Do exploits. Be a champion and a mighty warrior against the deeds of darkness. Take joy in the fact that God has called and chosen YOU not Paul or Moses to be the voice of hope and direction to this lost and apostate generation.

Subject: Comment on public speaking/ activities in the Menomonie Theatre Guild

by Karen M. Heagle

Noel Falkofske, a speech professor at this university, is also a dedicated technician in the Menomonie Theatre Guild (MTG) on a regular basis. He has even appeared in many of MTG's stage productions.

Falkofske serves as the speech department's director of speech improvement. He has worked on this campus since 1962. For six years he served as chairman of the department, and was originally in charge of the theatre program on campus.

For the past 15 years, Falkofske has been taking the responsibility for one or two plays per year. For MTG's current play, Hello Dolly, he is the sound chairperson (sound effects, etc.) and helps in several other technical crews involved in the show's production.

Falkofske grew up in Elsworth, Wis., and graduated from UW-River Falls with a degree in speech concentrating in theatre. He then served in the U.S. Army before attending graduate school at Kent State University in Ohio. Falkofske attended schools in Minnesota and Oregon before taking his present job.

STOUTONIA: DO YOU THINK PEOPLE ARE HESITANT TO REGISTER FOR PUBLIC SPEAKING COURSES?

FALKOFSKE: Sure. Most people, if they are normal, have a little bit of fear about the formal public speaking situation. Usually that's based on previous experience with a less-than-happy or fun occasion speaking in the past. However, I hope my classes are fun, fairly informal, and stress enthusiasm and sharing, rather than the 1930's LBJ style of debate.

STOUTONIA: DO YOU FIND THAT MOST OF YOUR STUDENTS SUCCEED IN THE COURSE?

FALKOFSKE: I think that almost everyone in the classes I've had throughout the years succeeds in improving in a variety of ways. Sometimes the improvement is in overall delivery skills, or just getting more comfortable; in other cases, it is getting more organized. I think speaking is like any skill--swimming, driving; it takes practice. A little bit of thought and plan-

To Gene Emahiser: I am pleased to hear you fear for my soul in your last writing in The Seeds of Change, "The Leading Cause of Death."

I will agree that abortion is a very terrible and evil act. At the same time, I think that in your writing, you have failed to look at the whole picture.

Yes, money is the root of all evil, but not all evil can be blamed on money alone. It is only a part of the overall picture one must look at when addressing this problem.

You have hit an important point in your writing about money. People do things they would not normally do, merely for the financial reward. Because they get paid for it, they think it is okay. But you have to look at the reason why this person would do such a thing. Obviously, it is because they have not grown and matured spiritually to the point of saying, "No, this is not right." Yet you continually ask them why they don't understand that what they are doing is wrong.

I say it is because of the way they grew up. You have to put yourself in a 16-year-old girl's shoes and look at the reasons why she or any other woman would do such a thing. That must be considered when addressing this problem.

If abortion was made illegal tomorrow, abortions would still be happening. It would just be an extreme form of denial of the problem.

The only positive aspect to legal abortion is that at least the mother of the child is in a clean and relatively safe place. Therefore, her life is not endangered by bad medicine.

Also, you must look at the reasons why it is right to have an abortion. It may not be "right", but instead "permitted" in instances such as rape and incest.

What I am saying is to take the realistic approach to looking at a problem and THINK about it before you write down one word! Just as I did before I wrote this letter.

May the love and grace of God be with you, Gene.

Sincerely,
Carl Selkey

CAMPUS SLANT/ What do you think about having 3 Stout students on the city council?

By Brian Kraimer

Steve Schrank,
Resident,

I think it is a good idea to have some students on the city council. One problem I see in this town is the attitude toward students; it seems like everyone is against the students. I think having students on the city council would be a good way to turn this attitude around.

Agnes Krause,
Resident,

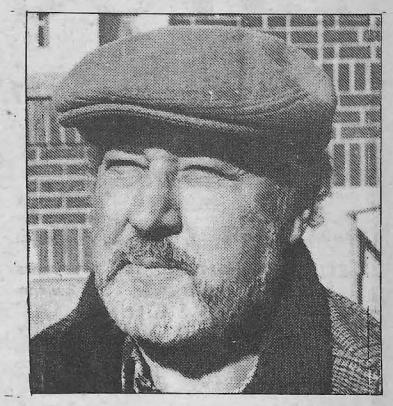
I can see no reason why they cannot run for the city council, if they are bright enough and qualified enough. I do not think you can qualify a person by youth or age.

Eileen Stark,
Resident,

No, it really does not matter if there are students on the city council, but if they are on the city council they should plan to stay here or live here. If they do not plan on staying here they should not be allowed to be on the city council.

Lorna Rinck,
Resident,

I am not too pleased with the way things have been connected with the Stout Student Association. I think having three Stout Students on the city council is a little heavy for the total number on the UW-Stout Campus.



Robert Wurtz,
Professor of Education,

I think it is good for students or young people to be interested in politics and actively participate in them. It is good that the students are running for the city council, it gives the voters the choice to express their opinions and reflect them at the polling place.

Mad Monday

Fine Line

Some Monday in the spring, dozens of Mondays ago, I passed through the doors heading out of Applied Arts, my favorite building.

I was hopping down the steps two feet at a time; heavens, it was great to be a kid again. Birds, spring air, warm, bright sunlight, it was all right where it belonged.

Just then, sirens started to whine in the distance, loudly; louder and more eerie than necessary for a monthly warning drill. The canal to my ear drum was flooded with the eerie sound. It was a flood in the eerie canal. (a pun for Kevin K.).

The coldest chill passed through my bones, freezing my feet and lungs. Frost passed out of my mouth for breath. THIS IS NOT A DRILL... Monday, lunch, spring, 1985, and the earth were all being cancelled. I knew that the mad teaparty had started. MAD, like in Mutally Assured Destruction. (This is a real term, a concept now in place, and it's ready for you.)

I was not ready for it.

I froze on the sidewalk for a minute, realizing in the most horrible of daydreams, the next hour or two. In a flash, (a lesser pun for myself,) the whole imaginary world spun past.

My first reaction was reassuring, and probably the theme herein: It was a damn nice place, generally, and I was going to miss it. It was overrun with too many innocent people who were about to catch hell from all sides, and I was going to miss them. Even the ones I'm not really crazy about.

I was on my way to give my money to the art store in exchange for raw materials to make some relics and artifacts for the future. Scrap that idea, I thought, I probably won't use what I've got now the way things look.

All the people I feel closest to summoned themselves up like a passenger train before my eyes, each with the movie that recalled itself to me, and told the story of each friendship. All the movies were the best, most poignant ever seen.

I was not ready to say goodbye to everything and everyone. It was the most awful feeling. The chicken coop of the world was being raided for all it was worth by the big weazels.

Starting to walk forward, for lack of a better choice, I walked like a condemned, yet (mostly) innocent convict, reviewing the situation that lead to this execution.

Scientists and mathmeticians and physicists began tinkering with an atom and broke it into pieces. This made a big mess, which they considered a hugely successful breakthrough. (My crime was being alive after that discovery.)

Eventually, collecting these huge mess-making gadgets became the arms race, which is the opposite of a foot race. A foot race is where a number of people run someplace, somebody wins and gets out of breath, but feels pretty good. Everybody else doesn't win, gets out of breath, and feels second, or tenth or whatever.

An arms race is where a handful of people run backwards as fast as possible, with their heads up their butts, nobody wins if somebody comes in first, and everybody gets out of breath forever unless the racers all give up.

So I was saddened, and furious that the War to End All Wars had started. No one asked me if I wanted it. Has anyone ever asked you, has there ever been a world-wide popular vote: Would you like to see the Earth and everyone on it burned to a crisp, then buried by twenty winters worth of poisonous snow? Choose one: Yes.
No.

I didn't think so.

So... a brief letter to Pres. Reagan:

Dear Mr. President, Knock it off. I mean it, just cut the crap. You nutty old cowboy moviestar, you know what I mean. Drop your guns, reach for the sky. We know your kind, as soon as the shootin' starts, you'll be kickin' up dust on the old trail, gettin' the hell outta Dodge. You said it yourself, you can run but you can't hide. Darn tootin, partner.

The townspeople want you to call off the showdown.

ning can make improvements. Good attitude, good cheer and enthusiasm help, too.

STOUTONIA: WHAT IS IT LIKE TO WORK SIDE BY SIDE WITH YOUR WIFE?
FALKOFSKE: We met many years ago at Stout and got married. We've worked on the plays since that time, and we've gotten along well. We argue and discuss in a fairly civilized manner most of the time as to the style and design, and method of producing a play. In addition to working on plays together, we've been pretty close colleagues, sharing in the preparation of assignments, and methods of grading.

When we first met, another member of the speech department called us "the Bobbsey Twins" because we were always working on plays and classes, which has pretty much held true through today.

STOUTONIA: WHAT MOTIVATES YOU TO GET INVOLVED WITH MTG?
FALKOFSKE: Well, because I'm married to a wild, wild woman who directs plays for MTG, I've been extremely involved with the plays she's directing, doing scene design, and occasionally props. Even when I'm a little tired and would rather stay home, she reminds me there are things to be done and she encourages me to get out and get moving. Through all of the years I've been at Stout, I've been interested in plays.

A group of folks act together and have a good time presenting a play. For example, in this community, there is a wide variety of individuals including Stout students and faculty as well as farmers, doctors, businessmen, housewives and even children. The big attraction has been using and developing the skills that exist in the community to put together a pretty darn good production that is enjoyed and received quite well.

STOUTONIA: WHEN DID YOU BECOME INTERESTED IN THEATRE?
FALKOFSKE: I think at a very, very early age--in first grade I had my first starring role where I played a radio inside a cardboard box for a program at a one-room rural school. I was quite involved with little programs. In 5th grade, I made a marionette theatre for a Christmas program.

STOUTONIA: WHAT DO YOU SEE IN YOUR FUTURE?
FALKOFSKE: My future plans are to slow down a little. Sometimes I may be a little too busy too many days of the year, making theatre productions. I see myself continuing in much the same capacity. STOUTONIA: IS THERE ANYTHING YOU WOULD LIKE TO ADD?

FALKOFSKE: Well, I do have two little babies who are now grown up and attending Stout; Sara is on a split program, and Jim is a full-time student. So they are very much a part of Stout along with Mom and Dad.

Date resume

Bottom Line

"Something always fires the light that gets in your eyes."--Neil Peart

Yes, it's true. That attractive person near you is looking for a date. They say that a good resume is the best way to get an interview.

The first thing we seniors put on our resumes is our name in big, bold letters. Nicknames are preferred on date resumes in order to keep them informal. I'd head mine off with the nickname "DICK".

Next we should put our phone number. This is just in case the nickname is all the reader cares to know.

Now comes what is perhaps the most difficult part of a resume. We must figure out an OBJECTIVE and carefully word it so the reader won't discover what we're really after.

OBJECTIVE: To engage in a meaningful relationship that will consume the money that is burning a hole in my pocket uptown every night.

The placement office suggests that you keep your objective to one line. Mine is longer because I'd rather have a date who can appreciate a dangling participle.

Next you should write your EDUCATION. List all the past love affairs that made you look forward to getting up in the morning before they wound up making you hate life.

EDUCATION: Dated the same person all through high school and always felt I was missing out on something. I've since learned otherwise.

Education isn't as important as EXPERIENCE on the date resume. It's not the age; it's the mileage. This becomes the part of the resume where many people choose dishonesty over drastic over-qualification.

EXPERIENCE: None.

The PERSONAL section may also require a bit of doctoring. Things like weight are subject to change anyway, right?

PERSONAL: I am 5'5" tall and weigh 135 pounds. I lift weights, drink heavily, and practice chivalry--though not necessarily in that order.

The proper resume will get you that all-important one-on-one discussion. Any guy will tell you that he always calls back a date who gives a good interview.

Tuesday evening at John Furlong Gallery Judy Onofrio presented slides of her work from the past 10 years, in addition to answering questions concerning her current work. Ten years ago Onofrio presented a show at Furlong. Her style has evolved much since then. Her show will run through Feb. 6.

by Jef Maynard

Long, long ago, in a gallery far, far away, Judy Onofrio installed a piece of soft sculpture called, "I don't think carrots are very erotic because they are hard and you have to peel them." Lately, she has been setting spectacular fires.

It has been ten years since she had an exhibition at Stout. Tuesday evening Onofrio described the route, the evolution of her artwork from that show to the present exhibition hanging in Furlong Gallery.

Some of the pieces she described, during her slide presentation took very unexpected forms. In a story that amused the audience, Onofrio showed slides of plexiglass display boxes mounted on gallery walls. Inside the boxes were soft fabric mats that looked like colored cotton batting from a quilt.

She explained that she collected "dryer lint for about five years," which "became a visual diary." The display cases were like soft geological cross-sections showing the brief existences of various people.

"Rochester is like Medical City," she said. When she exhibited the pieces there, "they took on the character of medical displays," which she remembered from a childhood in Washinton, D. C. She would go and look at museum displays of "medical curiosities."

> "dryer lint.... became a visual diary
> —Judy Onofrio"

Another step in the evolution of this creative, self-taught artist was based on early workings in ceramics. Taking a form resembling wall plaques used as trophies, she began a series of heart-shaped ceramic pieces, which she used in repetition on large wall areas.

Having run the needed course of whole heart pieces, she began to cut the pieces in half, which no one would describe as a half-hearted effort.

"I drive alot," she mentioned in prelude to another type of work, "so I'm always looking around along the roads."

Onofrio is a collector, dishes, wood, kitsch, various junk, "everything." She also collected a few highway posts. "I like the ones in Wisconsin," she said, "they're squatty wooden things, black and white with small marble reflectors on them.

The work displayed on the slides was a little corral, of sorts, made from highway posts changed together in a rectangle on a retangular patch of astro-turf. Zoned in by the fence, were ceramic replicas of highway posts in more organic states of flux. Some of the ceramic posts were trying to sneak out under the chains.

Another form her work has taken resembles corn cribs, those too, in various states of decay or delapidation. This interest lead to several large lathe and plaster-like wall construction pieces. Later these pieces became fully enclosed environments. Light passing between the lathe pieces caused dramatic ribbed shadow effects.

This evolving construction process became entwined with an interest in the effects of fire, first on ceramic pieces, then on constructed installations.

One favorite restaurant of Onofrio's in Rochester burned during a weekend away. "When I returned, it was flat," she said. "It was strange that something that seemed to be solid and forever was no longer there...it was kind of questioning (what's forever?)"

Onofrio began testing the effects of fire, "I wanted to burn some stuff," she laughed, "having always been something of a pyromaniac." At one ceramics workshop, she built a large frame construction filled with a summer's collection of "garage sale ceramics."

While the three other speakers, demonstrated at the wheel, "I set fire to this huge outdoor piece. I don't what the organizers really expected." In additon to her other works, she has been designing, building and burning large wood constructions since.

Forensic team grows with students

by J.M. Dauplaise

The thought of speaking in front of a group, much less actually doing it, strikes fear into the hearts of many. There are, however, at Stout, a dedicated few who have overcome the characteristic sweaty palmed, knock-kneed signs which frequently accompany public speaking. To them, speaking is a challenge. By meeting this challenge a strong sense of personal accomplishment is achieved.

Mike Nicolai, the forensics team coach, is obviously proud of the team. The team has been in three tournaments already this year. Last weekend a novice forensic tourney was held in which the competition was limited to students in their first two years of competition. U.W. Stout placed third overall. Approximately 200 competitors from fourteen teams participated.

Personal bests in the tourney included a first for Sandra Lindholm in prose interpretation, a second in poetry interpretation, and a second in informative speaking. Cheryl Martens won second place in persuasive speaking. Michel Sanderson placed fourth in poetry, and Noelle Hanney was fifth in the poetry division.

Nicolai considers the novice tourney to be "really representative of what the Stout squad can do." Ordinarily the team competes mostly against juniors and seniors.

Nicolai considers this season to be a rebuilding year for the team. Several senior team members were lost as a result of graduation. Nicolai feels this will nonetheless be a successful year for the team. "We're not into hardware collecting," said Nicolai.

Nicolai is very responsive to the needs of his team. "There are no auditions or tryouts," said Nicolai, "you can get out of it exactly what you want to put into it."

Team members are allowed to choose their own level of commitment to the team. Frequently schedule conflicts and other commitments can keep an individual from participating in such extra-curricular activities. Nicolai's more casual approach allows people who would not ordinarily be able to find time to participate in forensics to do so. Team members may participate in as many or as few meets as they choose to.

Because there are no directly speech oriented majors at Stout, Nicolai believes his team members "go above and beyond" what the school and their majors already demand of them.

Nicolai also pointed out the high level of competition which the team faces. Many of the nation's top forensics teams from mid and large sized schools are found in the region in which Stout competes. This creates some stiff, but challenging competition. He compared the competition which his squad faces to the Bluedevil football team being pitted against "outstanding teams like Miami, Penn State, and Oklahoma."

Referring to Stout's commendable third placing in the recent novice forensic tourney, Nicolai optimistically commented that the outcome "suggests what the future looks like for the next couple years."

Obviously, the faith Nicolai has in his team, combined with their talents, the forensics team will have a successful season which they'll be proud of. The team will travel to Anoka February third for their next meet.

Local bands are alive and rockin'

by Stephanie Weiss

"There are people in Menomonie and students who don't know about the bands here, " said DCver's Eric Bretl, "some of my friends don't even know that there are bands here...and I am in one of them."

This seems to be the problem with a lot of things around UW-Stout. Students complain that there is nothing to do but drink and get drunk.

What they don't know is that they don't have to party all the time. There are free performances at the Pawn Live on weekends, there are student art exhibits in the Applied Arts Gallery and outside exhibits held at the J. Furlong Gallery, there are free movies shown in the Great Hall and, oh yeah, there are even some real live bands.

This is the first of two articles on the local music scene to convince all you kids out there in "Barland" that Menomonie has more to offer than just bars. The first of these articles will include the bands DCver, The Slant and the Curbfeelers. The second article, coming out next Thursday, will include Race, The Last Minute and The Planktons.

The Curbfeelers

"The Curbfeelers were real alive last year," said lead vocalist, Tracy Lee Landis, "and living love all last year."

Since last year, though, the Curbfeelers have run into a bit of a problem. The three member band's bass guitarist, Doug Ness, graduated last December.

Despite this vacancy, the blues-rock band isn't dead, just temporarily out-of-order. To help fill Ness' place, in the mean time, Landis has begun to pick up the bass guitar. "I was inspired by Slaveraider's bass player, LaTisha," said Landis. The Curbfeelers still have a drummer, "he's my man," said Landis, "Paul Quick."

The Curbfeelers hope to bring in Johnathon Graham, who has been jamming with them recently, as a regular member. "He's extremely good," said Landis, "a real hot guitar player."

Scrawled in the pavement by 3rd floor Home Ec is the band's odd name. "The Curbfeelers was Ness' brainchild," said Landis, "he left me the name when he graduated...it's a totally blues-rock sounding name."

Before Ness graduated, he and Landis were doing vocals. "I did the Janis (Joplin) and he (Ness) did the Morrison," said Landis. Since Ness' graduation Landis has rewritten some of the songs the band does, "I femalized them," said Landis.

Despite being short a bass player, the Curbfeelers plan to live and love on, because as Landis says, "It's damn fun to do music."

DCver

"We don't want to be a tutti-frutti band," said DCver's drummer, Eric Bretl, "we don't want any pretty singing up front...we want to rock and roll!"

Made up of five guys and one lady, DCver has been rockin' and rollin' for about three years. Bass guitarist Jef Maynard, guitarist Todd last-name-witheld-upon-request, and Eric Bretl have been together since the start. Mary Gunderman on keys and lead vocals man, Andy Leverenz, have been with the band about two years. The band's latest addition, guitarist Chris Snow, has been playing with DCver for a bit over a year.

Being in a band, they all agree, can be a good time, but it isn't all that easy. "It's a 20-hour-a-week part-time job," said Todd, "and you get paid about a dollar an hour." "We are definitely not doing it for the money," added Bretl, "you make just enough to spend for the next night."

The fact that DCver isn't getting rich doesn't matter all that much. To this band, whoever said, "he who dies with the most toys wins," wasn't necessarily right.

Bretl, who's working on a degree in H and R said, "I just want to rock-n-roll, as long as I can make enough to eat." Todd and Snow agreed with Bretl and laughed when he suggested "opening a restaurant if we fail in rock and roll."

> "It's a 20-hour a-week part time job"

Even with a lively crowd of 200-300 people at their shows, DCver gets a bit frustrated with the students lack of interest in the local bands and in outside bands. "A lot of people come downtown with $2," said Snow, "and paying $1 seems like a lot to see a band, but you pay $4 or $5 just to get into some bars in the Cities."

"There are people here who wouldn't know talent if it bit them on the ass," said Bretl, "there are these big bands...killer bands...playing in the Great Hall and what do you get? 200 people out of 8,000...these shows are free, all you have to do is walk in!"

Leverenz, Todd and Gunderman of DCver have all picked up the pen and written their own lyrics and music. The band plays some heavy hitting music from Bon Jovi and Cheap Trick and even some Creedence Clearwater Revival classics. "There's got to be rock in every song," said Bretl, explaining their choices in music.

DCver doesn't play their music in the same way other bands do. "There is a lot of impromptu value in our songs," said Snow, "it keeps it interesting." "We spice up some of the songs we learn," said Todd. "Yeah," added Bretl, "and when we do, they are DCverized."

The band, who cut a demo tape this summer, has played quite a bit in Menomonie and the surrounding area, as well at Ryan's Corner in St. Paul as an opening act for Obsession. They hope to do more gigs outside the Menomonie area to gain more experience and get more exposure. "Rockin' and rollin' and having a good time," said Bretl, "that's what we want to do."

The Slant

Early last January, The Slant band had their first gig. "We started out as a variety band," said former vocalist, Christa Sanicola, "our first gig was a wedding, you know, polkas and that stuff."

The Slant is made up of bass guitarist Hagen Gunderson, drummer Kevin Jacobsennn, guitarist Shaun O'Mera, guitarist Dale Brown and new front vocalist Cheri Carmody.

Since their start as a "variety band" two years ago, The Slant has angled more toward Top 40 hits and does some of their own material, mostly written by O'Mera.

"We practiced 7 days a week, 6 hours a day if we weren't playing a gig," said Sanicola, "we were all determined to make it."

All of the band's hard work has just begun to pay off. Though a young band, The Slant is enjoying quite a bit of attention.

They signed with the Bobby Lee Agency in May 1986. Their agent, Ken Harris, has recently taken over as their personal manager. "As a manager, I give the band exclusive direction," said Harris, "on anything from stage attire to how to use their talent to their best ability."

The band cut it's first demo in December 1985. "Like any average band, The Slant cut the demo in the basement," said Sanicola, "and it sounded terrible so we hired a professional sound man and that worked a lot better...The Slant is not a basement band."

They also cut two live demos and were contacted by a company in Eau Claire to do a promotional video.

At this writing, The Slant is on a 12 week tour. They will be performing in Iowa, Illinois, Michigan, Nevada and Colorado in "top night clubs" and then heading back to Wisconsin.

Once a band goes on the road, lifestyles change. "Travelling can be fun," admitted Sanicola, "but it gets real tiring...it's tough." with each move the band takes, from buying equipment to getting another gig "our dreams just keep getting bigger," said Sanicola, "but you have to take it one step at a time."

The band members try to do different things at their shows to keep their audience from getting bored. Audience participation is a part of The Slant's shows, whether it's just hand clapping or going out into the audience and having them sing along."

The Slant "changes sets constantly," said Sanicola, "they might start one song with just the drummer and walk on piece by piece...it's like on of those stews where you just mix in all the stuff and all of the sudden you have a song."

"They have a real bright future," said Harris, "they are hard workers and most of all have a great attitude and that's what it takes to keep a band together."

Regardless of any band's dream's, whether to make it big or just to play for fun, there's a few things Sanicola said that seem to remain true for them all. "Each band has it's own personality...try to do your best because your dreams depend on it," said Sanicola, "and when you are on the stage, you're home."

All of these bands have worked hard to get where they are. Next time you are thinking of going to the bars to hang one on, how about checking out where the bands will be and enjoying a bit of live music, too? Stay tuned for next week's article on Race, The Last Minute and The Planktons.

You Aren't What You Eat

Campus Cuisine

I have formed an incredible phobia along with the formation of my dietetics degree. I am not sure if it is from the alcohol fumes I inhaled in organic chemistry or the urine we experimented with in biochemistry, but I do know that in my phobia, people are watching me.

When you are studying to be a dietitian people watch you to see what you are eating. They stare at your tray in the Union, tearing apart the food items you selected, categorizing them into the four basic food groups right in front of your eyes. You can hear the crowd groan in agony when they scope in on that one chocolate chip cookie.

Yes, I have failed my career as a dietitian, I chose the cookie for dessert instead of a shiny apple.

I dread the thought of going to the grocery store by myself because I am afraid people will see me buying foods other than those located in the produce section. When I need to buy food, I usually end up begging my roommates to go with me so I can pretend the box of Twinkies and the Doritos belong to them.

I am fairly sure that part of the criteria for being a dietitian is never to have eaten anything developed in the Hostess laboratories or in the Frito Lay chemical company.

I am almost embarassed to expose my carcass in public. Anyone in dietetics should be the epitome of slimness. I however, have the body of a normal person. I could even pass for fashion merchie. Many people have confused me with someone who knows how to dress.

This week I am rebelling by printing three of my favorite high calorie recipes. I assure you they taste great. Do not worry about what to do with the planned-overs, once you gain momentum, you can eat the whole recipe.

Twix Candy Bars

1 cup flour
1/2 cup pwd. sugar
1/2 cup margarine
1 Tbsp. evaporated milk

Combine in 9 x 13-inch pan and bake for 10-12 minutes.
1 pkg. caramels
1/2 cup margarine
1/4 cup evaporated milk
1 cup pwd. sugar, sifted

Melt caramels with margarine and milk in double boiler. Blend in powdered sugar. Spread over baked crust and chill.
6 oz. chocolate chips
3 Tbsp. margarine
chopped pecans, optional

Melt chocolate and margarine in double boiler and spread on top of bars. Sprinkle with chopped pecans.

College Caramel Rolls

2 loaves frozen bread dough
1 cup brown sugar
1 stick margarine
4 Tbsp. milk
1 pkg. vanilla pie filling (not instant)

Let dough stand overnight in a warm place. The next morning mix the above ingredients, except for the bread and pour into a greased 9 x 13-inch pan. Cut the bread dough into 1-inch balls and place over the caramel mixture. Bake in a 350-degree oven until bread is done. Remove from oven and let stand for 5 minutes. Invert rolls on to an aluminum-lined cookie sheet and serve hot.

Salmon Supper

3 Tbsp. chopped onion
1/3 cup chopped green pepper
3 Tbsp. fat
1 tsp. salt
1/4 cup flour
1 can cream of celery or mushroom soup
1 & 1/2 cups milk
1 7 oz. can salmon or tuna
1 cup cooked peas
1 Tbsp. lemon juice

Heat oven to 450-degrees. Sautee onion and pepper in fat until onion is golden. Blend in salt and flour. Gradually stir in soup and milk. Bring to a boil. Boil 1 minute. Add flaked salmon or tuna, peas, and lemon juice. Pour into oblong dish 11 x 7-inch. Top with your favorite recipe for baking powder biscuits. Bake 10-12 minutes or until biscuits are done.

James 'Unk' Falkofske

He's come back to haunt us

Spontaneous Combustion

Jim Morrison lives... "127 FASCINATION," labeled the strongbox that held various unpublished poems, song lyrics, and notes of the late, great Jim Morrison. The newest in a long trail of material by the former leader of the Doors was uncovered in San Francisco.

Many of the materials in the latest find are written in pencil on yellow pad paper. Included in "127" are Morrison's last writings, completed while he was in Paris just before his death. Also found are unpublished songs and notebooks from Morrison's high school days, and the original manuscript for "The Lords and the New Creatures" (the first commercially published book of poetry by Morrison).

Add to this the significant find of a 43-page poem entitled "An American Night," and the legend of Jim Morrison grows more twisted and tangled.

Morrison died July 3, 1971 of an apparent drug overdose. The official cause of death was recorded as a heart attack. His present common-law wife, Pamela Courson, then returned to America with the "127" strongbox. She died of a heroin overdose in 1974. Before her death, she had given the box (for safe keeping) to a boyfriend. The boyfriend has evidently disappeared, but not before selling the "127" trunk and its contents to a businessman named Grant Jacobs and an unnamed partner.

The current owners are now in negotiation with Villard/Random House to offer the writings for "around $200,000."

As usual, now that a large amount of money is involved, everyone's hoppin' pissed. The parents of Pamela Courson are not convinced that the boyfriend had legal ownership of the box. As their attorney Leornard Korobkin states, "Did she give it to him to keep, or did she give it to him to own? Those are two different concepts."

An attorney for the Doors is asking questions as well. There is a question as to whether the material is musical in nature, in which it would belong to the group of which Morrison was a partner, or whether the material is strictly poetical, in which it would have Morrison's sole ownership.

Morrison's parents also have a vested interest in the deal and are pursuing legal paths to protect their interests.

All of these individuals believe in the American way. They are going to court about it. Deliberations may take years in a matter that was started over a decade and a half ago. In the meantime, no one is saying much. Worst yet, no one is publishing the "long-lost" writings of Jim Morrison. The reason is simple, since no one is sure who owns them, anyone else publishing them would set themselves up for a multimillion dollar lawsuit. Who loses? Simple. We do.

In album news, Bruce Springsteen's live album is still at the top of the record charts. Closely behind it is "The Way It Is" by Bruce Hornsby and the Range. Finally, in the number three position is Boston with "Third Stage."

Dressed for Success

One Point Perspective

It was Friday night, late; bar time in Menomonie. We sat in the freezing car (after we remembered where we'd parked it) contemplating which party we should go to. Suddenly, I was in a beer-filled basement surrounded by a drunken crowd, which did nothing to ease my own lack of sobriety at the time.

"I'm getting to old for this Lis," I said.

"Bullshit, Dauplaise, let's get a beer."

The guy behind the bar was only too happy to fill our glasses. He even refused our money, insisting that we indulge his chivalrous nature. Since we had already spent roughly thirty-five dollars between us, we graciously accepted his offering.

As I was contemplating a black speck floating in my plastic cup, a very tall guy tapped me on the shoulder.

"Hey, what's your major?" he shouted, his highly sophisticated vocabulary exuding an aristocratic air.

"Studio Art," I replied, indulging his marked intellectual curiosity.

"You don't look like one," he said, wiping foam off his chin.

The next morning I woke with a splitting headache wondering just exactly what an art major looks like. Nobody would be one at all if they looked or felt the way I did when I woke up Saturday.

I wondered exactly how one determined a person's major based solely on personal appearance. What does an H&R major look like? Or a Fashion Merchandising major, or Applied Math? Did they look that way in high school? What about people who change majors? Are they prime candidates for plastic surgery, hair transplants and a new wardrobe?

As anyone at Stout knows, there are certain stereotypes which classify the variety of fields of study offered here. But realistically speaking, if all art majors had shaved heads, wore funny shoes, ate only tofu, and existed in a constant state of drug induced euphoria, wouldn't this be reflected in Menomonie's economy?

We would see a rash of barbers swarming on the town, reaching out to the enormous supply of heads in need of shaving. Specialty footwear stores would spring up on every corner. Don's would be forced to change the store's name to Health-Mart, and Menomonie's Mafia connections would need to be strengthened and supplemented to cater to the enormous demand for contraband substances.

Until all of these events come to pass, I will adhere to my belief that the stereotype cast upon art majors is, in most cases, not only false but preposterous.

I also realize that not all H&R majors have strong fetishes involving chef's hats and spatulas, and that the majority of women in Fashion Merchandising are not blonde, make-up laden, brainless but flawlessly dressed, and came here as a springboard to their modeling careers. This is to say nothing of what I've heard about the guys in the program.

Maybe the reason the great sociologist at the party could not accept my appearance in relation to my major was that Art was not my original major. I've often wondered, in my own struggle to choose a path in life, how other people go about choosing theirs. How do I know if I'm right?

I took a test my senior year in high school which was supposed to reveal my talents to me, while steering me in the right occupational direction. The test consisted of choosing between two given activities. It went something like this:

1. I would most prefer to:
A) fix broken hamster exercise wheels.
B) translate War and Peace into Portuguese.
2. I like it best when:
A) I lock myself in dark refrigerators for hours and hours.
B) My model airplane glue makes me dizzy and impairs my speech.

From such introspective contemplation, I was given a computer generated printout of occupations most suited to my interests. Among them were such appealing selections as managing a YWCA and being a telephone operator. I was about as excited to see the computer's analysis of my untapped potential as I was when my father reposessed my car for the winter.

I often wonder what compells people to choose their major. Do people really wake up one day, firmly convinced that their sole niche in life is to draft floor plans for industrial facilities? What about gynecologists? Sure, there's money in it, but there's money in neurosurgery too. Personally, I get a little nauseated removing a splinter from my own foot. If there is one thing I do know, is that medicine was not, is not, and never will be my calling.

If you are like many other people, and are uncertain which field of study best suits you, you're in luck. For the low, low price of only $1.00, and the inclusion of a self addressed stamped envelope, I will personally select for you the major and area of concentration which you should pursue. For an additional fifty cents I will also include your best choice for a minor.

The method of career planning which I will use to arrive at the choice which is right for you is a time honored method which incorporates no logic, insight or deference to your skills or interests. It is, however, a very popular method of aiming students toward particular fields of study. It is the method employed by guidance counselors across America.

Cagers win two of three conference bouts

by Paul Emerson

"Two out of three ain't bad...," a title to a song, can also be used to describe the past week's action for the UW-Stout men's basketball team. The Blue Devils first edged UW-La Crosse on January 20, 61-58; then lost a big one to UW-Stevens Point last Friday, 64-52 before rebounding to wallop UW-Oshkosh the following night, 77-61. All three games were played at the Johnson Fieldhouse.

In the victory over La Crosse, Stout squandered an 11 point lead at one point and needed a miraculous finish to defeat the Indians in the final minute.

La Crosse battled back late in the second half to tie the game at the 3:36 mark, 51-51. After Stout missed four free throws, the Indians took their first lead of the game, 53-51, with 3:00 to go.

La Crosse hit a 3-point field goal with 58 seconds left to make it 58-55, La Crosse. Tom Gomolak then hit two big free throws to bring Stout within one with 49 seconds left in regulation.

Then after a time out, Brian Ellingson stole an inbounds pass by La Crosse and made the layup to put the Blue Devils back on top, 59-58. After a missed shot by the Indians, Gomolak was fouled going for the rebound and calmly made both ends of the bonus to ice the win, 61-58.

Brian Ellingson led the Blue Devils in scoring with 15 points, followed by David Sandstrom with 12 and Gomolak with 10.

Stout shot 51 percent from the floor (23 of 45) and was 10 of 16 from the line for 62 percent. Stout outrebounded the Indians, 27-19.

For La Crosse Bob Zenz poured in 20 points while Eric Chudzik chipped in 16. The Indians blistered the nets in the second half, hitting 79 percent of their shots from the floor to end up at 52 percent (27 of 48) for the game.

Another statistic that proves La Crosse had hot outside shooting was that the Indians had no free throw attempts for the game.

Stout faced perhaps its biggest challenge of the season this far last Friday when they hosted the NAIA's 8th-ranked team, the UW-Stevens Point Pointers.

Right from the start, one could feel the tension in the air and see it in the play of the Blue Devils. "We were too uptight before the game, and then they [Stevens Point] came out and hit everything they put up," Stout Head Coach Dwain Mintz said.

After being down by eight points at the half, 34-26, the Blue Devils fought their way back to within one at 38-37 with 14:00 minutes to go.

But from there it was all down hill as Stout's next five possessions netted 4 turnovers and 0 points.

Mintz made no excuses but stated that, "I'm really looking forward to getting another shot at them, even if it is on the road."

> "We played a lot more aggressive this game
> —Coach Mintz"

Luther Forrest led the Blue Devils in the scoring column with 15 points while Ron Hunter had 10 and was the only other Blue Devil in double figures.

Tim Naegli had 20 points to lead the Pointers. Todd Christianson added 16. Point shot 56 percent from the floor, 26 of 46, and was 7 of 9 from the line for 87 percent.

The last time the Stout lost, they followed it up with an impressive showing the next time out. Such was the case Saturday night against the UW-Oshkosh Titans.

Stout stormed to a 9-2 lead to start the game and was never really threatened the rest of the way in the victory over the Titans.

"We played a lot more aggressive this game and started hitting our shots. The defense played super also," said Mintz.

The Titans were coming off a near upset of UW-Eau Claire Friday night, and it showed as they shot just 29 percent from the floor.

Conference scoring leader Gordy Skagstead of Oshkosh was held to 15 points, well below his 28-point-per-game average. Skagstead did grab 15 rebounds to lead all players.

For Stout, Luther Forrest again found the range and poured in 20 points while Ron Hunter followed with 18. Tom Gomolak contributed 14 points while Mark Stevens had 11 off the bench.

Stout's Dave Sandstrom (11 boards) and Gomolak (9 boards) helped Stout take a 53-42 edge in the rebounding department.

Including the 3 games of the past week, Stout's record now stands at 6-2 in the WSUC and 15-2 overall.

This weekend Stout travels to UW-Whitewater on Friday night and UW-Platteville on Saturday night. The Whitewater Warhawks were, at one point this season, rated as high as 4th in the NCAA Division III polls, but 3 straight recent conference losses will drop them considerably.

Stout then returns to the fieldhouse next Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m. to host the UW-River Falls Falcons. The Falcons are one of only two teams to have beaten Stout this season.

The WSUC standings through Saturday's games are as follows:

Team	WSUC	Overall
UW-Stout	6-2	15-2
UW-Stevens Point	6-2	13-4
UW-River Falls	6-2	13-5
UW-Eau Claire	5-2	15-2
UW-Whitewater	3-3	13-3
UW-Superior	3-5	10-7
UW-Platteville	2-6	9-7
UW-Oshkosh	1-4	9-6

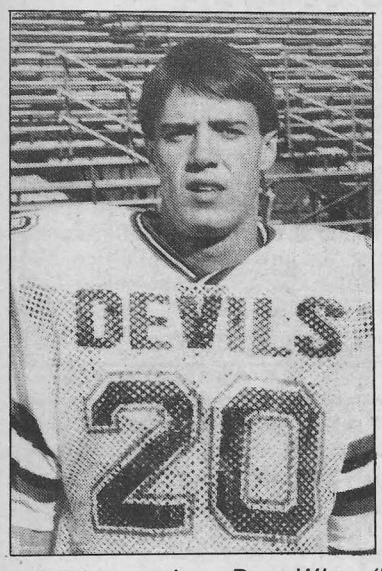
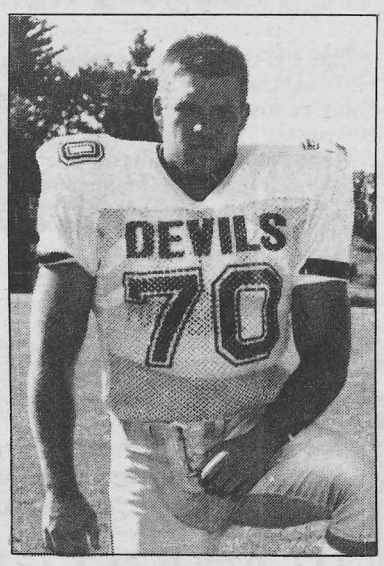
Stout gridders Wise, Olsen earn All-American status





Wide receiver Ron Wise (left) was named All-American Honorable Mention, defensive lineman Brandt Olsen was named All-American Honorable Mention plus All-American second team.

by Cosmas Whitten

December graduate Ron Wise and Senior Brandt Olsen, members of the 1986 Stout football team, were recently named All-American Honorable Mention.

Olsen, who played defensive line, was also named All-American second team defensive tackle in the NAIA Division II by Football News, a magazine which is published in Chicago, Ill. Olsen was one of four players named that belonged to the Wisconsin State University Conference (WSUC).

Blue Devil Offensive Coordinator Mike Wyatt said that Olsen is the third player in the history of Stout football to be named All-American.

"Brandt Olsen is Stout's first All-American since 1980's Tom Paulus, second team linebacker," said Wyatt.

According to Wyatt, in order to be nominated for All-American a player must first make All-District. Only 24 players from each district will qualify. Of the 24 players, 15 from each district are then nominated for All-American by a poll of head coaches. Final decisions are made by the NAIA National Office. Rankings are based on the player's team score.

> "I was surprised to to receive any awards
> —Brandt Olsen"

Olsen, one of four Blue Devil captains, made first team selection for All-District 14 and also second team All-Conference, thus qualifying him for All-American consideration.

"I was really surprised to receive any awards because I missed three games this season due to sickness and injury," Olsen said.

Wide receiver Ron Wise was this season's leading pass receiver in the conference with 48 receptions for 640 yards.

Wise was selected first team All-District 14 and All-Conference honorable mention to qualify for All-American consideration.

There is a report of pro scouts from one NFL team plus Canadian teams who are considering both players for recruitment.

Both players have used up their four years of collegiate eligibility. Looking back on his college football career, Olsen said, "I thank God that I had the ability and opportunity to play football and achieve the many honors earned throughout my career."

The Challenger

Cosmas A. Whitten

I remember the day well, sitting in the lunch room watching a broadcast of an astronaunt walking across the surface of the moon. I was in the third grade then. I don't know if anyone else saw him talking to me but he was there — a wise old man who called himself The Challenger.

He asked me what I wanted to be someday. I told him a clown in the circus. "How will you know when you are ready for clownhood?" The Challenger questioned.

Good question, I thought, but then remembering, "I really will never be a clown in the circus. I will always be a little girl who goes to school and plays at home," I quickly answered.

Suddenly, The Challenger's lecture began. "As distant as your future may seem, it is there. You must never lose hold of your dreams. There will be days when you try but never succeed and days when you fear to take your next step," he said.

Pausing for a moment The Challenger looked up at the television screen. He looked sad, but slowly The Challenger continued. "Remember my dear, what you do now makes a great difference as to what you will someday be doing."

Puzzled, I looked at the wise old man. "Could you explain?" I asked. Taking a deep breath, The Challenger responded, "Imagine a giant hole in the middle of the ground, too great to walk around and to deep too climb down. Desperately, you want to be on the other side of the hole, where all things are good."

The Challenger went on. "The only way to do that is to jump across. For months you train, increasing your strength and endurance, building an inner belief in yourself that you can jump to the other side of the hole."

Pausing, The Challenger looked at me very seriously and said, "Up to now your main goal is to jump across the hole, but remember a goal is a dream with a deadline. The jump must be made before you grow tired or give up your dream."

I grew impatient listening to the story, "Well, do I jump across, do I make it?" I questioned.

The Challenger replied, "At last, the day will come when the jump is to be made. You experience a great amount of fear and hesitation. This is your final challenge. You must take that first step to start a sprint at the hole and jump across."

The Challenger finished by saying, "To walk away afraid is defeating your purpose. Aim for the highest star. To have never taken that first step is to never know if it could have been done."

Many years have passed and goals have changed since I last spoke to The Challenger. It was a year ago yesterday that he passed away, but his memories live on in my mind.

The final words he said to me that day were, "Dream a dream and what you see may someday be."

Stout Grapplers trounced by La Crosse

167 pound class wrestler Wayne Hendrickson was one of two Stout wrestlers to win his match, beating La Crosse's Dave Crook 13-2 to improve his individual record 16-5 for the season.

by Tim Nichols

The UW-Stout wrestling team lost 8 out of 10 individual matches en route route to a 37-7 defeat to UW-La Crosse here at Johnson Fieldhouse last Thursday.

Unlike the victory over Northwestern the previous week when Stout was helped by opponent forfeits in many weight classes, the Blue Devils forfeited the 126-and 158-pound weight classes while La Crosse spotted a full team.

Senior Keith Rusch won the 118-pound class bout for the Blue Devils by a 6-2 decision over Mike Brogan of La Crosse. Brogan is considered one of the top wrestlers in the conference.

The two points Rusch gave up to Brogan were due to a takedown early in the match. However, Rusch kept Brogan off the scoreboard the rest of the match to earn the victory.

"I wrestled conservative tonight," Rusch said. "Once I get my confidence up I'll do a lot better."

Wayne Hendrickson was the only other Blue Devil to win a match, decisioning Dave Crook of La Crosse in the 167-pound class by a score of 13-2. The victory raised Hendrickson's individual record to 16-5 for the season.

The Blue Devils' Kevin Burbach and Scott Abbrederis lost by decisions to La Crosse opponents at the 134- and 142-pound classes, respectively. Jim Miotke gave up a technical fall at 150.

La Crosse's Dave Rudrud handed Blue Devil Steve Smith an 8-1 loss at 177. Throughout much of the match the grapplers were locked in upper body holds in the neutral position with Rudrud gaining most of the takedowns.

Larry Grein of Stout lost a close match to Randy Sebesta of La Crosse by a 9-7 score in the 190-pound class bout. Grein was in control throughout most of the third period but couldn't force his opponent to yield any near fall points.

In the heavyweight match, Blue Devil Wade Strain found himself behind by a score of 4-1 in the first period against Dan Riese of La Crosse. As with Grein, Strain was in control throughout the rest of the match but couldn't quite turn over his opponent and gain near fall points. Strain lost by a 6-3 decision.

The Blue Devils' dual meet record now stands at 2-5. The Blue Devils next wrestle in the Cornell Invitational at Mt. Vernon, Iowa on Saturday.

Lady cagers still winless after double-overtime loss to Eau Claire

by Paul Emerson

The UW-Stout women's basketball team suffered four conference losses last week but the most heart-breaking was a double overtime loss to UW-Eau Claire on January 20 by a 76-72 score.

The Lady Devils put forth their best effort of the year but, after squandering a 12 point lead at the halfway point of the second half, saw that big first victory elude their grasp.

Stout used a tenacious full court man-to-man defense that forced the Blugold ladies into making 31 turnovers.

Coach Lynda Lee stated that, "The turnovers we forced gave us a lot of opportunities." Lee also said that she was disappointed with the fact that the Lady Devils were denied a chance to tie the game.

Eau Claire had a two-point lead and possession of the ball with just under 30 seconds to go in the game and 7 seconds left on the 30-second shot clock.

The ball was tipped by a Stout player but never changed possession. However, the shot clock was errantly reset, giving Eau Claire a new 30 seconds to work with.

Eau Claire scored ten seconds later to take a 76-72 lead and leave the Lady Devils blue.

Sophomore Justine Becker came off the bench to score 18 points to lead the Lady Devils. Junior Renee Kasten scored 15 points and grabbed 14 rebounds while Sophomore Suzi Krank scored 11 and Junior Janet Turowski 10.

For the game Stout connected on 33 of 84 shots for 39 percent but made just 6 of 20 free throws for 30 percent.

Eau Claire, on the other hand, hit on 17 of 26 free throws for 65 percent and sank 29 of 64 shots from the floor for 45 percent. The Blugold ladies were led in scoring by Ann Bartels with 21 points.

Eau Claire won the battle of the boards with a 57-36 rebounding advantage. The game was tied at the half, 29-29. The score at the end of regulation was 61-61, and at the end of the first overtime it was 69-69.

The following night the Lady Devils hosted UW-La Crosse and found the task at hand to be too much to handle as they dropped the game by a 92-57 score.

Stout and La Crosse both made 9 free throws and shot an identical 48 percent from the floor, but La Crosse got off 84 attempts to just 50 by Stout.

"We couldn't penetrate their defense," Lee said, commenting on the low number of shots attempted. She added, "Running is their whole offense, so they had plenty of opportunities."

Kasten led the Lady Blue Devils in the scoring column with 16 points and she again grabbed 14 rebounds. Janet Turowski had 11 points and Suzi Krank 10.

UW-Stevens Point, undefeated and ranked 10th in the NCAA Division III, dealt the Lady Devils another blow last Friday night by taking that game by a 94-58 margin.

Stout's bright spot was Kasten who poured in 21 points and grabbed an impressive 16 rebounds.

Then on Saturday night UW-Oshkosh lit up the scoreboard en route to a 107-47 drubbing of the Lady Devils.

Lee had little to say on the weekends losses, but did say that, "Their shooting percentages killed us in both games, and against Oshkosh, we played awful. Nothing clicked."

Against Oshkosh Freshman Jacki Gilbert led Stout with 11 points and 8 rebounds. Stout was plagued with 41 turnovers in the game but outrebounded Oshkosh by a 34-31 margin.

Injuries have shrunken the Lady Devils active roster as of late. Junior Mary Britts missed all four games last week with a sprained ankle, while several other players missed one or two games during the week.

The Lady Devils were to host Northland College on Tuesday past, before traveling to UW-Whitewater this Friday and UW-Platteville on Saturday night. Then next Wednesday night they host UW-River Falls in a 5 p.m. game.

Gymnasts place second in their last home meet

by Slash La Freniere

People go to college to train their minds to become anything that they want to be. Gymnasts, however, wage a constant battle against their minds. They must overcome pain and self doubt to acheive the concentration level neccessary to win.

Last Saturday the Stout womens gymnastics team finished second overall in a meet that pitted them against UW-Superior, UW-Whitewater, and UW-River Falls. Once again, the team leader for the Lady Devils was Patti Roenitz as she walked away with the all-around gymnast honors.

Roenitz posted a first place finish on the balance beam with an 8.0 score and she was second overall in the floor exercise. Roenitz also added steady performances in the vault and uneven parallel bars, the other components of the all-around competition, to take the title.

Roenitz had this to say about her performance, "I was surprised that I did so well, but it all just came together for me. This was my first all-around title all season.".

Stout gymnast Kelly Kramer finished first in the floor exercise with a score of 8.5. Kramers routine was well executed and dynamic. Said Kramer, "My routine felt good and it all came together for me.".

> "My routine felt good and it all came together for me"
> —Kelly Kramer

Patti Roenitz was second in the floor with a score of 8.4. Cosmas Whitten added a score of 8.2 to the marks of Kramer and Roenitz in what is clearly Stout's strongest event.

Carolyn Bjerke tied for first place overall on the vault with a score of 8.4. Bjerke was followed closely by Patti Roenitz, who added a score of 8.0.

Patti Roenitz led all Stout gymnasts in the uneven parellel bars with a score of 7.3. Tammy Dennis was second for Stout. Dennis had a score of 6.9.

On the balance beam, the leader for Stout was again Patti Roenitz. Roenitz' 8.0 score was followed by Cosmas Whitten's 6.1. Whitten's routine was without a fall and she was clearly dissapointed by her low score and she felt that she deserved better marks.

Next Saturday, the season wil continue for the Stout gymnasts. They will travel to Northern Michigan University to compete. Meanwhile, all members of the team will continue to perfect their routines under the guidance of head coach John Zuerlein.

Track and field continue to show improvement this year

by Denise Cain

The UW-Stout track and field team continues to show improvement as both the men's and women's team competed last Saturday at the Northwest Open, hosted by the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis, Minn.

Senior Co-captain Matt Christenson led the way for the Blue Devil men as he ran the 3,000-meter in a time of 8 minutes, 43 seconds.

When asked about his feelings on the team, Christenson replied, "We have some good athletes and had some great performances at the Northwest Open. We are starting to set our goals for conference and coming together as a team."

Track coach Steve Terry was pleased by Christenson's run, adding "It is encouraging to see Matt running well after missing Cross Country and training in England over the fall."

The men's track team had other fine performances including those by Dan Doucette and Paul Bons. Doucette, besides anchoring the mile relay with a split time of 51.1 seconds, dropped his time to 51.5 seconds in the quarter mile. It was his season's best and landed him a fourth place finish overall.

> "We are starting to set our goals
> —Matt Christenson"

Paul Bons finished the mile run in a time of 4:21. Coach Terry commented, "Bons had a good performance in a heat without much competition, finishing 60 meters ahead of any competitor." Bons proved himself again as he ran the 800-meter in a time of 1:57.5, earning him a third place finish overall.

Bons, a senior co-captain, felt happy about his performance, stating, "It is great to be back. We have gotten off on a good foot and we are showing progress as a team."

Individuals demonstrating the team effort included Steve Hoeschle and Mike Todey, both completing the 800-meter run in a time of 2.00 minutes. Kennute Connell equaled his best time of last season by finishing the 55-meter dash in 6.6 seconds and John Zastrow and Zack Adams ran well in the hurdles but did not place in a very competitive field.

It was the first meet for the women's track team this year. Leading the Blue Devil runners was Freshman Liz Mostek with a 65.5-second quarter mile. Also running well for the women were Beth Claas, Kristin Mauk, Cathy Todey and Michelle Ennis, all 400-meter runners.

Coach Terry's view on the progress of the athletes reflects one of team productivity, stating, "We had some fine performances and some disappointments. As the training increases, moving toward the conference meet, we hope to identify those athletes who contribute to the success of the team."

Swimmers went down by a 61-37 defeat to UNI

by Slash La Freniere

Last Saturday the Stout Men's and Women's Swimming and Diving teams traveled to the University of Northern Iowa for a dual meet. The overall results for both teams favored Northern Iowa. The Stout women were defeated 65-48, and the men from Stout went down to a 61-37 defeat. However, this meet contained many sparkling results for both the men's and women's teams.

The University of Northern Iowa is a division 1 rated swim program. This allows them to award scholarships to their athletes and it also helps them to attract somewhat superior athletes.

For the Stout women the day was a great one for Junior Tri-captain Jackie Gilbert. Gilbert was victorious in all three events that she swam in. Gilberts victories came in the 200 yard (yd) freestyle, 100 yd freestyle, and the 500 yd freestyle races.

(Note: Last week the races were reported to have been measured in meters. This was in error. All indoor pools are laid out in yards and outdoor competition pools, including those used in the Olympics, are contested in meters.)

When asked to access her first rate performance, Gilbert said, "I wasn't expecting to do as well as I did. The hard practices that we had during the week paid off for me.".

Lara Perkins also swam well for Stout. Perkins won the 200 yd induvidual medley, and she also qualfied for nationals in the event. Perkins was second in the 100 yd breast stroke by 0.60 seconds and narrowly missed qualifying for nationals in that event by an even smaller fraction of a second.

> "...but overall we did well"
> —Coach Miller

For a swimmer to qualify for nationals, they must finish a race under a pre-determined cut off point established from a finishing swimmer in each event from last year's national meet. So, in every event, there is a set time that every swimmer tries to beat in order to qualify for nationals.

In the 400 yd freestyle relay, Stout's relay team of Poncious, DeBaker, Sable, and Potter contributed to a first place finish. Also swimming well for women this week, as noted by coach John Miller, was Tammy Sable. As a member of the 400 yd relay team, Sable contributed to a winning effort. She also had strong results in the 200 yd individual medley, the 100 yd freestyle, and the 1000 yd freestyle events.

For the mens team, the highlight of the meet was that the 400 yd freestyle relay team of Captain Stu Boese, Steve Kostrova, Kurt Siebert, and Mark Kukuzke qualified for nationals.

In the 100 yd butterfly, Steve Kostrova was victorious for Stout. Kostrova turned in a strong effort to win by three quarters of a second.

The 500 yd freestyle produced a one-two finish for Stout as swimmers Kukuzke and Hauser were the respective finishers. The Stout swimmers also brought home one-two results in the 100 yd breast stroke. Swimmers Pederson and O'Reilly did the honors for Stout.

Coach John Miller said, "Northern Iowa is a developing team and is also a division 1 team. But overall we did well." Next up for the Mens team is a dual meet at Michigan Tech next Saturday, as the women have the week off.

Intramural activities resume in single, dual and team competition

by Tim Nichols

The beginning of a new semester brings the start of another intramural sports season. Intramural activities continue for individual, dual and team competition. Whether it be for the competition, enjoyment or simply to lose a few pounds, enter a sport and get involved.

Assistant Intramural Director Rob Klemm encourages students to participate in intramural activities. Some activities are beginning soon so be aware of entry deadlines and officials meetings.

Intramural hockey leagues started action last week at the Dunn County Fairgrounds. This year a no-check rule has been put into effect. "It speeds the game up a little but it isn't the same without the roughness," Eric Langheinrich, a participant, said about the new rule.

Broomball leagues began action this week. This year the broomball courts are to the west of the fieldhouse. Matt Mazanec, an official, said "The longer courts might cause people to get fatigued a lot faster."

Action has also begun in winter volleyball and basketball leagues. Here is a list of upcoming activities:

New CT center gets "hi-tech" equipment

by Karen Smith

Instructors in graphic arts and industrial technology expect the new facilities of their departments to greatly benefit students.

The building which used to house the UW-Stout student center has been remodeled into a new Communications Technology (CT) building. The new facility has been in use since the beginning of this semester.

Kim Steen, instructor of Graphic Communications, is pleased with the new facility.

"We are getting things (equipment) we have never had before," Steen said. "This will make classes more up-to-date and hi-tech'."

"Previously, everyone had been taught all of the history and background in their classes," Steen continued. "Now they will be able to get hands-on experience with some of the newest equipment."

William Amthor, Department chairman of Graphic Communications, explained what is considered "hi-tech" equipment as that which is computer and microprocessor controlled.

"We are moving away from procedures and processes of the past which highly involved craftsmanship," Amthor said. "More consistent judgements are being made because of the devices being utilized in the industry."

"We now have control of the environment to accommodate the newest equipment," Amthor said, referring to the facilities' ability to control humidity and temperature, which is necessary in operating some of the newer equipment.

Andy Bear, an instructor in Graphic Communications, sees the new facility and equipment as having a "tremendous impact" on students.

Some of the new equipment to arrive will include an offset press from AB Dick company and AM Products, both of which are fully computer assisted. Bear sees these as currently being the "two biggies" in the industry.

"Du Pont and 3-M are also donating processors," Bear added, "though they have not yet arrived."

A color scanner is also among the important pieces of equipment to arrive, according to Bear.

The color scanner will enable students to individually separate colors.

"This is a tremendous leap for us," Bear said. "Three-fourths of the students in graphic arts will probably use this when they are working in the industry," Bear added.

"The new equipment will illustrate to students how the industry does it," Bear said. "Students will see the equipment that they will be working with when they get a job."

William Amthor also mentioned that the CT currently has 35 new computer terminals for students to use.

Amthor said that the CT is capable of serving more students than in the past.

"The ability to serve more students is because our new facility is larger," Amthor said.

Because of budget cuts in the School of Industry and Technology, which graphic arts is subject to as well, there is a possibility of cuts in faculty in the CT.

"Because of faculty limitations, no additional classes will be offered at this time," said instructor Steen. She added that the classes presently offered to students will continue to improve from the changes made in the department.

Students encouraged to participate in campus activities

by Steven Lemire

UW-Stout student leaders involved in the Student Activities Self-Study Board are helping to examine the effectiveness of student activities programming.

Student activities include the programs provided by such organizations as the Stout Student Association (SSA), the representational government of the students and the member organizations of the University Programming Board (UPB), such as the Speakers Series Commission, which hires speakers to come to Stout, and Contemporary Music Production, which hires rock bands that play in the Great Hall.

The university bands and choirs are also included, as is the publication of The Stoutonia.

These programs are called student activities because students plan and execute the programs for students.

The Student Activities Self-Study Board consists of student organization representatives, student activities staff and consultants, hired with the aid of a UW-System grant, to aid in the study.

The Stout study is being made in conjunction with similar studies taking place at UW-River Falls and UW-Eau Claire.

According to Bill Siedlecki, the director of student activities at Stout, program evaluation has always been a concern of his office.

About a year ago, Siedlecki said, the process became more systematic with the formation of the study group and the grant application.

Members of the self-study group wrote a survey which was distributed to a random sample of students and staff, most of whom returned the completed form.

Last Wednesday, the consultant team met in an all day session at Stout to discuss the survey, offer their insights and expertise to the Self-Study Group and to help focus the attention of the group in a unified direction.

The main point to come out of the meeting was that student activities is just a vehicle by which the goal of student involvement is realized. Student involvement really means endless opportunities to grow, learn, teach and just have fun.

From the results of the survey, Siedlecki said, the Self-Study Group members were able to form a basic understanding of what kinds of people participated in student activities and why.

The survey showed that 55 percent of the students are members of a campus club or organization. Their reasons ranged from gaining leadership skills and socializing to resume development.

UPB Chairperson, Christa Sanicola, who represented students to the Self-Study Group, said that student activities are an important part of a person's education.

The skills learned in organizing, leading, and interacting with other people, Sanicola said, will stay with you for the rest of your life

Petition to Geneva meeting

A petition, signed by over 2,000 Menomonie citizens and UW-Stout students, has been forwarded by the United Nations office in New York to their meeting in Geneva.

The 1987 session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission will open on Monday in Geneva, Switzerland. Debate is expected to focus on conditions in Chile, southern Africa, the Middle East and Afghanistan.

The countries of Canada and Norway have proposed that a declaration be adopted which would prohibit discrimination against people promoting human rights.

Nation

At home with the folks

A new study shows that the high cost of living and the tendency for young adults to delay marriage has kept more young people in their parents' homes.

In 1970, 52 percent of men and 41 percent of women between the ages of 18 to 24 lived with their parents, according to the Census Bureau.

In 1985, 60 percent of men and 48 percent of women in the same age group lived with their parents, according to the February edition of American Demographics magazine.

State

Reservation opportunities shrink

High unemployment and poverty have increased on Native American reservations in Wisconsin, while government spending has decreased, according to a report initiated by Presidential Commission on Indian Rservation Economies.

The study, released in December, said that unemployment runs 49 percent amongst Indians living on or near reservations in the state.

The director of a pre-school program on the Bad River Reservation said that federal budget cuts are damaging educational opportunities for young Native Americans, also.

"Because of cuts, we're only able to serve about 50 kids this year out of 70 who were potentially eligible," said Judi Blanchard, Bad River Head Start director.

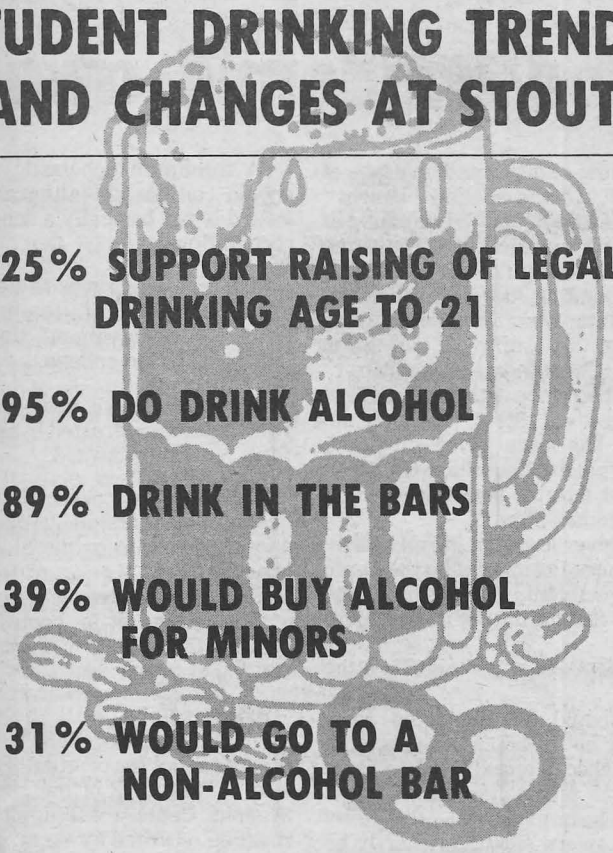
STUDENT DRINKING TRENDS AND CHANGES AT STOUT



25% SUPPORT RAISING OF LEGAL DRINKING AGE TO 21

95% DO DRINK ALCOHOL

89% DRINK IN THE BARS

39% WOULD BUY ALCOHOL FOR MINORS

31% WOULD GO TO A NON-ALCOHOL BAR

Survey shows that 95% of Stout students drink

by Rose Shakal

Only 25 percent of Stout students surveyed supported raising of the legal drinking age to 21, according to a study designed in the summer and conducted in the fall by students at the university.

The survey was designed by students in the hospitality, marketing and sales class and conducted by students in the fall semester.

Of the 111 students surveyed by the class, 95 percent admitted that they do drink and 89 percent of them said they drink in bars.

A large percentage of the students surveyed said that they believe minors will now stay in their rooms to drink or that they will go to house parties, instead of drinking in bars.

Students designed the survey to identify trends and changes in values related to drinking, according to Sharon Giroux of the habitational resources department.

To identify those changing values and to market toward

—Sharon Giroux

As managers-in-training, the students' "main concern is to identify those changing values and to market toward those needs," Giroux said.

Only 39 percent of the students surveyed felt sorry enough for minors under 21 to risk breaking the law to provide them with alcohol, however.

Other interesting results of the survey were that only 31 percent of the students surveyed would want to go to a non-alcoholic bar in Menomonie and that 82 percent of the respondents said that college students and professors should mingle at bars.

New drinking age affects bars

by Rose Shakal

Tavern owners in the Menomonie area have noticed some of the effects of the change in the legal drinking age.

Business has slowed down, according to bartenders at The Marion and The Spot.

"There aren't as many people in the bars," said Curt Lyons, bartender at The Marion.

Local bartenders said that they have had problems with minors trying to get in the bars; mostly at the start of the fall semester.

Lyons said that 22 minors attempted to get into The Marion in a two week period. The policy for handling such a situation at the Marion is to call the police.

There aren't as many people in the bars

—Curt Lyons

The minor then receives a $72 citation for attempting to break the legal drinking age law.

Bartenders interviewed said they have not noticed a change in the average age of the patrons.

Such an effect would not be really noticed, they said, until the students who are grandfathered in to legal drinking age have graduated.

Anyone who was born before Sept. 1 1967 is being permitted to drink in the bars legally. This includes all of Stout's seniors and juniors, most of sophomores and a few freshmen.

When today's freshmen are seniors, in about three years, the grandfathering will be discontinued and everyone under the age of 21 will be considered a minor at bars in Wisconsin.

Problem of managing enrollment debated after failure of referendum for new schools

by Judy Weitzer

The course of action to be taken in the Menomonie Area School District is the subject of much heated debate amongst taxpayers, parents of school children, school administrators and faculty.

Residents of the Menomonie Area School District defeated a referendum on Dec. 6 of last year which would have closed the elementary schools of North, Little Elk Creek, Lucas and Knapp.

The referendum called for building two double section schools with two classrooms per grade; one to combine enrollment from Lucas and Knapp and another to combine North and Little Elk Creek.

The action proposed by the referendum was similar to parts of a ten-phase action plan proposed by the school district superintendent.

Four of the phases of the proposal have already been completed and one is under construction. The failure of the referendum leaves the long-range plan at a standstill.

The long-range plan was presented by David R. Ross, superintendent of schools in the Menomonie area.

Ross has characterized his plan as educationally sound and politically feasible. He has also said that his plan is intended to increase the economy of operations and boundary stability, while lowering class sizes and working toward the elimination of combined grades.

Knapp school closing is the biggest hang-up

—Stanley Huftel

Due to the projected increase in enrollments in the district and present conditions at some of the existing schools, alternatives to the failed referendum proposal are being discussed by school administrators and members of local Parent Teacher Associations (PTA).

The enrollement projection figures for the next five years, 1987-88 to 1991-92 predict an increase of approximately 182 students in grades K-12.

Resistance to continuing through all ten phases of the superintendent's plan is partially because of opposition to the closing of Knapp School.

"Knapp school closing is the biggest hang-up," said Stanley Huftel, principal of East, Little Elk Creek and Cedar Falls elementary schools.

Also, Raney added, Knapp residents feel that parental support is a very influential part of a good education and that such support would be reduced if the school were moved out of the area.

According to School Board Member Ed Raney, residents of Knapp want to keep a school in their community. Raney said that they do not want to bus their children to Lucas School, which is not located in a residential district.

We hear an awful lot of teachers saying that split classes are bad

—Ed Raney

Raney attributed lost real estate sales in Knapp to the possiblity of the school closing. Realtors in the area, Raney claimed, say that young people shy away from settling in an area which does not have a school nearby.

According to Raney, many residents of Knapp feel that the loss of the school would be the beginning of the end of the community.

Raney agreed that the Knapp school is in poor physical condition, but said that citizens of the town would like to see a new four or five room school built on the present site.

Other members of the board feel that, since Knapp is on the edge of the district, it would not be worthwhile to build a school there.

The proposal to build a new school in Knapp has also met with opposition that the small number of classrooms would necessitate the use of split grades, where two grades would have class in one room with one teacher.

"We hear an awful lot of teachers saying that split classes are bad," Raney argued, "but no teacher or administrator has ever brought in any documentation of that."

Whatever the outcome of the phase plan, a decision must be made soon on how to handle the possible overcrowding of East School for the 1987-88 school year.

Four alternatives are under consideration, including combining the enrollments of East and Little Elk Creek, with K-3 students attending East and 4-6 graders at Little Elk Creek.

Another proposal under discussion would change the boundaries to reduce East's class sizes, with the remainder of the students being sent to River Heights.

Making no change other than having a greater number of students per class represents a third option.

Lastly, class sizes could be reduced through the use of split grades.

For the first or second option to be exercised, they must be passed by the school board. In the event of a deadlock on these proposals, the superintendent of the district could exercise option three or four.

Applications available Feb. 9 for highest non-academic award

by James Falkofske

The student government at UW-Stout has announced that applications for the highest non-academic award given to Stout students will be made available starting Monday, Feb. 9.

In 1958, the Stout Student Association (SSA) created the Medallion Award to be given to students for non-academic contributions to the school.

When the SSA conceived of the award, they recommended that the award be a medallion some three inches in diameter and about 1/4 inch thick, made of bronze, bearing a suitable inscription. The design, developed by Kenneth Dickie, a Stout student from Canada, was chosen. Dickie's design carried the Stout seal with the image of the Bowman Hall tower surrounded by a band bearing the Stout motto: "In recognition of learning, skill, industry, honor."

Because of his Canadian usage of English, Dickie spelled "honour" with the added "u." His spelling of the word has remained the same on each redesign of the seal.

Surrounding the band bearing the motto was an outside band bearing the name: "Stout State College, Menomonie, Wisconsin."

In accordance with the change of the name of Stout, the original design has been twice modified, first to read "Stout State University" and later to read "University of Wisconsin-Stout."

The reverse side of the medallion has spaces for inscribing the name of the recipient, the reason for the award, and the date of its presentation.

The SSA set rules to govern the award:

•It should be restricted to a number not to exceed one per cent of the school's enrollment. In practice, the maximum number has seldom been awarded;

•The award should primarily be given to seniors;

•A minimum scholastic record should be fixed, although this award is not basically a scholastic recognition;

•The medallion was to be given on the basis of leadership, scholastic achievement, and contributions to the college.

Applications are now available to all seniors interested in applying for a Medallion Award.

Recipients are selected on the basis of leadership, citizenship, and contribution to the Stout and Menomonie communities. Medallion awardees are honored by recognition at an awards banquet in the spring, a certificate, and the bronze medallion.

Applications will be made available starting Feb. 9, in the Stout Student Association (SSA) office in Room 123 of the Memorial Student Center. All applications must be returned by 4 p.m. on Feb. 27.

Twin Cities noise complaints threaten Eau Claire flights

by Eric Johnson

The complaints of citizens living near the Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport could effect flight service to the Eau Claire airport in the future.

Citizens of the Twin Cities sounded their opinions on airport noise recently at a public hearing at the Metropolitan Airports Commision (MAC) building in Minneapolis on Wednesday, Jan. 28th.

The hearing focused on two proposals made by the MAC committee to achieve a reduction in noise levels around the airport.

The first proposal was to cut back the number of flights each airline could fly into the Twin Cities airport.

The second proposal was to replace the older Stage II flights with larger, quieter Stage III aircraft flights.

A MAC study has determined that most of the noise problem is due to an increase in the operation of Stage II aircraft, such as the DC-9 and 727 jets.

A reduction in the number of Stage II aircraft flights would effect Eau Claire because it is served exclusively by these aircraft.

The commission organized the hearing because of the recent increase in noise complaints voiced by residence living near the runways.

Complaints have increased from an average of 150 a year in the mid 1970's to over 2,000 complaints in 1985.

The study also concluded that an 18 percent reduction in total sound energy generated at the airport was necessary to bring the noise to a tolerable level.

According to W. Thomas Lidel, a spokesman for Northwest Airlines, the frequent Stage II fights are necessary for the airlines to operate their "hub and spoke system."

The hub and spoke system is a concept which developed after the deregulation of the airline industry.

Each airline chooses one or more hubs or centrally located airports to which they fly the majority of passengers.

The passengers are flown to the hub, where they switch planes on route to their final destination.

This eliminates the majority of non-stop flights, which Lidel said "are not economically possible" because of the number of empty seats.

Lidel also stressed the fact that Stage II aircrafts currently make up about 70 percent of all commercial airline fleets. He said that replacing them with Stage III crafts in the near future would be a "monumental task."

Northwest Airlines has chosen to locate its hub in Minneapolis. A reduction of flights to that airport would effect Northwest more than other airlines.

Eau Claire is considered one of the spokes of the Northwest Airline system and is dependant on Northwest for air service.

Both proposals presented at the hearing were flatly rejected by airline officials.

At present, Boston/Logan Airport in Boston, Massachusetts is the only airport in this country to have a noise ordinance in place.

Despite testimony opposing the noise ordi- nance in the Twin Cities, the mayor of St. Paul, George Latimer expressed the concerns of people living near the airport.

"An assault on ones ears and nerves by sound," Latimer said, "is as much of an invasion of ones privacy and freedom to act, as other invasions we outlaw."

Review process created for new groups, not Coop Program

by Gretchen Eke

Organizations applying for first-time funding from the Stout Student Association (SSA) will now go to a reserve fund rather than apply for an account of their own because of a motion passed at Tuesday night's meeting.

"It gives us the opportunity to learn more about the organization," newly-appointed Vice-President of Financial Affairs Cate Reszka said of the change.

"It improves communication between the finance committee and the new organization," Reszka said.

Dan Meyer, off-campus senator, spoke against the motion. He said that all organizations, new and old, should be treated equally.

Also speaking in favor of equal treatment, On-Campus Senator Tom Aumann said, "Every club should be looked at carefully."

The motion to create stages of funding for new groups passed by a 16-8 vote of the senate with two abstentions.

In other business, a motion was presented by two members of the Finance Committee to make cooperative programming a permanent account of the segregated fee funded budget process.

Things that are that important should be brought up at Caucus

—Dan Meyer

Todd Nelson, off-campus senator, made the motion and Mark Kreuger, also an off-campus senator, seconded it. Both are members of the Finance Committee which prepares all budget recommendations presented to the SSA senators for approval.

The process of allocating segregated fees to the budgets of student activities is one of the most important functions of the SSA.

Cooperative programming is a project that was instituted as part of this process last year on a trial basis. It provides a seperate account to be distributed at the discretion of the Financial Affairs Committee of the SSA.

Cooperative programming funds are to be used for student activities events planned by two or more groups in cooperation.

Arguments against the motion to make cooperative programming a regularly funded account rested on the desire for more information about the trial program.

"I think things that are that important should be brought up at Caucus," Off-campus Senator Meyer said.

Senator's Caucus is held an hour before the regular meeting as a forum for informal discussion of issues that will come up at the formal meeting.

In an attempt to delay the vote "in order to get a break down of exactly how much money was spent and what the money was spent on this past semester in cooperative programming," Barb Caron, an off-campus senator moved to table the motion for one week.

Caron's motion to table failed and the motion to make cooperative programming a permanently funded project passed by a voice vote.

Employee fitness programs visited by Stout Wellness Club

by Masha Roberts

Students involved in a campus organization which focuses on health have been visiting companies that maintain a sound wellness and fitness program for their employees.

The UW-Stout Wellness Club, the newest campus organization to be recognized by the Stout Student Association (SSA), has been expanding and increasing its activities.

The club's goal is to attempt to fulfill, as much as possible, the needs of its members and the campus in what they see as the six areas of wellness - social, occupational, spiritual, physical, intellectual and emotional.

SSA recognition grants the club use of the Memorial Student Center facilities in pursuing its goals.

Several members of the Wellness Club visited Control Data in St. Paul, Minnesota during a tour in December, to explore the company's employee fitness program. Control Data's program is called the "Staywell Program."

"This was done in an effort to enhance employees' health and productivity," said Maureen Wegleitner, the program coordinator, "while at the same time, to reduce the company's health care costs."

Wegleitner said that the results have been consistently positive and quite rewarding. More than 50 percent of eligible employees participate in the program, which is designed to include both young and middle-aged men and women in all job classifications, she said.

Some of Control Data's immediate concerns center on proper nutrition, stress management, fitness, seat belt use, alcohol abuse, weight management and kicking the habit of smoking.

Another company that the Wellness Club visited on their tour in December was the Minnesota Worksite Wellness Resource (MWWR).

It was found that this wellness program has provided leadership for the development of worksite health, promotion programs and supported community activities that helped individuals achieve and maintain healthy lifestyles.

"Wellness is too much fun to be kept serious," said Earl Hipp, author of the book "Fighting Invisible Tigers" and coordinator of the MWWR.

Hipp said that he felt that all fitness programs should involve a mix of fun and awareness and provide the possibility of growth.

Hipp's book, "Fighting Invisible Tigers," was written for children of ages 8 to 15. It contains information on how to handle stress and understand the personal, physiological and psychological aspects of their health.

"Wellness has to do with the overall well-being of individuals," said Hipp, adding that fitness even plays a role in disease reduction.

"Trips to these companies have proven to be inspirational and beneficial to both the club and its members," said Karen Hoyer, president of the Wellness Club.

Presently, the Wellness Club have begun scheduling activities for the upcoming Wellness Week from April 6-10.

"We are expecting to have guest speakers to speak on the six dimensions of wellness," Hoyer said. "Faculty will participate with presentations on such topics as stress management and other health-related issues."

Change for students

The deadline for applications to sit on Senator Jim Harsdor's Student Advisory Committee has been extended to the middle of this month.

The deadline was extended, Harsdor said, upon the request of university students.

The advisory committee will be made up of fifteen students, five from each of the three UW campuses, including Stout, which are in Harsdor's district.

Applicants must have qualifications that meet or exceed the guidelines listed below:

•Students with an interest in legislative and state government matters.

•Students with a minimum grade point average of 2.75.

•Students with a strong understanding of issues in state government affecting education and the university.

Committee members would be required to keep in contact with the Senator's office, by mail and telephone, to advise him on these issues.

All applications must be received by Feb. 15 and should be sent to Senator James E. Harsdor, P.O. Box 7782, Madison, WI. 53707-7882.

UW must explain

A Dane County court has ordered the UW-System to show why it has failed to grant statutory wage increases to 6,000 academic staff.

The Wisconsin Education Association Council (WEAC) obtained the court order requiring system administrators to inform Circuit Court Judge Mark Frankel of the exact date when the mandated salary increases will be paid or else explain their reasons for not doing so.

The information must be provided to Frankel by February 9.

The action follows WEAC's filing of a formal complaint seeking review of the university's implementation of an academic staff titling and compensation study conducted by Hayes-Hill Associates of Chicago last year.

WEAC, representing academic staff members, charged that the UW-System has failed to act on a directive in the 1985-87 state budget calling for implementation of the results of the consultant's study. The study called for, among other things, "catch up pay" adjustments like those already granted to UW faculty.

The report approved by the Legislature's Joint Committee on Employment Relations last June stipulated that the salary increases be granted by Jan. 1, 1987.

Women in tech

An organization committed to the educational and professional advancement of women in technological fields will be holding an election of officers on Tuesday, Feb. 10 at 7 p.m. in the White Pine Room.

The Society for the Advancement of Women in Technology (SAWT) provides mutual help, friendship, and career guidance to its members.

All of SAWT's officer positions are open to new candidates.

SAWT also works to enrich the education of students by bringing guest speakers to campus to offer insight and assistance with special interests for women in technology.

The next speaking event sponsored by SAWT will be a presentation on "The Skills of Interviewing," presented by Ruth Thomas on Tuesday, Feb. 24 at 7 p.m. in the White Pine Room.

Anyone interested in the organization or its activities can contact Sue Larson at 235-3076 or Jeannine Patton at 235-1927.

Election thrown out

The election of officers for the non-traditional student organization at UW-Stout that was held last month has been declared unconstitutional by the president of the organization.

The election, held on Thursday, Jan. 22, for officers of the Organization of Adult Students Involved in Stout (OASIS) was mistakenly held in violation of the group's constitution, according to Toni Kuntsman, who has been president of the group for the past two years but was absent from the meeting at which the elections were held.

"There are two agenda items set for our next meeting," said Kuntsman, "nominations and a possible change of the constitution in regards to election proceedings."

"But as the constitution reads now," Kuntsman said, "the election that was held was unconstitutional."

The next business meeting of OASIS will be held on Thursday, Feb. 12 in Crystal Ballroom B of the Memorial STudent Center from 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m., followed by an informal social session from 7:30 p.m. on.

and cannot be learned from books or lectures.

One of the biggest frustrations of student activities organizers is trying to get the message out that there are opportunities to experience other than school.

According to the survey, 60 percent of the students leave town one weekend a month or less, yet 85 percent believe that Stout is a "suitcase campus."

The assumption that Stout students pack their suitcases and head home every weekend has kept activity planners from scheduling many weekend events, yet survey results point to Saturday night as the preferred night to hit a campus activity.

53 percent of the survey respondents claimed that there is nothing to do in Menomonie.

Student activities organizers would like to change this perception. The bulletin boards are kept up to date and The Stoutonia and word of mouth are good sources of information.

Professor discovers perfect love potion

After 23 years of research, Dr. Rufus T. Valentine, noted romanceologist, has discovered the perfect love potion.

Said Dr. Valentine, "The FTD® Sweetheart™ Bouquet is a perfect combination of flowers and a heart-shaped potpourri in a ceramic powder jar. Lab studies have shown it to have a powerful, romantic effect on both sender and recipient.

"However," Dr. Valentine warns, "the effect seems to peak around February 14. And you must make sure to go to an FTD Florist. Otherwise," he added, "you may find yourself spending Valentine's Day alone in a most unromantic place—the library."

Monotony image is our own creation

The 21 year-old drinking law was designed to get alcohol out of the hands of teenagers but has driven many underage drinkers to seek private parties as their one and only means to pacify their drinking needs.

Since private house parties usually occur on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, underage drinkers see these nights as their only chance to go out and drink. Therefore, they end up drinking more alcohol during a much shorter time period.

The failure of the 21 year-old drinking law to help change our drinking habits is indicated by the 350 percent increase in detox admissions of UW-Stout students by Protective Services. Between July, 1985 and January, 1986 four students were taken to detox . The past six months ending in January, 14 students were taken to detox by Protective Services. The past four years the total of alcohol related arrests by Protective Servicesr officers has grown from 26 to 68 annually.

The dramatic increase in these numbers reflects the serious problem concerning abusive drinking at Stout.

These numbers show that highly publicized group activities such as the Bash On The Grass are nothing more than window dressing for an environment in which senseless drinking has yet to be seriously dealt with at Stout.

Can anything be done for students learn to drink responsibly? Where do we start? First off, the image shared by Stout students which equates Menomonie with monotony must be changed. The bars up town need to be deemphasized as the entertainment centers for Stout students.

A coordinated effort must be made to help Stout students expand their horizons beyond the next beer bottle. Minneapolis/St. Paul, one of America's largest cities, is just an hour away by car. Menomonie offers numerous opportunities in outdoor sports year round. A wide variety of activities in Menomonie can effectively use student volunteers. Whatever program a student enters, he or she will learn that their field of experience at Stout need not be limited to the campus' borders.

The 21 year-old drinking age has not verifiably reduced the drinking among the age group targeted by the law. The only change for these drinkers was they had to get more innovative to find the liquor they were after.

Mind Games

Seeds of Change

On Wednesday, February 4, 1987, the Special Events Commission sponsored Craig Karges, who spoke in the Great Hall.

Craig Karges is a magician and a psychic mind reader. Craig was supposed to appeal to a large population of the university population. I am part of a very vocal minority that feels that psychic mind reading and magic are spiritual in nature. That spiritual nature should no more be government sponsored than an Oral Roberts Healing Seminar, (if you believe in separation of church and state).

The Special Events Commission spent $850 of its $17000 budget to bring Craig to Stout. The Special Events Commission gets its money from the segregated fees that each student at U.W. Stout pays each semester.

I am not one of the people who Craig Karges appeals to. In fact, I am diametrically opposed to his line of thinking. I do not appreciate seeing my segregated fees pay for his appearance at UW- Stout.

Last spring, Josh McDowell spoke at UW-Stout. Josh is a world renowned campus speaker, author, and teacher. He has spoken on hundreds of campuses in over 60 countries. Josh McDowell spoke to over 1500 people while he was here at UW-Stout.

Campus Crusade for Christ, the group that sponsored Josh McDowell's appearance, asked the Speaker Series for $800 of its $13000 budget. Campus Crusade was denied any funds on the grounds that Josh would not appeal to a wide enough audience.

As you read this column today, you will have the luxury of knowing how many people attended Craig's performance. As I write this on Monday, I'll use a maximum of 500. Even with these conservative figures, Josh's attendance will be over three times that of Karge's.

I'd like to ask the Special Events Commission how they can justify spending $850 to cover the full expenses of Karge's while Campus Crusade asked for $800, less than one half of Josh's expenses, yet Craig will have attracted less than one third of the people that Josh attracted.

Each one of us pays a fee each semester. That fee is allocated by the Student Center Association to different campus organizations. Each organization then spends their money to meet the needs of the students as they see fit, theoretically.

I ask you, the student: are you being represented by the Special Events Commission? When was the last time that you felt that you received your money's worth from an event sponsored by the Special Events Commission or the Speaker Series? Since these two groups combined are responsible for over $30,000, it might be worth our while to let our voice be heard.

SIDE NOTE: Planned Parenthood will lose $30 million in Title X funding next year unless they stop giving abortion counseling. This will happen in result of an action taken by Otis Bowen, the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services on January 21, 1987.

Bowen's order stated the Federal Government would no longer give any Title X money to any abortion counseling group like Planned Parenthood unless they discontinued any abortion counseling.

Opinions

Fine Line

Desperation

Jef Maynard

I am part of an environmental phenomenon right this minute as I sit here typing.

Every four minutes my mind is being drained.

I use the word processors on the fifth floor of the library. Under varying degrees of duress, this is where I hack away weekly, at the molten sponge-rubber mass lodged in my cranial cavity, mining for ideas, finding mostly junk, and, of course, dense, resilient sponge-rubber.

Last week I wrote, under extreme duress, (i.e. Stoutonia deadline T minus 81 minutes and counting) about the topic of thermonuclear warfare. I wanted a serious issue, not just the usual blather about foreign trade, school spirit, holy spirits, distilled spirits or maggots.

My spirit just wasn't enthused. I don't know very much about what is going on around me lately. I've been busy, out of touch, preoccupied.

I am sitting, like last week, at a terminal in the far corner, away from the entrance, near the fire-escape, under the air-conditioner, (although from where I am, the far corner is the entrance. You should ignore this confusing and pointless digression if you can. Did I mention the contest I'm in for the largest number of prepositional phrases?)

The air conditioner is on.

The incoming air or "fresh air" blows in through a duct no larger than six by twelve inches. It is about the size of a common heating duct in a house.

Like those common ducts, it has a series of parallel fins in front to direct the air, because the fresh air might shoot aimlessly into the room without the fins, possibly accumulating in pockets, therefore suffocating people working where there was no air.

Behind this is another set of directional blades, perpendicular to the first group. This second set looks to be movable within 45 degrees or so, attached to a lever like that on home vent units. This lever looks to be almost closed.

The air conditioner is on a cycle that seems to last around four minutes. At the moment, it is in the duldrums phase, which lasts about two minutes.

It is blowing a minimum of air, making a minimal air-gushing sound. Unfortunately, the air conditioner starts blowing more and more air through the duct. This produces more vibration on the two sets of fins. Moving air on these fins, or reeds, as I might loosely describe them, creates a sound, a constant loud sound.

The air conditioning cycle builds a crescendo for about two minutes, reaching its loudest; then descreases volume for about as long, content to hum along for another two minutes. After which time, the whole thrilling cycle repeats, probably for as long as there will be air to breathe.

On the windy crescendo, I think faster and brighter thoughts. The noise is like the sound of jet-engines building thrust for take-off, to soar into loftier spaces. Faster, louder, the engines implore, compel...

But as the cycle descends in volumne, the ideas come much more slowly, dragging drearily down to the depths of the data board until I reach a point where I can barely think.

Until the cycle starts on the upswing. I can think again, and move, and respond.

The problem with the duct is that the fins with the lever are nearly closed. This forces the increasing volume of air through a constant size opening. It does not sound like a dozen clarinets.

In an attempt to return my mind to its own tempo, free of this addictive cycle, to rid my life forever of this puffed-up metronome, I am going to sneak over and tamper with University Property. I am going to Open The Vent. It is my only chance to regain the mind which is under the control of the University machine, before it is too late.

I wheel over my chair and stand on it. Just as I reached the lever, the computer lab assistant said, politely but stearnly, "Get off the furniture."

Getting it straight

Every week I read your column (Gene Emahiser.) Every week I wonder why I did so, because it usually makes me very angry, and also sad at your extremely narrow view of the world. I think it is a shame you are stuck away here in little Menomonie, instead of in a larger city where you might learn more.

It started when I read your comments on music, back in the fall, specifically your discussion of secular music, which you equated with the antichrist. For me, the daughter of a concert pianist and a cellist, this was unbelievable. I grew up listening to such diverse music as Beethoven, Bach, Vivaldi, Stravinsky and George Crumb. Each has a totally different style. Each defined a new movement in music and each has validity on his own. Incidentally, Bach not only wrote great music for the church - he also wrote a lot of secular music. Was he the antichrist?

I dismissed my anger at your uninformed commentary, saying to myself "this guy just doesn't know much about music." I don't have time to waste being angry about things like that.

Then I read your pre-Christmas column, about Santa Claus (now HE was the Antichrist!) You wondered where the myth about Santa Claus came from. This made me VERY angry, because as most people who know anything about Church history know, Santa Claus was an historical personage - his name was Nicholas and he lived in Holland around the 12th century. He is the patron saint of children and fishermen, among others. I was angry because I am weary of people like you displaying their ignorance.

I think that if you care much about what you profess to believe, you should start trying to learn a little about it. If you don't want to be bothered with educating yourself, then stop talking about things you don't know anything about.

Now you have done it again. In your previous column, you have consigned 90 percent of us to be damned because we don't subscribe to your narrow point of view. In your latest column, you seem to have decided that the 10 percent who supposedly agree with you are damned unless they will take the actions you decree. Who do you think you are?

Jesus Christ hung out with a bunch of common (people), fishermen, and a former prostitute. He even ate dinner with a TAX COLLECTOR who was considered to be ritually unclean by Orthodox Jews of the time. He certainly would not be among your group today - he believed in love, while your actions do nothing to unite people but only divide them. I suggest that you think about what I have written. I also suggest that if you're not involved with a church, you get involved. Consult your priest or pastor. Pray for some openmindedness and compassion. You are going the wrong way.

Sincerely,
Alison Fredericksen

CAMPUS SLANT/ What do you think of the proposed staff cuts next year?

By Brian Kraimer

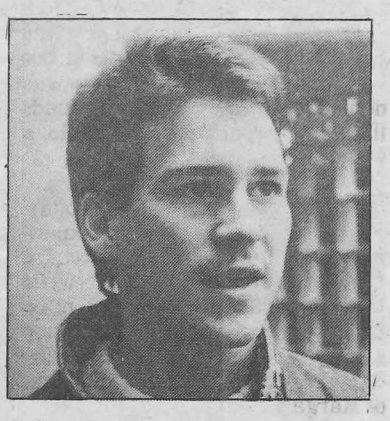
Dave Jasperson,
Technical Education,
Freshman,

If it is necessary to cut the staff members, then it should be done. If they did cut any staff members, they should really do some in-depth studies to see who should be getting cut. If they do not study it enough then they should be really careful about who they do cut.



James Cornell,
Technical Education,
Sophomore,

I do not like the idea of staff members being cut, but if it has to be done then it should. If they could find some alternative action it would be better. I am going into teaching myself, but until alternative sources are explored, to cover their salaries, nothing can be done but cut them.

Rhonda Miller,
Fashion Merchandising,
Freshman,

They should not cut any staff members. They will be piling everyone into fewer classrooms with fewer teachers. There are not that many teachers in the different departments as it is right know.

Joel Johansen,
Applied Technology,
Sophomore,

If they cut staff members instead of actually cutting teachers, then I think it would be all right. Right now, there are a lot of seniors in the freshman English courses and such because of a lack of teachers to provide enough classes.

Wendy Moses,
H & R Management,
Sophomore,

I do not like the idea of loosing any teachers. A lot of the time, the classes are so big, there are just not enough teachers. I personally do not like the idea of large classes; I like learning in smaller classes or on a one-on-one basis.

The Ex-Police

Bottom Line

"He wonders if he too might have made a similar mistake."--David Byrne

He finds that copying Wordstar is a simple task. He puts his empty disk into the slot and gets himself an expensive program for nothing. He smiles as the pc obediently commits piracy.

Suddenly, the door bursts open. A high-powered automatic weapon neatly parts his hair down to his gizzard.

Meanwhile, a freshman is hanging his newly acquired Budweiser light in the window of his dorm room. The warm glow of neon gives his room the personality that no similar closet should be without.

Before he knows what's happening, a circular hole is cut in his ceiling. A pole drops down, along with a pair of armed stormtroopers.

"Freeze, EX-POLICE!" one shouts at him, letting loose a burst of bullets which obliterate the Bud light. "Just how long did you think you could get away with breaking dorm rules, dogbreath?"

The EX-POLICE begin to interrogate the freshman. He watches, in horror, as they pour his contraband Old Milwaukee all over his Van Halen albums.

"Look, we know all about you," they tell him. "Underage drinking was just the beginning of your contempt for the law; you kids are all on dope. Before we got kicked off the force, we weren't able to stop the likes of you from taking over our town."

The freshman nervously eyes his bong which has been gone undetected by the probing eyes of the EX-POLICE. He decides to try to divert their attention; "Say, didn't I see you guys in that Brazil movie?"

The stench of bongwater soon betrays its presence. Hot lead soon reduces the freshman to something resembling Tainter's pizza.

The ex-police shake their heads over the oozing corpse. "Another drug-related death," one says. "We better take off before the real police get here."

Across town, the city attorney is telling a reporter that the SSA is trying to use a referendum to get students out to vote. This could result in the (gasp) election of three students to the mighty city council.

The EX-POLICE read the paper and are alarmed into action. They have no idea that the city attorney is grossly overestimating the intelligence of the SSA.

As the election approaches, the EX-POLICE plan a crushing blow that will keep the dreaded student body in the dark about the election.

They'll blow the Stoutonia office and one of its columnists to hell.

The city can sleep peacefully now. Students who break the rules or simply want some say in them won't be around for long--thanks to the EX-POLICE.

Speak for yourself

To begin with, I would like to commend you (Jef Maynard) on your article "Mad Monday". A majority of the article made complete sense. I enjoyed and agreed with all ot the writing until I read the last paragraph. Needless to say, that is why I am responding.

I was captured by your ingenious way of creating a realistic scene for The War To End All Wars. However, I was thrown out after taking in the last paragraph referring to our so called "weazel."

It has occurred to me that you have considered all of the consequences of The War such as MAD (Mutually Assured Destruction), but have left out the most important mutual situation. This mutual situation involves two men, one who you told "to cut the crap," and the other turns out to be the person who keeps our so called "nutty old cowboy moviestar" from dropping his guns. Yes, I am talking about Presidents Reagan and Gorbachev's mutual situation.

Being so explicit, I am surprised you missed the situation. With this, I leave you one question: If we drop our guns and reach for the sky, doesn't that present a perfect opportunity for Gorbachev to take our guns?

I hope you can understand what I am getting at. And next time, please don't speak for the townspeople. They have their own voice, partner!

My perspective

Stoutonia,

I wrote this poem to help keep my life in perspective.I am offering it, now, to the student body with the hope that by understanding the actual pain and torture that human beings are experiencing, they can better appreciate their own lives.

I was honestly mad at my roommates because I was the only one buying toilet paper. What a joke!

I joined Amnesty International because of their efforts to create a humanity that may, someday, even worry about toilet paper.

Sincerely,
Andrew Jackson

LISTEN!
The sound I heard
Was not a word
It was a weap, a moan
A life gone, beneath a stone

He is a man! I tried
Or was. I cried
Who are we, you can't set free
What are we, you can't let be Slashed and cleaved and slaughtered

Meat and bone and visage altered
Minds twisted, wrenched, and raped
Apathetic man stood agape

Civil man should realize
God does not come from the skies
The cries from your tortured brother
He only hears through one another

God will change reality
With people like you and me
We all must learn our part
Be still and listen to your heart

Andrew Jackson

Graphics workshop encourages students

by J.M. Dauplaise

Beginning with the first day of school, most students hear annual speeches on the evils of copying other people's work. Last Friday and Saturday, one hundred students met in the Crystal Ballroom at the Student Union and were boisterously encouraged to both trace and copy. These students were participants in the Mike Lin Graphics workshop.

The workshop, attended by fifty students on each day, was aimed at helping those in design and design oriented majors to loosen up their rendering styles. They were encouraged to work quickly and with confidence.

The program was taught by Mike Lin, a professor of landscape architecture at Kansas State University. Lin is an ASLA recognized leader in architectural rendering methodology. In the past fifteen years he has lead numerous workshops and seminars at more than forty universities across the United States.

Lin was assisted by two Stout students, both in the Interior Design program, Sue Gauger and Brenda Bennett. The two travelled to Kansas earlier this year for a two week intensive course taught by Lin from January second through the thirteenth.

Gauger and Bennett laugh as they recall their departure for Kansas at 5:00 a.m. on New Year's Day. Both feel the experience was absolutely more worthwhile than the New Year's festivities they could have taken part in.

"He gives you a lot of confidence in your ability to draw," said Gauger.

After returning from the two week course, Gauger received a phone call from Lin saying that he would be in Minneapolis and, if there was enough interest, would be willing to come to Stout to teach a seminar on his principles of loose graphics.

There turned out to be more than enough interest. The Friday session filled quickly, and arrangements were made to extend Lin's visit through Saturday to accommodate the students. Even with this extension, a number of people were unable to secure a seat at the seminar.

Anyone familiar with the time demands placed upon students in the design area will understand why the seminar filled so quickly. Mike Lin approaches graphics with a loose rapid style which many found very appealing. Lin showed students how to sketch in a matter of minutes a well done drawing which might ordinarily require hours of attention.

The room was a sea of rapidly flying Design markers and colored pencils as the students readily adapted to Lin's teachings. Papers flew as students drew barns, bedrooms and blowdryers. Backed by Lin's enthusiasm students quickly noticed progress in their work.

"It's like a night and day difference," says Gauger referring to the metamorphosis of the students' renderings.

Lin encouraged students to trace and copy to both save time and familiarize themselves with the subjects. If something is done repeatedly, Lin theorizes, it becomes second nature and eventually one needs neither to trace or copy, but simply knows instinctively how to draw a particular subject well.

Lin guided the seminar participants over a loudspeaker system, and incorporated the use of video monitors to show them technical detail. He also used the monitors to display students' work, emphasizing the improvements they were making.

"That's very nice." Lin was heard saying throughout the day.

Lin says, "I enjoy watching how people can improve in a short time. Confidence comes from improving."

Lin was pleased with the student's work but says, "Most people here are too tight. They are afraid to draw and make mistakes."

In summing up his seminar, Lin states, "The more you draw, the more mistakes you can make. The more principles you learn, the more success you will gain; therefore, the more confidence you will obtain." Said one participant, "It was worth a lot more than ten bucks."

One-hundred design students gathered in the Crystal Ballroom in one of the two sessions and spent the day drawing with Lin's instruction, students found that improvement was inevitable.

UW-Stout Symphonic Singers are a 56 year musical tradition

by Jennifer Tooley

For more than 56 years, a musical tradition has existed at UW-Stout. The University Symphonic Singers, a men's and women's choir, has performed at Commencement Exercises, Parent's Weekends, and the Chancellor's Christmas Party, to name a few of this enthusiastic group's performances.

Many Stout students are unaware of the existence of musical groups, such as the singers, on campus. Because Stout does not offer a degree in music, many assume that nothing musical is available. Dr. Patrick Liebergen, choral director at Stout, would like students to know otherwise.

"(We) make art," said Liebergen. "I try to let every person who wants to sing in our choir."

Students enter the choir from varied musical backgrounds. Some have much experience, a few are former music majors, and some students have no training at all. What matters to Liebergen is the desire felt by the student, "You have to love music and love to sing."

> "You have to love music —Patrick Liebergen"

This spring, the Symphonic Singers will perform pieces from Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess", contemporary arrangements from the works of Stephen Foster, and some spiritual and classical pieces, including a work by Mozart.

Students are asked to make a year commitment to the choir, and recieve one credit per semester. Attendance at three weekly rehearsals, a one day fall tour, a four day spring tour, and all choral performances are required for the members. This fall, the group went to City Center in Minneapolis . This spring, they will be going to Madison to perform at the Capitol and at several local schools.

The Symphonic Singer's Spring Concert will be held April 4.

Unlike most courses, the Symphonic Singers are considered a student organization and must petition with the Student Senate for funds in the spring. For this reason, they are also available to sing at community events and for campus organizations.

For students who wish to "explore other avenues of life," the Symphonic Singers maybe a place to start.

The Heartbreakers play the Great Hall

by Jef Maynard

You could call it: A day in the life, 200 Motels—Life on the Road. The Heartbreakers play The Great Hall, at The Great Stout. One thing is certain, this band gets around.

According to Larz, (yes, with a "z"), Heartbreaker's venerable sound man, this show was one of a string of seven one-night gigs in nine days. After a few days off, they'll be at Loose Ends on 10, in the Cities, tonight through Sat.

They just left Florida, and then, in their miraculous way of booking agents, they take the scenic route back to Coco Beach, Florida—through Thunder Bay, Canada, up there by the Arctic Circle, eh.

Larz had a good feeling about Thursday night's show on The Great Stage at The Great Hall, as did the members of the band. Heartbreaker is an upbeat bunch, playing on an upbeat night.

It's Showtime and Heartbreak hit the stage with, what else, Pat Benatar's song "Heartbreaker." The Stout audience had not yet arrived. I had a strange feeling an audience was not going to be part of the program.

Petite blond lead singer Pamela Lynn yielded nothing in her enthusiastic delivery. She had nothing to fear, because even if the audience disliked the act, CMP, security, and the crew had the audience outnumbered, at first.

Playing familiar tunes in good night clubs is what this band is all about. Guitarist Mark Reuter's natural voice came through on a tune by The Hooters, and the group vocals on The Outfield number pleasurably matched the challenging song.

Sound quality in The Great Hall, at The Great Stout is tough to achieve according to the top local sound man, Mark Rolle. "I think the band was under-powered. The wattage could be doubled for a place like that, but they're a club band and probably don't play big joints like that very often." I have to agree, the sound was thick, with less percussion and bass than ideal.

Larz gave the mix a good vocal sound and punched instrument solos when the power was there.

> "These guys turned me into an animal
> —Pamela Lynn"

Heartbreaker gets a heap of subjective credit for this show for a lot of reasons. Originally, they were booked as an opening act to the famous one-song band The Rainmakers. For Heartbreaker, a couple of big bills, play their best dozen tunes through a concert-size sound system, and then have a good time.

The Rainmakers were a tentative deal, and decided not to play out at this time, opting for a prolonged stay in the studio. CMP stayed with the Heartbreaker contract.

Stout can be a tough patch of thistles on a band's schedule if the students don't know the group. Heartbreaker appealed to a crowd that continued to grow, a good sign to any group.

An undeniable element in bar band psychology is the cocktail factor. A band responds to audience gusto, or lack of it, and Heartbreaker played to a "dry house," filled with basically sober people. People who came to dance.

You may have seen the current MTV release from the Don Norton album, "Most of the girls like to dance, but only some of the boys do."

By the middle of Heartbreaker's first set, there was a charged-up bevy of predominately young women up front doing all 16 dances. Standing at a safe distance behind them, was a cresent of people, mostly males. This is a common sociological configuration in bars.

I heard this comment concerning the women, "They look too young to get into the bars. They're trying to burn off a few hormones." That could be.

The band members have a likable character onstage, though maybe a bit tame. The bass player, Kenny Haaland, and guitarists Reuter, and Jim Coughlin worked up some entertaining guitar choreography, which was meant more for laughs than to imitate some famous Bon Jovi jive. Coughlin also added some nice guitar leads.

Between sets, the band members talked about their group and tour schedule. The single woman in the group, Pamela Lynn, commented on her treatment among seven men, "They treat me really well, kind of like a sister," to which stage tech Trevor Ravin added, "sure, somebody else's sister."

"These guys turned me into an animal, I used to be Snow White," Lynn clarified.

The group manages a tough tour schedule especially well in spite of several recent and on-going personnel changes. Lynn joined the group within the last six months. So recently, their agency hasn't even had time to release publicity posters with her in the group.

Also remarkable is the changing of drummers from current man, Troy McDunn to a new drummer. Without breaking their tour stride like most bands might, the drummers are rotating in and out on the road, trading places on various tunes.

The second of two long sets went smoothly and the band loosened up to fill The Great Hall with a danceable mix that included a Billy Idol medley, Z Z Top's "Stages", and a polished version of "Promises," by Benatar.

The group ended their show with an impressive bit of synthesizer dexterity by Pamela Lynn on the Head East hit you'd recognize by the chorus line, "Take my love, I'm going down for the last time." The whole tune got the best they had to offer, including an outstanding melodic line by Haaland on bass.

Heartbreaker took a potentially dismal situation and turned it into a dance party. No small achievement here in Thistletown.

Before a casually late audience the Heartbreakers performed the first C.M.P. concert of the semester. Lead singer Pamela Lynn joined the band so recently that face doesn't appear on the publicity photo. "They treat me like a sister," she says of her band mates, including Mark Reuter, guitarest, Kenny Haaland, bass player, Troy McDunn, drummer. The band entertained the gathering with danceable mixes from Pat Benatar, Billy Idol, and ZZ Top.

Campus Cuisine

Athletic Nutrition

Denise Cain

Often, when I write this column, I deny being an adequate cook and someone who cares about nutrition. This is simply not true. People who know me, know that I strongly believe in the importance of good food and a healthy body.

This week's Campus Cuisine is stepping into a new court that I find fascinating: Sport's Nutrition. Sport's Nutrition is a field in dietetics that studies the relationship between diet and athletic performance.

One individual who shares my interest in Sport's Nutrition is Mark Stevens. Mark has been an aggressive Stout basketball player the past four years. For the past two months he has followed a book by Dr. Robert Haas entitled Eat to Win that has sound information on how to improve your athletic performance through the foods you eat.

Eat to Win does not expose any new miracle foods that will magically make you a Olympic athlete. It is a book that uses common sense, balanced eating and healthy cooking to improve your overall athletic ability.

Many professional and non-professional athletes have followed the advise of Dr. Haas. He has advised members of the U.S. Ski Team, professional football players, swimmers, and tennis players, including Martina Navratilova.

Stout's own version of Larry Bird (Mark Stevens) started Dr. Haas' basketball focused diet during semester break because he wanted to lose 15 pounds and improve his speed and response time. Mark started the diet in category three, "Peak Performance". The other two categories include "Getting in Shape" and "Staying in Shape".

Before Mark started the diet he had his blood chemistry test taken as advised by Dr. Haas. The test is used to compare your beginning results with future results. The Student Health Center at Stout can give a blood chemistry test free while also determining that you are fit to be on the diet.

Mark feels confident with Dr. Haas' diet because, "He individualizes his nutritional advice for you based on your own blood chemistry, which will enable you to achieve that winning edge."

The diet is not complex to follow. It utilizes normal, affordable foods, that do not take large amounts of time or effort to prepare, especially if moderate quantities are made that can be easily warmed up.

After following the diet for approximately two months, Mark notes a difference in his ability, "I have been able to achieve great heights of energy, stamina, and endurance. At times I feel like I could run forever."

I felt like I could write forever after reading much of the book and talking with Mark, who was casually sipping on what seemed to be a tank of water. Mark's favorite food out of Dr. Haas' book is brown rice so I thought I would print a brown rice dish that looked appetizing and easy to make.

Broccoli Brown Rice Hollandaise

3 cups broccoli flowerettes, cooked and chopped
6 egg whites beaten until stiff
1 cup skim milk
2 cups cooked brown rice
6 Tbsp. Parmesan cheese, grated
5 dashes hot sauce
1/2 tsp. crushed coriander seed
1 tsp. thyme
1 Tbsp. lemon juice

Preheat the oven to 350-degrees. Add milk to beaten egg whites. Gradually add 5 Tbsp. Parmesan cheese, hot sauce, coriander seed, thyme, and lemon juice. Beat until smooth. Add broccoli and brown rice. Spray a 2-quart casserole dish with Pam. Pour mixture into dish and sprinkle with 1 Tbsp. of Parmesan cheese. Bake 35 to 40 or until golden brown. Cool 10 minutes before serving.

One Point Perspective

Hair

Jean-Marie Dauplaise

Sixteen years ago a phenomonally awful photograph was taken of a young girl in Superior, WI. She was smiling broadly; obviously oblivious to the ridiculous ponytail protruding from the top of her cranium, held tight by a tri-colored pink ribbon.

The one inch long ponytail was somehow fashioned by the girl's mother from the remnants of what was, back in 1970, called a "pixie". It just so happens that the mother who attempted to salvage her daughter's femininity from the ridiculously shorn head was mine. Thanks mom.

Thankfully, the art of hair design has evolved since that tragic day. There are, however, so many options available now that it's nearly impossible to decide what to do. Unless, of course, one happens to be bald.

For those who do have hair a myriad of products are available to mold, sculpt, style, control, color, highlight, and condition their hair. I am personally very embarrassed by the number of hair care products I personally own and use. A quick inventory includes three cans of Aqua Net hairspray in Ultra-Hold, Super Hold, and Super-Hold Unscented, L'Oreal Hair Gel, Vidal Sassoon Hair Gel, Vidal Sassoon Colorific Mousse, two tubes of Avon Curl Activator, and a bottle of shampoo that smells like coconuts and pineapples.

Although I sound like a fanatic, I do at least read and follow the directions on the products I own. A person I know, who shall remain nameless, has very nice long blonde hair. One day she decided she'd like it to be black. Her hair was green for two weeks. It said in three places on the package do not use on blonde or bleached hair. I will refrain from further comment on this subject, but a certain adage does come to mind when I recall this situation.

On the other hand, there are those with very dark hair who bleach their hair blonde. I have never seen natural results from such procedures. A former boss of mine at the Holiday Inn tried this. She looked like Miss Piggy in brown polyester. Of course, her Adolf Hitler eyebrows did nothing to enhance her blonde facade.

My prize this week for outrageous hair mutilation goes to women with what I term, "Evangelist's Wife's Hair". To achieve this look, tune in to your favorite t.v. evangelist show. If you wait long enough, the devout host's wife will appear. The only thing exceeding the cost of the jewelry she wears is the cost of the hair spray required to keep her hair suspended a full eighteen inches from her scalp in every imaginable direction. Another key element in this hairstyle is the two curls located at the hairline directly above the penciled in eyebrows. These curls somewhat resemble insect antennae, but are infinitely less attractive.

The runner up this week goes to "Country Singer Hair." This hairdo (what a word) is similar to "Evangelist's Wife's Hair" but generally involves the addition of some preposterous ornament. This ornament often incorporates a theme. For example, at Christmas time, it is not unusual to see glittery flocked poinsettas embedded in the coiffs of Nashville's talented bevy of stars.

Although I find great amusement in the hairstyles displayed in the world around me, I have so far left unmentioned the most amusing source of amazing hair designs ever compiled. Chances are you have such a volume in your own home and don't even know it. I am referring to my parent's high school yearbooks. Dad, next time you laugh at my hair go check out that nifty pompadour on page 62.

Pawn to show award winning film

by Mark Graham

Under the splendid direction of Walter Lang,director of such films as "Sitting Pretty" and "There's No Business like Show Business","The King and I" loyally conveys Richard Rodger and Oscar Hammerstein's broadway musical classic "Anna and King of Siam" to the silver screen.

With the help of two superlative performances by Yul Brynner and Deborah Kerr, the film received seven Academy Award nominations and won five of them. The film also helped Yul Brynner win his first and only Oscar for Best Actor.

"The King and I" is basically the story of a woman hired to bring order to a royal household. A 19th-century King of Siam (Yul Brynner) hires a stubborn English governess (Deborah Kerr) to bring Western scientific knowledge and customs to his many children and wives which his Siamese society lacks. She expects the courtesies and amenities which would be accorded a governess in England and she clashes with the forceful King,who must have subjects who are obedient.

She challenges the King's authority also based on cultural customs, but eventually comes to respect and love the King,who also learns to admire her. Rita Morena (Tuptim) portrays the role of a princess from another Easteen kingdom who has been given to the King as a present and eventually becomes the governess's assistance.

A great deal of the success of "The King and I" goes to the dancing lesson which Kerr gives Brynner in the classic number "Shall We Dance" and Rita Morena's Tuptim in her ballet sequence. Also, the musical score by Rodgers and Hammerstein is superb including such musical hits as "I Whistle a Happy Tune", "Getting to Know You", and "My Lord and Master". The story theme,along with the music of Rodgers and Hammerstein,is responsible for the film's continued popularity with audiences of all ages.

"The King and I" will be shown February 6th and 7th in the Pawn at 9:00 p.m.

Checkin' out the Menomonie local band scene

by Stephanie Weiss

Knowing full well that everyone out there has been waiting in fingernail-biting silence for the second of two articles on the local band scene, here it is.

Last Minute

If there were a category in the music awards for "Most Appropriate Band Name," Stout's Last Minute would probably win it.

Formed last fall, these guys do everything at the last possible second and amazingly it all seems to work out well.

John Ulrich, bassist and vocalist, pawned off the interview for this article to guitarist and vocalist, Dan Syzmoniak, at the last minute. Also playing with the band are guitarist and back-up vocalist, Rick Van Ert and drummer Paul Scmitt.

The band does 60's, 70's, some 80's rock, as well as originals.

"We don't sing selected poppy hits," said Ulrich. "We last minutize' our music like everyone else izes.'"

The band practices "whenever anyone has any free time," said Syzmoniak.

Last Minute has appeared in Boyd, Cadott, opened for DCver a few times and recently did a gig for the Stout Antique Auto Club's Halloween Party.

Keeping in sync with the band's unwritten tradition, bassist Ulrich was picked up at the last second.

"I pretended I knew how to play bass," said Ulrich, "so they'd let me join the band."

Like other bands in Menomonie, Last Minute plays for fun, not money, and, around here, that seems to be the only way you can do it.

"The story in Menomonie," said Syzmoniak, "is that you call the bars and get the run around....it's tough getting booked."

Though it is a hard job to get a gig lined up, Syzmoniak said "Once you're on stage and play a couple songs, everything 's all right."

Race

In just over three years, the founding members of Race have gone from near musical illiteracy to a four piece band doing live gigs.

Barry Larson on keyboards, along with Mark Anderson on bass started playing together their first year of college. A year-and-a-half later they picked up drummer Mike Bechard and guitarist Dave Aschenbrenner.

In the early stages of playing together, the guys "used to just jam a lot."

"We didn't do any gigs," said Anderson, "but we drank a lot of beer."

Up until last year, Race was short a vocalist. The band's first gigs were at The Ranch's house parties, where the band would set up in the living room and play for three or four hours.

"We played just the music," said Larson, "no words and we knew about seven songs."

"Our first major breakthrough was out of frustration," said Anderson, "Barry and I started singing because we were spending all our time looking for a vocalist."

"We thought we could do just as well as the people we tried out," said Larson, "and that way we'd have one less person to deal with."

Because they "want to come off interesting, not typical," Anderson and Larson decided to go after a different crowd. They sat down and analyzed the bands currently in the area.

"There's mostly heavy metal and Top 40 bands around here," said Anderson, "then there's punk, but it seems there's a lot of space in between."

Race aimed at the "space in between" and plays some U2, Billy Idol and Power Station, along with other music.

"We play basic college crowd music," said Anderson, "and really gear ourselves toward the college crowd."

Once they decided what crowd they were after, they had to pick a band name.

"We wanted something short, simple, moving and easy to remember," said Anderson.

"The name Race sort of irritated people at first," said Larson, "but it kind of grows on you."

Race kept growing musically, but remained a small band on purpose. With only four people it is much easier to keep everyone together and have a tighter sound.

"The concept of the band," said Anderson, " is to have four basic, versatile instruments so the band isn't over-guitared."

In the Spring of '86 Race had their first gig at the Marion. "It was our first, major, full three-and-a-half-hour blowout," said Anderson, "and for how nervous we were, I think people really dug it."

Since last semester, however, Aschenbrenner has left the band and Bechard will be graduating in May. Short a guitarist, Race is on what they hope is a temporary hold.

"Dave was the first musician we worked with that saw eye-to-eye with Barry and I ," said Anderson, "we built ourselves up a lot last semester with him."

Even though Race is in a bind, they plan to keep on playing. "We want people to take us seriously," said Anderson, "not overly serious, but serious enough so we're not taken as a joke."

The Planktons

Cutting an album is the dream of many bands. The Planktons have recorded two cassettes, but what this band dreams about is getting gigs and playing for someone other than their moms.

The Planktons, made up of three silly guys from River Falls, play most all their own songs and music. Eric Hampton takes care of the band's "bass slappin', keyboard tappin' and vocal rappin'," while Mitch Croes takes care of "drums and stuff."

Hampton and Croes, both Stout students, are three with University of Minnesota student Rich Cobian. Cobian is the band's master of "electric geetar, Mrs. Croes, acoustic geetar, sangin', hangin' and twangin'."

You have to wonder about a band called The Planktons. The name brings to mind different sea creatures and slimy things.

"We used to be called "The Solomon Grundies,'" said Hampton, "but we decided to hold a school wide contest in our high school to help choose a name...thus, "The Planktons.'"

The Planktons' first recording, "Out of the Freezer," includes their classics, "Grandpa Raisinhead" and "Drugs and Stuff." Their second recording, "Three Trees," includes more original "Plank-tunes."

"They used to play "Grandpa Raisinhead' on the campus station," said Hampton, " and a lot of people liked "I Walk the Line,' our Johnny Cash mutilation."

"We are kind of a silly band, on one of our songs we doubled our voices a few times so it sounds like there's thirty of us."

Not uncommon with the local bands, The Planktons are low on funds. "Because we are strapped for cash and want to have some stage lighting," said Hampton, "our next plan is to take table lamps on stage for a light show."

"We don't take ourselves very seriously," said Hampton, "and we are having fun because we sure as hell aren't getting rich."

The common problem with playing in Menomonie is that there is no money to make. The only way to remedy this is to encourage everyone out there in "Barland" to be a little more adventurous and try to see some of these bands.

Spontaneous Combustion

Music strikes revenge

James 'Unk' Falkofske

I woke up on the wrong side of bed this morning. That's not too hard considering that the roommates have been redesigning the interior of our house lately. They are in the process of planning a social gathering and have designated my room as part of the party zone. The only thing sacred to the area, that I have paid hard earned rent towards, is a bed (that will no doubt be moved several times during the coming week).

To make matters worse, I had the misfortune to turn on the television to see the Beasty Boys on MTV. "You have the right to P-A-R-T-Y" they insanely screamed over and over again. I had been up all night long reviewing materials for a new job, and the last thing I wanted to hear about was a party.

I killed the boob tube and clicked on the radio to find out how cold my walk to calculus would be. I heard more insane screams, coming not only from my radio, but from one of the roommies. He was attempting to sing along with Aretha Franklin, falling several octaves short.

Unnerved as I was about the upcoming adventures of the Diaper Oasis, I proceeded to stick my fingernail in my eye popping in my B&L's as Aretha hit a final scream in the end of "Jumpin' Jack Flash."

You ever have one of those days?

The next song was Peter Gabriel's "Big Time." I'm on my way of making it, I thought to myself, but I live in a small town, where people use small words. But I'll stretch my mouth to let all the big words come right out.

About this time, I stumbled into the kitchen where roommie No. 1 had left several pizza boxes from the night before. I grabbed a stale slice and gulped it down, walking into the shower.

I could still hear the radio under the spray of the ice cold water (someone had gotten up earlier than me), and I began to wonder what happened to all the good music that I used to listen to? Music that made a statement. Music that influenced change. Music that wasn't satisfied with Be-Bop. Listening to today's music reminds me of a Cheech and Chong movie/video I saw in which Chong was asked how to make a big rock hit. He said, "get a song that really sucks. You have to have a song that sucks. Then it will sell a billion." Is that what it's boiling down to? Not that I hate all of today's music, but I feel that much of it is too shallow, too synthetic. I really love "Big Time" by Peter Gabriel, but on the other hand, I wouldn't even label "You Have A Right To Party" as music. And it's not just the musicians that are getting lazy. Most of the radio stations that I know of are going to an automated format. For instance, WMEQ, the local commercial station, is planning to go to an automated format with a live DJ only during the "Morning Drive" (the early morning hours). Maybe I can see everyone else's laziness through my own. I am just finishing this column at midnight Monday, for the Tuesday deadline. Even so, either musicians are getting lazier about their lyrics or they are running out of ideas. Either way, until they get their acts together, I will stick to my old Eagles, Doors, Deep Purple, and Yes albums.

Gowns reveal "Love is in the air"

by Rhonda Olson

"Love is in the Air" is a display featuring a selection of vintage bridal gowns which have great artistic and historic value.

There are six gowns on display. The earliest gown was worn June 6, 1905, by Ethel Kline. She purchased the embroidered overdress with a creamy-gold underslip gown from Marshall Field's in Chicago, IL.

The gown was worn by Caroline Bosworth, Kline's daughter, in 1933. The 82-year-old gown was recently donated to the Apparel, Textiles, and Design Department by Bosworth. The other five bridal gowns are representative of gowns worn in the early 1900's.

The items on display have been donated or loaned to the Apparel, Textiles, and Design Department. "Donations of vintage clothing and textiles are always welcome," said Mrs. Bonnie Kirkwood, curator of the collection.

As curator, Kirkwood works in the restoration laboratory and organizes the displays, along with two assistant curators, students Nancy Egen and Karen Filla.

Many hours are devoted to the restoration and research of the garments, shoes, and accessories. Items are stored in metal closets instead of wooden closets, which tend to be destructive to the historical garments.

Some of the more fragile garments which can't be hung, are wrapped in acid free tissue paper to protect them from further damage. The curators inspect the vintage clothing and textiles. Cleaning and repairs are made when necessary.

A very sheer lining fabric is used to reinforce and support the antique garments. The curators painstakingly stitch the lining to the reverse side of the garment. The repairs are done so carefully that they are barely noticeable.

Kirkwood described collecting the wedding portraits and accessories, which are on display, as being "grand fun". She went on to say that the collection is used for learning purposes and is greatly appreciated by students studying historical costumes and textiles.

Students, faculty, and community members can view the collection free of charge from February 9 to 13, and from February 16 to 20 in the Home Economics building, room 369, between the hours of 10a.m. and 3p.m. Brochures providing detailed information about the items on display will be available at the exhibit's entrance.

Ruggers brave cold, beat Eau Claire 12-0

Brian and Jim assist on a tackle as P.J. closes into add support in this weekends Rugby match againt Eau Claire, which Stout won 12-0

by Slash La Freniere

Rugby players are strange people. After completing a grueling eight game fall season, you would think that the Stout Ruggers had enough. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Last Saturday the Stout Rugby Club staged an exhibition match against UW-Eau Claire and the Stout Centaurs were victorious, winning the match by a score of 12-0.

The weather could not have been better for winter rugby, as the conditions for the game were sunny and 21 degrees. In fact, some players wore shorts during the match. Other, more sane methods of combating the cold included smearing Vaseline on their shoes to protect feet from the cold, layering of long under wear, and using Icy-Hot on the extremities.

The hero of the day for the Centaurs was Tim Anderson. Anderson scored all twelve points for Stout. Four of them came on a 30 meter run for a try and then Anderson added two more points when he kicked the conversion after try.

Anderson also kicked two penalty kicks for six more points, as each penalty kick is worth three points. Said Anderson, "We had a good game overall and this game helped me personally to get my confidence back in my kicking."

This was a typical Stout-Eau Claire rugby match, and as usual there were many thundering tackles. The two teams have an intense rivalry and both teams share a general dislike for each other.

Newly elected Stout Rugby Club President Todd Johnson said. "I think that we were in better shape than Eau Claire was and we were better prepared than they were. But we also had the revenge factor in our favor because we lost a close match to Eau Claire in the fall."

Eau Claire threatened to score a few times during the second half, but Stout controlled the play for much of the game. The condition of the snow was not much of a factor for either team, however, some parts of the pitch were icy underneath the snow which made the footing for scrumdowns rather difficult.

The Stout Centaur "Killer B's" were not quite as fortunate against Eau Claire, as they lost their match by a 10-0 margin. The play of the Eau Claire backline was far superior to that of Stout's "Killer B's", and was key to the outcome of the match.

The Eau Claire backs had many long runs that featured picture perfect and elusive ball handling. This allowed Eau Claire to dominate the play of the ball and was responsible for their point total.

Both Stout and Eau Claire ruggers used this exhibition match as a warm up to next week's 10th annual Arctic Rugby Festival in Steven's Point. The two day tournament is the largest of it's kind in the Midwest during the winter months.

Centaur player Billy Ries said, "Eau Claire is a tough team and based on our performance against them, I think that we have a shot to do well at Arctic Fest."

The Stout Rugby Club would like to thank the many loyal fans who braved the cold on Saturday for their loyal support.

Cagers top Whitewater 73-72, Platteville over Stout 57-54

by Paul Emerson

For 24 hours last weekend, the UW-Stout men's basketball team stood alone atop the WSUC standings. But after Friday's thrilling come from behind win over the UW-Whitewater Warhawks, 73-72, the Blue Devils were upset by the UW-Platteville Pioneers, 57-54, on Saturday night.

The loss dropped Stout down to the number two spot, with a 7-3 conference mark. Meanwhile the UW-Eau Claire Blugolds vaulted into first place the same night with a 58-57 overtime win over Whitewater. Eau Claire's WSUC record improved to 7-2 with the win.

Stout 73 Whitewater 72

Senior Tom Gomolak scored the game's last four points in the final minute to pull out the win for Stout.

Gomolak who finished with 18 points, hit two freethrows with 44 seconds left to give the Blue Devils the one point victory.

Senior point guard Brian Ellingson had the hot hand on the night, hitting 6 of 8 3-point field goals, four in the second half, and totaled a game high 25 points.

Sophomore Luther Forrest hit two 3-point field goals, and had 12 points. Stout was led in rebounding by Dave Sandstrom, Rick Wynveen, and Ellingson, who all grabbed 4 boards each.

Head Coach Dewey Mintz said the key to Friday's win was that the Blue Devils committed just 10 turn overs in the game.

"Brian Ellingson played a super game, and Dave Sandstrom played some tough defense, he really shut out his man," said Mintz.

Sandstrom defended Whitewater's Duane Vance, and never allowed Vance to score a field goal the whole time he was on him. Vance did however, manage to score 15 points in between.

Mark Duckworth led Whitewater with 16 points, then Vance with 15, and Seifrez 14, (including hitting 4 of 5 3-point field goals).

> "Except for Tom Gomolak, our offense played out of control
> —Coach Mintz"

The Warhawks edged Stout in rebounding, 31-30. For the game, the Blue Devils connected on 29 of 57 shots from the floor for 51 percent, and hit 9 of 13 from the charity stripe for 69 percent.

Whitewater hit on 31 of 56 shots for 55 percent, and made just 3 of 7 freethrows for 43 percent.

Platteville 57 Stout 54

Stout won the close one Friday night, but on Saturday night the Pioneers turned the tables on the Blue Devils.

With the score tied, 51-51, and just over a minute to play, Platteville scored 4 unanswered points to go up 55-51, and then hung on to hand the Blue Devils just their third loss of the season.

"We struggled early, and than later we tried too hard and over applied ourselves," said Coach Mintz.

Although the game was tied at the half, 29-29, the Blue Devils just couldn't get on track all night. And to make matters worse, Stout suffered from some poor officiating, which Mintz said cut the team's morale.

"Except for Tom Gomolak, our offense played out of control. Gomolak kept us in it, or it wouldn't have been so close at the end," added Mintz.

Gomolak scored a game high 18 points to lead the Blue Devils, while John Patterson chipped in 14, and Brian Ellingson 9.

Stout hit on 18 of 46 shots for 39 percent, and made 15 of 23 freethrows for 65 percent. The Pioneers connected on 17 of 46 shots from the floor for 37 percent, and hit on 20 of 27 charity tosses for 74 percent.

Platteville was led by Tim Hofensperger with 14 points, and 12 points each from Randy Kazin and Steve Showalter.

After hosting the UW-River Falls Falcons in a rematch Wednesday (Feb. 4), the Blue Devils are idle this weekend and next week until traveling to UW-Stevens Point next Fridav.

Grapplers drop two meets over weekend

by Tim Nichols

The UW-Stout wrestling team found a hard time putting points on the scoreboard in dual meets against UW-Platteville and UW-Whitewater in Platteville last Wednesday night.

In their first meet against Platteville, the Blue Devils were handed a 37-9 defeat. Only two Blue Devils scored individual victories.

Wayne Hendrickson decisioned Steve Raczek of Platteville by a score of 5-3 in 167 lbs. class bout. Blue Devil Coach Michael Early was pleased with Hendrickson's performance.

"Wayne wrestled well against Steve Raczek, who could be considered one of the top two wrestlers in the conference," Early said.

The only other Blue Devil to notch an individual victory was Steve Smith at 177 lbs. Smith recorded a fall over Mike Henk of Platteville at 3:40 in the second period.

In their second meet of the evening, the Blue Devils found themselves in a similar predicament, taking a 47-5 loss at the hands of UW-Whitewater.

Coach Early had little to say about the meet but did say, "Whitewater is probably the toughest team we will wrestle this year. I look for them to be the team to beat in the conference."

Blue Devil Rich Rupp decisioned Bob Berlin of Whitewater 9-5 in the heavyweight match, while Keith Rusch tied Chris Henry of Whitewater 4-4 at 118 lbs.

Last Saturday the Blue Devils competed in the Upper Iowa Invitational at Fayette, Iowa. Coach Early was encouraged by the results saying, "I was really pleased with our overall performance."

Steve Smith was second overall in the 177 lbs. class. Smith raised his individual record to 16-14 for the season. Rich Rupp was fourth in the heayweight division. Larry Grein was fifth overall in the 190 lbs. category.

Keith Rusch captured sixth place at 118 lbs. Anthony Brown was sixth in the 142 lbs. category, and Wayne Hendrickson was seventh overall at 177 lbs.

The next home meet for the Blue Devils will be on Friday, February 6 against UW-Oshkosh at 7 p.m. at the Johnson fieldhouse. Prior to that home meet, the Blue Devils will be on the road for a meet against UW-Superior on Thursday, February 5th.

Football

Cosmas A. Whitten

Many people have questioned me as to the reason why I haven't written about football. After all, the Pro Bowl was this week and the Superbowl was last week. Well here's why:

During my high school years, all the boys in my neighborhood used to play football in the open field which was located in the next block from mine. I of course was never allowed to play, I was a girl.

I used to watch on the sidelines, cheering for the team of my choice, usually the one that was winning. I even stooped so low as to play cheerleader with some of the other girls on the block.

Everyday that I passed the in-progress football game, I always asked if I could play. Everyday I received the same response, "No."

I believed in myself that I could handle the pressure ot the game. I knew I could take a few pushes and shoves, after all I was the only girl on Maple Avenue that would put on boxing gloves and take a few good punches.

Finally the day came, a team was short one person, at last my chance. While laughing, one team captain picked me to be on his team.

During the game I played the most unimportant position. Even if I didn't have possession of the ball I was always knocked down. While I was running around the other players would stick their foot under mine, I always fell for that one!

I was the worst player in the history of Maple Avenue. By looking at me you would think I had made all the plays, I was more beat up and full of mud than any other player.

Finally my big chance came. The opposing team's quarterback was about to be sacked. He through the ball to me because he knew that I always ducked. Not this time though, I intercepted the ball and took off running.

My teammates were running right behind me to protect me from an offensive tackle. If there was one thing I knew I could do, it was out run the other players.

The end zone was quickly nearing, I heard all kinds of yelling. I decided to make this a dramatic moment so I slid into home base.

I was up on my feet, excited, I was jumping all around. I sure made one team happy, too bad it wasn't mine. I made one small mistake, I ran the wrong direction.

16 enthusiastic Stout students make up cheer and stunt team

by Darron Vanman

There are 16 individuals at Stout who collectively take the role as the cheer and stunt team. They have important responsibilities. Number one is to improve student morale. Two, to boost team spirit. And finally, help Stout in achieving its goals in athletics.

The cheer and stunt team work to accomplish these tasks by executing difficult stunts and screaming their lungs out. Senior Bruce Treptow, in his first year as a stuntman stated, "A lot of the stunts and mounts are some what difficult, but you get good at it."

Sophomore Laurie Johnson said, "We use simple ones(cheers) so the fans understand what we say."

"Let's go Stout", is a popular cheer among fans. Johnson also commented that it is nice having the band at the games, especially to play the school song.

The stunning stunts that are performed have definite reasons. Stunts sustain the pep(spirit) and help maintain precision for the group. Most of the stunts used by the cheer and stunt team require only simple balance, coordination, and timing. Although strength and power are essential.

In fact, the requirements for trying out for the team(in the fall) follow this. The women must weigh less than 120 pounds, while the men should be big and strong.

Treptow commented, "There is a lot of weight involved in the mounts. Your shoulders get sore, but you get used to it. Kinda like a football player getting used to being hit."

The cheer and stunt team is commanded by third year member, Karen Danielson. Danielson has a few expectations for the team. One, attend the two to three practices a week. Secondly, participate in as many games as possible. Every member is important to the team since partnerships are utilized. "We watch out for each other. We both have a responsibility," Treptow said.

The team's long season runs from fall to March. Each athletic season brings different feelings. Johnson said, "Football games are fun in the mud. The fans are dead during the games at times, and I sometimes ask myself. Why am I out here?"

The basketball season is the highlight for the cheer and stunt squad. Treptow agrees, "Basketball games are more exciting than football. There's always something happening that I sometimes forget to cheer."

The team cheers at all basketball games. Johnson commented, "The basketball players really appreciate us." Danielson added, "Fan support helps out 100", and hopes everyone comes to the basketball games.

The members relate different advantages for being part of the team. Danielson says they have plenty of fun, and that she has made a lot of friends.

Johnson said, "We have a blast. Treptow had a different feeling, "It's a good experience. I can do things that I once thought were impossible."

The cheerleaders include Mary Bollom, Pam Bryant, Deanna Christenson, Cindi Epstein, Amber Lyons, Stephanie Roth, and Amy Synder. The stuntmen are Ken Christenson, Brian Lanhart, Tom and John Payne, Van Swhwab, and Tom Zander.

In closing, remember there's more to the cheer and stunt team than "siss-boom-bah."

NATIONAL WOMEN'S SPORTS DAY

February 4 was national women's sport day. In Wisconsin, girls in high school are participating in greater numbers. Statistics for the last academic year showed 58,689 girls on teams in the state. That's 3.3% more than a year earlier. (Statistics provided by the Wisconsin Interscholastic Athletic Association)

On Wednesday, February 4, 1987 Washington D.C. was the meeting place for elite women athletes to meet with President Reagan, Secretary of Education William Bennett, and various members of Congress to help draw public attention to the benefits and importance of sport for girls and women.

Snowmobile Speed Run a success

by Slash La Freniere

Roaring engines and high speed runs down the track and world record speeds are typical of a summer drag race. Last Sunday, all of these elements were present in Menomonie as a part of the National Snowmobile Speed Run (NSSR sanctioned) snowmobile race. On the day, there were 17 world records set on Lake Menomin.

According to Mark Wagenius, a Stout Vets Club member who was chiefly responsible for organizing the event, speed run must be at an official NSSR sanctioned event to qualify for a world record. Each racer only gets 4 runs down the track. If their time is faster than a world record, they must back up that time with another run within 2° of the previous time to claim the record.

There are five separate classes and each class has it's own weight and engine size categories. Racers compete in their own classes for specific attempts at world record speeds.

The first class of the five is the Stock Class, which is a snomobile that would come right off of a show-room floor, had 7 world records in its class. Speeds ranged from 67 to 87 mph. The Modified Stock class, whose sleds have slight modifications within certain limits, saw 4 world records set. Speeds ranged from 78 to 116 mph. In the Open Modified class racers are allowed more freedom in their engine modifications. This class had 5 world records with speeds from 80 to 123 mph. Open Fuel class racers are allowed to use super high octane fuels. This class had only one world record set with a speed of 128.995 mph. There was a speed of 134 mph attained; however, the speed was not backed up.

In the unlimited class, racers are allowed to make any modifications to the machine that they desire. No world records were set, but Steve Danelius matched the world record time of 163.018 set by the Budweiser Sno-King team. Danelius failed to back the time up.

To hold a snowmobile to the track at such high speeds, 3/4 inch carbide steel studs are used on the belt of the machine. Conditions for the race were excellent, which helped to produce the many world records.

On the day, there were 17 world records set on Lake Menomin

Aside from the Stout Vets club, other groups involved in staging the event were as follows: Sigma Tau Gamma members provided beer sales, Stout Powerlifting Club members provided a majority of the security for the event, and food was sold by the Diamond Area Snow Drifters.

Two activities that also took place during the event were "Golf on Ice" by the Stout Golf Team, and "Bowling on Ice" provided by the Menomonie JC's. Stout Vets Club members are people who have served in the armed forces for two years in some fashion. They have been discharged and are now Stout students.

Wagenius and the rest of the Vets Club members were generally pleased with how the event went off. This years event was sponsored in part by Budweiser and the Vets club. Next year, as stated in the Vets Club constitution, they hope to have even more community and Stout involvement.

Proceeds from the event will go to the United Way and the Neilsville Vietnam Memorial Park.

Lady netters drop weekend games

by Paul Emerson

While the UW-Stout mens basketball team gained a split in two tough games against UW-Whitewater, and UW-Platteville over the weekend, the UW-Stout women's basketball team struggled in dropping both of their games, 100-44 to the Lady Warhawks, and 67-44 to the Lady Pioneers.

Through last weekends games, the Lady Devils record now stands at 0-10 in the WWIAC, and 0-16 overall.

Whitewater 100 Stout 44

"We basically just have trouble controlling the ball," said women's head coach Lynda Lee, and added, "they play as hard as the other team, they play determined, we just aren't getting any breaks."

The Lady Devils first took on the 10th ranked Lady Warhawks from Whitewater (NCAA Div.III), on Friday night, and from the opening tip, they were in for a long night.

"Whitewater started off quick, they have a really good team," said Lee, who also stated that, "we were plagued by turn overs and fouls, and you don't win games with that many mistakes."

Stout committed 39 turn overs in the game, to just 18 by Whitewater. The Lady Devils were whistled for 21 fouls, to a surprising 28 by the Lady Warhawks.

Junior Renee Kasten led Stout in scoring with 12 points, she also grabbed 5 rebounds, to tie with Justine Becker and Patti Cook in that department.

Becker, a freshman, scored 10 points as the only other Stout player to score in double figures, while junior Janet Turowski had 7 points.

For Whitewater, Lehman took game high honors with 21 points, while Podewils had 19 points, and Kreuser 11.

Platteville 67 Stout 44

"Platteville was a beatable team, we went in expecting a close game," said Lee. But the Lady Devils came out cold in the first half, hitting just 7 of 33 shots(21 percent), and dug themselves a hole too deep to climb out of.

Kasten, who Lee said, "always has a good game, and she is a good shooter," scored 15 points, and grabbed an impressive 23 re-

Justine Becker again hit double figures, scoring 11 points, while bounds to lead Stout in both categories.

Senior Patti Cook chipped in 6.

Stout finished with 18 of 64 shooting from the floor, 28 percent, and made 8 of 16 free throws, 50 percent.

Platteville was led by Laura Finnegan, who had a game high 17 points. The Lady Pioneers hit on 22 of 65 shots for 33.8 percent, and really cashed in at the charity stripe by making 23 of 29 free throws, for 79.3 percent.

Lee is troubled by the fact the Lady Devils have yet to put one in the win column, and had this to say, "I don't want to see them get used to losing."

The Lady Devils were to host UW-River Falls Wednesday (Feb. 4), and then, like the mens team, are off until next Friday when they travel to UW-Stevens Point on Feb.13.

Wednesday's home game kicked off the "Tiny Tots to Hot Shots," contest in which contestants first name the players pictures today, and then match those with their baby pictures.

"Entry forms have been sent to all the dorms," said Lee. Forms can also be picked up in the Phy. Ed. General Office, and of course, at the remaining 3 home games on the Lady Devils schedule.

Gymnasts lose, have best meet of season

by Cosmas Whitten

Last weekend the UW-Stout women's gymnastics team traveled to Marquette, Michigan for a dual meet against Northern Michigan University. Stout lost the meet 139.80 to 124.05 but the Lady Devils did not walk away frowning.

According to Head Gymnastics Coach, John Zuerlein, "The upper peninsula of Michigan agreed with us last weekend, giving us our first score over 120 this year. We really needed it to boost our season average."

Currently the Lady Devils are ranked ninth in the National Collegiate Gymnastics Association (NCGA). In order for the gymnastics team to qualify for the NCGA national meet to be held in Pennsylvania, they must be placed in the top seven.

"After watching the ladies compete last Saturday, I'd say our chances are fairly good at doing it," said Zuerleiln. Saturday's meet was off to a good start with four gymnasts scoring in the eights on vault. Sophomore Patti Roenitz lead Stout with an 8.4 followed by Carolyn Bjerke with an 8.25.

Uneven Parallel Bars went well, four of the five gymnasts competing bars hit their routine. Sophomore Kim Nelson was the leading scorer for Stout with a 7.64 to take sixth in the meet on bars.

"After my disasterous bar routine from the last meet I just gave it everything I had for this meet. I'm getting closer to the 8.0 that I want," said Nelson.

Stout put out its best performance ever on the balance beam with three of six gymnasts performing no fall routines. Sophomore Carolyn Bjerke had the highest scoring no fall routine. For Bjerke this was her personal best performance which scored 7.35.

"I wasn't as nervous for this meet. I've hit it in practice and have finally proved to myself I could hit it in a meet," said Bjerke.

The upper peninsula Michigan agreed with us last weekend.

Floor exercise was most definitely Stouts strongest event. Again the gymnasts turned in four scores in the eights. Sophomore Patti Roenitz and freshman Kelly Kramer tied for fifth place with scores of 8.55 which are the highest floor scores Stout has earned so far this year.

Besides scoring this years highest team score, all three of Stout's all around gymnasts turned in their personal best all around scores since the beginning of their college gymnastics career.

Sophomore Patti Roenitz scored a 32.15, Senior Cosmas Whitten scored 29.30 and Freshman Kelly Kramer scored 28.50.

The gymnasts have this weekend off, but will resume competition on Feb. 14 in Superior for the Sweetheart Invitational.

CHIPMUNK CAUSES STIR AT NATURE'S VALLEY

On Wednesday, January 28, tenants at Nature's Valley Apartments received a mysterious letter from someone or something claiming to be Chubbles Chipmunk, Esquire. With the letter, the residents were given a copy of the next year's rent rates - not yet released by the NVA management. In the leter received by the tenents, "Chubbles" claimed that Nature's Valley was providing the use of a 19" COLOR TELEVISION for anyone who signs a lease for 1987-88 before April 1, 1987. He further stated in his letter that Nature's Valley was having a drawing for a FREE YEARS LEASE and told the tenants to get the details from the Nature's Valley Office.

Julie Fleming, manager at Nature's Valley told this reporter in an interview that no one at NVA knows what Chubbles is. "Although Chubbles claims to be a resident here, we have no record of him."

When asked if the claims Chubbles had made were true, Ms. Fleming commented, "It seems unbelievable when you think of all other things Nature's Valley has to offer such as: OPTIONAL LEASE TERMS, FREE HBO, FREE PARKING, LAUNDRY FACILITIES, 27 NEWLY CARPETED APARTMENTS, FURNISHINGS AND MORE, but yes, we are also offering the use of a 19" COLOR TELEVISION for those who sign a lease with us before April 1, 1987 as an added incentive to sign early."

Assistant Manager, Rick Field explained the drawing for the FREE YEAR'S LEASE at Nature's Valley. All anyone has to do is to be included in the drawing is to stop by the office before 5:00 p.m., May 1, 1987 and register!"

Who is this Chubbles Chipmunk, Esquire? Where did he come from and what does he want? Why did he jump the gun and reveal all of Nature's Valley's exciting plans so early? You can be sure this reporter will not rest until these questions are answered!

Microwaves in

by Karen Smith

It is now legal for UW-Stout students to own microwave ovens in the resident halls.

The Cope committee, part of IRHC, conducted a survey among the students to see if microwave ovens were in demand, and if they might have any effect on the meal plan.

Doreen Kaminski, chairman of Cope, said that more than half of the students living on campus wanted to be able to own microwaves.

"Microwaves could be quite an improvement," Kaminski said. "They might help take away the illegal appliances which some students own, such as toaster ovens, which could be hazardous."

"Most students also stated that having a microwave in their dorm room would not affect their food plan," Kaminski said. "Students will probably use them for things like snacks, or possibly lunches."

"Students feel that having a microwave in their rooms would definitely benefit them," Kaminski added.

The microwaves should be .6 cubic feet and have good ventilation, according to Kaminski. Apart from that, there are no other stipulations.

"Students will not be charged for use of microwaves, either," Kaminski said. "It's just too hard to measure how much each student would use them."

Cope committee, which conducted the survey and proposed the idea, is designed to look into hall matters. "If students want something done in the dorms, it has to go through us (Cope)," Kaminski said.

"Cope is sort of like a connection for students to talk to someone and give input."

Myths and legends of Valentine's Day

by Rose Shakal

Some trace the origin of Valentine's Day to an ancient Roman festival. Others connect it with one or more saints of the early Christian church. Still others link it with an old English belief that birds choose their mates on Feb. 14.

Valentine's Day probably came from a combination of these ideas, plus the belief that spring is a time for lovers.

The earliest records of Valentine's Day in English say that birds choose their mates on that day. Shakespeare mentioned the phenomena in his "Midsummer Night's Dream."

A character in the play discovers two lovers in the woods and asks, "St. Valentine is past; Begin these woodbirds but to couple now?"

In ancient Rome, the festival of Lupercalia was held on Feb. 15. Observance of the holiday was thought to protect the Romans from wolves.

During the celebration, young men hit people with strips of animal hide. Women took the blows because it was believed that the whipping made them more fertile.

The early Christian church had at least two St. Valentines.

One story says that during a time when men were forbidden to marry because the emperor, Claudius II, thought single men made better soldiers, a priest named Valentine secretly performed marriages for young couples.

Another story portrays St. Valentine as an early Christian who made friends with many children. When he was imprisoned for refusing to worship the gods of Rome, the children missed him and threw loving notes to him through the bars of his cell window.

The two St. Valentines are said to have been executed on Feb. 14, about A.D. 269.

Valentine's Day probably began to be celebrated in the 1400's in England. Most early Valentine's Day customs involved ways that single women could learn who their future husbands would be.

In the 1700's, English women wrote men's names on pieces of paper, rolled them in chunks of clay, and dropped them into water. The first paper to rise to the surface supposedly contained the name of the woman's true love.

Another custom was to write women's names onto scraps of paper, and draw them from a jar. The man paid special attention to the woman whose name he drew, and she became his valentine.

A variation of this custom was that the man wear his valentine's name on his sleeve. The expression "wearing your heart on your sleeve" probably came from this practice.

The practice of sending romantic notes on Valentine's Day probably started with the first celebrations of the holiday.

At first, everyone made their own valentines. Commercial cards began to be printed in the early 1800's.

Many valentines of the 1800's were hand painted, and had ribbon, satin, or lace trim. Some showed arrows piercing a heart, while others featured a fat cupid.

From the mid-1800's to the early 1900's, many people sent humorous valentines called "penny dreadfuls." These cards, which are now collector's items, were sold for a penny and contained insulting verses such as:

'Tis all in vain your simpering looks,
You never can incline
With all your bustles, stays, and curls
To find a valentine.

Firm selling out

The world's largest producer of business forms has announced its intention to sell what it says are profitable operations in South Africa.

The sale of the four business form plants owned by Moore Corporation was announced because of "unsettled economic and political conditions and an uncertain future" in the country, according to a company spokesperson.

Moore has been manfacturing business forms in South Africa for 84 years.

Admission promised

A private high school in Hollywood, Florida has begun guaranteeing its graduates admission to college or the school will provide free tutoring to ensure admission.

"What we are saying (is) that if a student comes here for at least four years and does what our teachers tell him to do, he won't have any trouble getting into college," said William Hewlett, superintendent of Sheridan Hills Christian School.

Myth destroyed

A University of Iowa professor says that findings from a study he has done "destroy the myth that white students are superior to blacks in achievement potential."

George Chambers conducted his study of scores on the 1984-85 American College Test (ACT), using 2,274 pairs of black and white students from nine states.

Chambers says his findings indicate a very narrow difference between blacks and whites college aptitude when they come from the same school, similar economic backgrounds and take the same number of English and mathematics courses.

The small difference may be because of complex factors including lower teacher expectations for blacks, according to Chambers.

AIDS committee to educate students

by Catherine Schneider

"We are walking that fine line between creating concern and avoiding mass panic about AIDS," said Robb Zimdars when he described the position of the UW-Stout AIDS Advisory Committee.

The committee, which was formed last year, is chaired by Dean Samuel Wood and consists of teaching staff, administrative personnel, health center employees and students.

One of the committee's main objectives is to determine university policy concerning AIDS.

The committee released an official university statement on AIDS in October of 1986. The statement was developed using the guidelines of the American College Health Association.

"Now we have in place procedures to deal with someone who identifies themselves as a victim," said Wood.

"There could very well be carriers or victims in the student population," Woods said. "We have no reason to believe that Menomonie is immune to the rest of the world. AIDS is something we have to be prepared to deal with."

In addition to setting university policy, the committee works towards educating both students and faculty.

"We can't ignore it," said Lois Von Berg, registered nurse from the Student Health Center. "It is a number one public health issue.

"We need to get education out to the university community on what AIDS is," said Berg, who is also a charter member of the campus AIDS committee.

"You can't get it from shaking someone's hand or from casual contact," explained Berg.

"And, it's not just a gay disease either," Berg added, "it's everybody's disease. It isn't who you are - it's what you do."

Motivating people to take action is as important as having the correct facts, Berg said.

"In order for people to avoid the disease," Berg said, "they have to change their behavior and that's hard to do. It's easier just to ignore the facts."

Berg added, "People need to remember that when they have sex with someone, they are also having sex with the people that person has had sex with."

In its attempts to educate the university community, the committee has shown the American Red Cross video "Beyond Fear" to clerical, custodial, and food service employees. The tape has also been aired on the closed circuit residence network.

Wood said that by showing employees the video, "we hope to remove some of the fear of the unknown, educate people as to what they are dealing with, and help them to do their work without fear."

In the future the committee hopes to show the film in the Cobblestone Court of the Memorial Student Center and in classrooms.

Showing the film at freshman orientation is being considered, though Wood believes that there is a possibility of parental disapproval.

"No one should run from the chance for knowledge," Wood said. "If people are going to avoid the facts, we'll never get our point across."

The Student Health Center recently published the committee's statement in its February newsletter, in addition to general information on AIDS.

The health center has a copy of the Red Cross video on AIDS available for student use.

"Our committee is always open to suggestions and questions." Berg said. "If anyone would like to join, or has ideas, they're welcome."

- Aids is not spread by casual contact
- Educate yourself in the practice of safe sex
- Engaging in protected intercourse may protect you
- Any activity which includes the exchange of body fluids may put you at risk.

Speaker Dave Ostendorf addresses a group of community members and students.

Farm concerns

by Tracy Lea Landis

Students with notebooks on their laps and residents of the Menomonie area were told Tuesday evening that the crisis in Midwestern agriculture is putting terrific stress on farm families.

The featured speaker at the event, which was titled "Farm Crisis: The Survival of Rural Families," was Dave Ostendorf.

Ostendorf is the director of Prairie Fire, a grassroots farm family advocacy group based in Des Moines, Iowa.

Following Ostendorf's presentation, a panel of farm organizers and specialists shared their viewpoints on the economic and personal troubles of farm families struggling to keep their farm or coping with the loss of one.

Dr. John Williams referred in his presentation to the strengths of farm familis and the role of therapists in rural areas. Williams described the therapist and the displaced or troubled rural family as building on the inherent strengths which come from a rural tradition.

Williams is associate professor of human development and family therapy at Stout.

The moderator for the panel discussion and audience participation was Jim Anderson, area coordinator of VTAE District 1.

Other panel participants were Tom Quinn of Farm Unity Alliance; Robert Richardson, an attorney from Spring Valley; Larry Osterberg, member of the Farm Bureau and the Farmer's Union and Jerry Sipple, a member of the National Dairy Promotions Board.

About 80 people attended the event, which was co-sponsored by the University Speakers Series Commission and the Campus Ministry.

International Student Fair to be held in Thunderbird Mall Feb. 14

by Steven Lemire

Whirling, colorful dancers, exotic aromas, strange, wonderful sights and sounds entice you to the International Student Fair.

"We would like to invite all students and staff of UW-Stout to visit our exhibition in order that they learn more about the international students on campus," said Che Sammudin Abdullah, president of the International Relations Club (IRC).

The International Student Fair is co-sponsored by the IRC, a recognized student organization at UW-Stout and the Friends of International Students, a community based group dedicated to making international students welcome in Menomonie.

> "In order that they learn more about the international students
> —Che Sammudin Abdullah"

IRC is concerned with helping foreign students adjust to American culture and introducing them to students, faculty, staff and the community.

One of the ways the group accomplishes these goals is by hosting the annual International Fair.

"There we set up booths from the fifteen representative countries," explained Che, "and display native handicrafts, show slides and demonstrate traditional dances and foods."

There will be a raffle for a color television set and a food certificate from Don's Super Valu at the fair. The proceeds of the raffle will go to the International Student Scholarship Fund.

The fair will take place on Saturday, Feb. 14th, in the Thunderbird Mall, in north Menomonie, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Lodging database to be developed at Stout

by Masha Roberts

UW-Stout's help in forming the prototype of an information center is expected to present tremendous benefits to hospitality students.

Stout is participating in the first stages of developing the Lodging Decisions Support Systems (LIDSS).

Stout was invited to become a member of a consortium of three schools working on the project by the American Hotel and Motel Association (AH&MA). Members of the consortium will help explore and develop the initial LIDSS database.

LIDSS is an information data bank being developed by the AH&MA and contains information on over 1300 subjects related to hotel and motel operations.

"Presently, there is no universal information system for the lodging hospitality industry in the library," said Leland Nichols, co-project director of LIDSS and a professor of Habitational Resources at Stout.

"With the implementation of LIDSS," Nichols said, "students will have direct access to data banks of AH&MA."

Nichols feels that the LIDSS will give almost instantaneous accessibility for research and class assignments.

Funds for the project came from the Stout Foundation. And AH&MA will also serve as a major contributor of the project. The organization is supported by major chains such as the Hyatt and Marriott corporations.

Stout will develop one-third of the data base.

> "A considerably greater amount of data
> —Leland Nichols"

Two other schools, Cornell and Purdue, will be responsible for developing the other two-thirds of the data base.

According to Nichols, Stout was selected as a charter member because of the size of its program and its ability to make a large contribution to the project.

Research reports, periodical reviews, consultant referrals, statistical data, product and legal information are some of the materials that LIDSS will provide.

"Benefits are enormous," said Nichols, "and LIDSS will give students a considerably greater amount of data on the lodging and hospitality industry than can currently be obtained in the library."

LIDSS will be developed in three phases. Phase one consists of the prototype formation stage that Stout, Cornell and Purdue are involved in.

Phase two will deal with development of full scale information and phase three with on-line access to a national database to the public.

"AH&MA will be responsible for providing the thesaurus development costs, equipment cost and some travel, telephone and supply cost," said John Jax, co-project director with Nichols. Jax is the director and assistant dean of the Library Learning Center.

"The universities will divide labor efforts equally and provide staff to develop database content in LIDSS," Jax said.

"The amount of $17,183 requested for this project is only to support phase one," Jax added.

This first phase of the project will take about 18 months, Jax said.

Phases two and three are expected to be self-sustaining. Selling memberships and royalties from database use are funding options that will be considered.

'Sojourn to China' - sessions to be conducted by visiting scholars

by Nitin Nadkarni

There are two visiting scholars here on an exchange program from the People's Republic of China.

"I wanted to know something about America; its education system and its people," said Zhang Yun Yun, one of the visiting scholars.

Zhang is a lecturer at the Northwest Institute of Light Industry in Xianyang in the northwest region of China. He teaches electrical engineering.

At Stout, Zhang attends classes in industrial technology.

"I find Americans friendly and very helpful," said Zhang.

The other visitor is Jiang Lang, who attends the school of business at Stout.

Jiang is the assistant manager of a company that supplies equipment and raw materials for glass manufacturing back home in China.

"This is the first time that we've had visiting scholars and students from Mainland China on campus," said Steve Olson, the coordinator of international student services at Stout.

The presence of the two visitors from China has prompted the Office of International Student Services to institute "Sojourn to China," which is a series of lectures on China conducted by Zhang and Jiang.

The culture and traditions of China are discussed in the lectures which are held every Tuesday at 7 p.m in Room 205 A in Harvey Hall.

Classes are free and open to everyone. For information on the "Sojourn to China" seminars, call Olson at 232-2132.

Stout faculty have also been involved in exchange programs with the Chinese school.

Dr. Louis Moegenburg, professor of graphic communications, has recently returned from a visit to China. Dr. Janice Timmer, from the food and nutrition department will also be visiting China.

The story about the Stout Student Association in the February 5, 1987 issue of The Stoutonia incorrectly stated that cooperative programming provides a separate account to be distributed at the discretion of the Financial Affairs Committee of the SSA.

Cooperative programming funds are distributed at the discretion of the Cooperative Programming Board which consists of the Financial Affairs Committee members and two students with past experience in student activity programming.

Voc ed valued

The number of students enrolled in vocational education programs has increased by 100 percent in the past decade and the programs have kept pace with society's changing needs, Congressman Gunderson said on Sunday.

Speaking at the 75th anniversary celebration of the District One Technical Institute in Eau Claire, the congressman from Osseo said vocational education programs are now playing a key role in the training and retraining of our nation's work force.

"In order to be competitive in the modern job market," Gunderson said, "it's more important than ever that today's workers have the training necessary to compete for high-tech jobs."

"Vocational education has done an excellent job of providing this training," Gunderson said.

Deadline soon

The deadline for applications for the Stout University Foundation Scholarships is Feb. 16.

Applications can be picked up at the foundation's office in the Bertha Tainter building or other places on campus.

To receive a scholarship, students need not be in a financial aid program since scholarships are not based on the applicant's financial need.

Factors which are considered in assessing applicants include: academic performance, teacher evaluation and comments, professional activities, extra-curricular activities, written statements, neatness and care in completing the application.

The foundation sponsored over 265 scholarships last year, worth over $108,000.

The Scholarship Committee will make selections in the spring and will announce recipients' names in May. Payment will be made at a formal reception just before school starts next fall.

If you have any questions, please contact Dave Williams, executive director of the Stout University Foundation at 232-1256.

Response on aids

The statewide association of student governments has issued a critical response to the UW-System's report on student financial aid issues.

The United Council (UC), which represents the students of its member campuses to the administrators of the university system and to the state legislature, published its response in a newsletter dated Feb. 10.

The UC newsletter said that the report has asserted that "for residents of the state of Wisconsin, a student's need is almost always met completely."

"It is correct to state," the UC newsletter said, "that students' aid needs are met when loans are included."

However, the newsletter quotes the Higher Education Aids Board (HEAB) evaluation that the Wisconsin Higher Education Grants program meets less than four percent of students' financial aid needs.

The system report is also criticized by UC for its assessment of the realities of the financial aid needs of non-traditional and part-time students.

The newsletter calls the report's assessment "less than accurate" and said that they "show a continuing lack of commitment on the part of system administrators to facilitate the enrollment and retention of these student populations."

The UC criticism of the system administrator's report also stated that "it is essential that the cost of child care be considered when calculating the financial aid needs of student parents."

Citing estimates of child care needed by the average single student parent, the UC newsletter declared that 30 percent of the student's budget is spent on child care.

"The statements of financial aid administrators that parents should assume a greater proportion of college costs," the newsletter said, "ignores the economic realities of many Wisconsin families."

"It is unacceptable," the newsletter continued, "that 40 percent of the 1985 graduates left school with an average debt of $7,342 after completing their B.A.'s, and, according to HEAB, the average debt load increases by $2,000 every year."

AIDS: It's your choice

Since the first AIDS case was reported five years ago in America, awareness of AIDS has grown almost as rapidly as the spread of the disease. Today, more than 28,000 AIDS cases have been reported nationwide; more than half of these patients have died.

AIDS is recognized as a preventable disease, yet the fear of an epidemic grows as more than 270,000 AIDS cases are predicted during the next four years. Perhaps the biggest change in our approach to AIDS is our realization that everyone is at risk.

At first, AIDS was believed only to affect distinct groups in America such as sexually active homosexuals and bisexual men with multiple partners. Further study has shown past or present intravenous drug users, people with hemophelia or other blood coagualtion disorders and recipients of blood transfusions to be at risk.

The Student Health Services effectively stresses that where AIDS is concerned, "The risk reducing guidelines are for everyone: men and women, heterosexual and homosexual."

Our increased awareness of AIDS is matched by a general sense of confusion about the specific nature of the disease. The UW-Stout AIDS Advisory Group is designed to lessen the confusion by disseminating up to date information to the University community and developing educational stategies to be functional throughout the campus.

The follow through by students on the services provided by the Advisory Group is essential to reaching a mutually beneficial goal as outlined by the University, "that the spread of AIDS can be controlled and we can move beyond the fear of such an epidemic."

Ignorance would be a tragic excuse for failing to prevent the onset of an AIDS epidemic which is possible, if not probable, if we refuse to realize that the size of our community alone makes preventative action a necessity.

Many questions remain to be answered about the nationwide AIDS epidemic, but the AIDS threat is real and we applaud the proactive actions of the UW-Stout AIDS Advisory Group.

If we don't act responsibly now in order to prevent the creation of an AIDs epidemic at Stout, we have only ourselves to blame.

It used to be, which is another way of saying, once upon a time, I thought human intelligence was the crowning glory of the evolutionary parade.

As long ago as last Friday, I was sure, in spite of everything, that our ability to use the cerebrum and cerebellum was our main survival skill. After thinking about it, which is a migraine-quality paradox, I feel that our cranial cavity is filled with silly putty. (But how would I know?)

The last few days have been an epistimological nightmare. In case you don't what I mean, (and how could you?), epistimology is the branch of philosophy which deals with theories of knowledge. ("Nothing unreal can exist," --Star Trek and "Everything you know is wrong," --Firesign Theatre).

That branch is deadwood. It is a branch of rotted birch that fell unnoticed. Did it make a sound? Yes, like a cheap violin in a trash compactor.

Somewhere I've heard that we only use about five percent of that mass of nervous mental pudding. What does the rest of our brain do? Why did our brain increase in size during the evolutionary parade? It doesn't make sense that our brain would increase unnecessarily ahead of our ability to use it.

Some thoughtful people suppose our brains increased as a survival aid. If that is true, it better triple in size in the next generation because the guano is going to hit the fan pretty soon and we'll have to do more than duck.

Anthropologists sometimes pour rice into empty ancient skulls to use as a measure of brain size. Evolution has also filled our skulls with stuff, but forgotten to empty them again until it is too late. By then, the damage has already been done.

In general, mankind and womankind alike, (however alike they might actually be is not going to be an issue here), have arrogantly assumed that our species is the latest, greatest development on the evolutionary assembly line.

Since our unfortunate split from our chimpanzee forefathers, about seven million years ago, we have had a few good moments. I tend to think they are summed up nicely in the arts, (except architecture) and baseball, especially Sandy Koufax, Joe Morgan, and the 1976 World Series.

Many people would include the sciences and medicine as one of the great achievements of our species. I think we still have a few problems there, particularly our treatment of the body as a machine made of parts. There are some corners to round off in the science department.

Still other people would argue, (and argue and argue), that religion should be on that list of fabulous human achievements. I have my doubts.

Maybe if the Catholic church, for instance, sold nine-tenths of their unholy accumulation of wealth and bought some shovels and seeds and irrigation equipment and gave it to the Africans, (who seem to be dying by the zillions because their bodies haven't learned to assimilate nutrients from thin air), they might make the list, maybe.

At this point, dear reader(s), I know you are looking for that big conclusion, that verbal coagulation you were told to generate in English 101, (or 098, as the case may be).

There is no such thing this time. I would, however like to point out one thing. In the Stoutonia office there is a Desk Top Encyclopedia of Knowledge from 1953. I've forgotten the publisher, but that may not matter.

The table of contents has a list of charts. In all the Desk Top World of Knowledge, it needs only these charts: Benzene Compound Rings, Proteins and Amino Acids, Carbohydrates, and the make-up of the Presidential Cabinet. What more could you need to know?

Subject: The Placement Office and what it offers graduating seniors

by Brian Kraimer

Ken Erickson

Ken Erickson has been at UW-Stout for 25 years, 11 as an assistant professor. Prior to that, he taught high school for 11 years. Mr. Erickson has three daughters, two of whom are former elementary teachers and one runs an English riding stable with her husband. Mr. Erickson founded the ice hockey program at UW-Stout. The program does not exist anymore, but if a hockey rink is built in Menomonie the program will be reestablished. Mr. Erickson is also a World War II veteran.

STOUTONIA: WHAT IS THE PLACEMENT DEPARTMENT AT UW-STOUT ALL ABOUT?

MR. ERICKSON: The placement department at UW-Stout is really called the Career Planning and Placement department. Planning and placement are equally important. When I first came to UW-Stout, the Placement department was not anything like it is today. Job vacancies were simply placed on three by five cards on a bulletin board. There has been a drastic change in the placement of students and an emphasis on career planning. The main reason all of these changes have occurred is that the administration has seen the importance of these functions.

We have three full-time placement counselors who are very capable. This is very comparable to our sister schools.

STOUTONIA: WHERE IS THE PLACEMENT PROGRAM GOING AND WHY IS IT SO SUCCESSFUL?

MR. ERICKSON: I really do not think that the placement of students can get much higher than it is now. The placement is at 92 or 93 percent. A large part of this success comes from the fact that many UW-Stout graduates come back and recruit here. This comes

Puzzled over facts

Gene Emahiser's column never fails to leave me puzzled, stunned and sad. Puzzled over the mess of jumbled facts and ideas which constitute the content of Emahiser's writings, stunned by his persistence in claiming to hold the only valid opinion on any subject, and sad because he is getting away with it.

Finally, in the Feb. 5 issue, a reader (Alison Fredricksen) came forward and pointed out one cause of my ill feelings: Emahiser frequently attempts to attack issues about which he has only rudimentary knowledge. This has encouraged me to offer another observation regarding the journalistic style of Gene Emahiser.

In his recent story, "Radical by choice," Emahiser, in an attempt to associate himself with both the radical movement of the 60s and today's fundamentalists, writes that the dictionary definition of a "radical" is a conservative!"

Well, I checked: Radical, (Latin Radix, root), 1. of or from the root. 2. favoring extreme change, as of the social structure. And,conservative, 1. tending to conserve. 2. tending to preserve established institutions; opposed to change.

What do you want Emahiser? You cannot be both.

What we have here is a writer who misquotes the dictionary in order to establish an image of himself which will appeal, he hopes, to a wider range of readers. Not only does Emahiser write about things he does not know much about, but he also distorts facts and purposely misinforms. These are the techniques of demagogues, and it is disheartening to see them practiced in our own campus newspaper.

But, just like you and me, Emahiser has the right to express his views, and he will probably continue to do so. It is therefore up to the reader to protect him or herself against falling prey to the type of argumentation Emahiser represents. Keep on reading, but be cautious. There are writers everywhere to whom nothing is sacred - not even the virtues they themselves preach.

Sincerely,
Jorgen Rask Hansen

The vocal minority

This letter is directed toward the "Seeds of Change" column; last week's in particular, and the column itself in general.

First: Craig Karges was billed as entertainment and that is just what he provided. You, Gene Emahiser, are right in that you are part of a "very vocal minority," but I cannot see where your "vocal-ness." should have anything to do with what the majority sees for their entertainment.

Secondly: Segregated fees, or as you say, government sponsorship, help pay for the paper you use as your pulpit to spread your own narrow viewpoint of hell and damnation. So, how can you criticize? I could see the paper having a religion column, including news of various religions, (yes, Mr. Emahiser, there are more). Maybe it could even include different viewpoints, (yes, Mr. Emahiser, there are others). Something perhaps like a quote from the Talmud, which says: "In the world to come, each of us will be called to account for all the good things God put on earth which we refused to enjoy."

CAMPUS SLANT/ Do you think that companies should give drug tests for employment?

By Brian Kraimer

Janelle Fox,
Applied Math,
Sophomore,
In some areas, drug testing is very important, depending on what the person is doing. For some jobs, though, drug testing would not be as important. The company should decide if a drug test is necessary for the job. If the job requires a lot of responsibility, or is people-oriented, like pilots, then drug testing should be enforced.

Brad Roach,
Vocational Rehabilitation,
Freshman,
I do not think drug testing should be mandatory, unless they are messing up at work or there is some indication that they are on drugs. On the other hand, if you do your job, then what you do on your own time is not anybody's business but your own.

Barb Flom, Counseling,
Graduate Student,
I am totally against drug testing. It is an invasion of people's civil liberties. Drug testing just shows a basic mistrust for the employee. I do not think that a good employee/management relationship can exist under this circumstance.

Richard Peralez, Psychology,
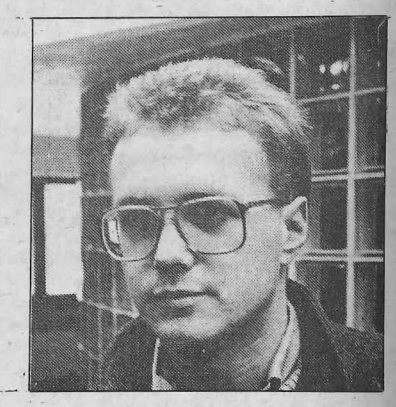
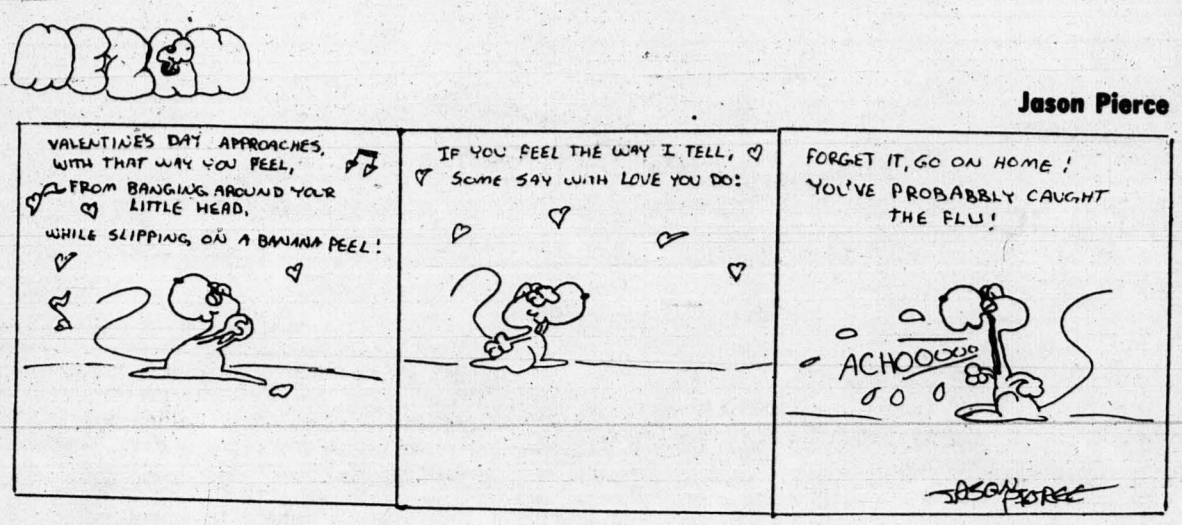
Freshman,
Drug testing interferes with our civil liberties. If they make drug testing mandatory, where are they going to stop? But if a person has a drug problem, I think the employer should get the employee some help.



Todd Slusar,
H & R
Freshman,
It really depends on the type of job you have as to whether you should be tested for drugs. If you are just sitting around in an office, I really do not think it would matter too much. People should get a job based on their capabilities, not on whether or not they do drugs.



Jason Pierce

Seeds of Change

Love or Lust?

Gene Emahiser

It is God's will that each of you should control your own body in a way that is holy and honorable, not in passionate lust like the heathen who do not know God...For God did not call us to be impure but to live a holy life.

I Thes. 4:3-7

On February 14th, we celebrate St. Valentine's Day. All across America, men and women will exchange gifts and gestures to show their "love" for each other.

Love has become a word that has been so overused that the true essence of the word has been long since forgotten. Love is not a feeling, as some people say, but an action. Love is a commitment that puts someone else's needs, wants, and desires before your own.

Love is not "not having to say you are sorry". Rather it is the action of laying your life down for your friends.

The Bible is very clear on what love is and what love is not. Most people are familiar with "The Love Chapter", or I Corinthians 13, which speaks of one type of love, agape or self- sacrificing love.

In that chapter, Paul, the author, writes that love is patient, kind, is not jealous, is not rude, does not seek its own, does not rejoice in evil, but rejoices with the truth.

The "love" that I see when I look around campus is contrary to God's definition of love. Love has become something to say to get what you want. Love has become something that can be made. The result is a generation of hurt, unsatisfied, self-centered individuals.

A better word for what we see masquerading around campus as love would be lust. Lust is self-seeking. All it cares about is looking out for number one.

Lust is impatient, unkind, and jealous. Lust brags and is arrogant. Lust acts unbecomingly, delights in evil, and does not rejoice in truth.

Many of the couples that exchange the traditional vow "I love you", haven't the slightest idea of what they are saying. They feel that by saying those three little words, all of their problems will somehow disappear. On the contrary, entering into a relationship on the basis of sexual attraction, a good personality, or common likes and dislikes, will create more problems than solutions, two to one.

This Valentine's Day, let's all take a good look at our personal relationships. Are they based upon love, or lust? Are they based upon putting the other person first, or getting your own needs met? Lust may be an encompassing emotional experience, but by no means should it be used for the grounds for any meaningful relationship.

I challenge the men on this campus to be real men, and not maggots. Don't give in to your childish passions. Show your woman how strong you can be.

Women, take a stand! Don't fall for the oldest line in the book. If your man really cares about you, he will respect your wants and needs more than his.

from activities like the career planning day. The reputation of a UW-Stout graduate in the field is very high. Physically, UW-Stout has the finest placement facility in the state and maybe even the finest in the Midwest. The central location on campus also helps this department, along with the large resource library of companies, which really helps the students.

STOUTONIA: WHY DO UW-STOUT MAJORS HAVE SUCH A HIGH DEGREE OF PLACEMENT?

MR.ERICKSON: The reason UW-Stout majors have such a high degree of placement is that they are so specialized. The graduates have such specialized degrees compared to our sister schools. Generally when students come to UW-Stout they have a good idea what they want to major in-like Industrial Technology. The incoming students know they cannot major in English, journalism or many other general majors which many of our sister schools do carry.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE SOME OF THE STRONG MAJORS IN PLACEMENT AT UW-STOUT?

MR. ERICKSON: The strong majors in placement at UW-Stout are Hotel and Restaurant Management, the Industrial Technology majors, Fashion Merchandising, Applied Math and Vocational Rehabilitation. Looking at a relatively new major at UW-Stout such as business, a person should realize the specialties that can enhance this major. When students receive a business degree, they should specialize with the degree to help them sell themselves. One field is seeing a decline in placement, and this is in the education majors. There has been a decline in the high school enrollment. This means there has been a decline in the need for teachers. I think that this major will make a comeback in the near future.

STOUTONIA: WHAT SHOULD GRADUATING SENIORS DO TO HELP THEIR CHANCES OF GETTING A JOB?

MR. ERICKSON: The seniors should, first of all, take advantage of all the services this office offers. They should be checking the weekly vacancy list, and signing up for interviews on the computerized sign-up. This system saves the students a lot of time and is fair to all the students who might be interviewing. The counselors here in the office are available, as well as all the workshops. This office will not guarantee any graduating senior a job. The very best we can do is to assure the senior that he or she has had some of the skills relative to attaining that job.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE SOME OF THE THINGS THAT LOOK GOOD ON A GRADUATING SENIOR'S RESUME?

MR. ERICKSON: A coop or internship look very good to prospective employers. So does involvement in extra activities like the student government, school paper, sports or any one of the many groups on campus. Prospective employers like to see some advancement in any of these activities. They also like to see a commitment to the activity in which the student is participating.

Bottom Line

The big V

Rich Brueckner

"Marriage is the death of hope."--Woody Allen

Friday the 13th is supposed to be the day that all kinds of bad things happen. This can be a real bite if you've had a crumby week.

The only superstition I really have is that bad things tend to happen all at once. It has something to do with the time lag when shit flows downhill.

It seems fitting that Friday the 13th and Valentine's Day meet this year. Relationships with the opposite sex tend to revolve around luck, both good and bad.

There is no greater fortune than finding someone you really care for. I know; I've seen it happen on Moonlighting.

Misfortune takes over when you proclaim your feelings like Bruce Willis did, only to find out that Cybil Shepard is in bed with Mark Harmon.

The initial encounters with a date can be some of the most wonderful experiences of your life. It's a satisfying sensation that approaches that of a new car smell.

Meeting attractive people also tends to happen all at once. Having more than one person on the line is the only Social Security you're likely to ever see.

Overconfidence in the potential of a relationship is something to be avoided. Remember that the other person's capacity to put up with your crap can be difficult to predict.

Wagering on the outcome of these chance events can get you in trouble, especially if your date happens to find out about it.

The counseling center has a flyer out on how to maintain a relationship. The only points I remember from it are "Learn a hobby together" and "Touch each other a lot." Somehow, you'd think these items would tend to combine on the agenda.

The Stoutonia has Valentine's messages this week. It's hard to believe that there are grown men who let their dates call them names like "Muffin".

Remember that it might be dangerous to go out looking for a date on Friday the 13th. You might meet someone who thinks that you're perfect marriage material.

I was told that your column was to give you an opportunity to respond to those of Jef Maynard and Rich Brueckner. I cannot see where you use it for that purpose. Instead, I think that you just find it warmer than the little cement pillar in front of the library. In fact, I see little in it that would have much appeal for the majority of Stout students. Why do I read it? I am fascinated by fanatics and their obsessions. But even I am tiring of it.

Number four: As for the numbers of people attending the McDowell event, the advertising was very intensive, so it got more people. The implication of the advertising was that the talk was of a sexual nature, so triple its effect. But, did you subtract the number of people who walked out, once the true nature of the talk was revealed?

And five: The abortion counseling--in your delight, did you stop to think of the girls who, after counseling, might have decided against abortion?

I ask you the student: When was the last time you felt that you received your money's worth from Gene Emahiser's column?

Boycott high prices

I am rather disappointed with the service stations located in the city of Menomonie. It is bad enough that gasoline tends to be more expensive here than in other communities most of the year, but the fact that regular unleaded is still more expensive than regular leaded is really a low blow.

Last summer the EPA ordered that the lead content in gasolines be reduced to a tiny fraction of the original amount. Today, the amount of lead in regular gasoline is so small, it is nearly identical to unleaded gasoline. Any difference in the price of these fuels is simply going to be profit. Many service stations in Eau Claire, for example, have already adapted to these new changes by selling their regular leaded and unleaded fuels at the same price per gallon. The service stations in Menomonie, as of last week, of course, were still selling regular unleaded gasoline at a higher price.

I would like to encourage the public to get out of the habit of accepting the notion that unleaded fuels cost more than leaded gasoline and to avoid service stations that promote this idea, even if it means having to leave the city to purchase gasoline.

Sincerely,
Christopher A. Perri

A concern for abuse

As early childhood majors, we were disheartened by David and Julie Ulberg's statements in the article, "Group formed for victims of false accusation." The Ulberg's say that they have been falsely accused of child abuse more than once. Ulberg went on to say, "If somebody sees you spanking your kid' in the grocery store, they can call Social Services..."

Well, we would hope someone would call Social Services, (if not the police!) If I watched an individual between 50 and 150 pounds - heavier than another individual "spank" (strike, hit, cuff) a smaller person, I, too, would call for help.

Furthermore, Ulberg goes on to say, "We can't go back and sue anonymous reports." Well, you are not alone. The person who has been "spanked" and degraded in the grocery store can not sue for assault and battery and/or for emotional damages.

That is where Social Services comes in; on the behalf of the child and the family. Social Services cannot "...do what they want..." Nor are they "...immune to the laws." Nor will they "...come and take your child away from you." Certainly not without cause. Social services is there to help families; work with them.

Spanking is not necessary. Child abuse is not just the extreme case. Please educate yourself in the techniques for dealing with your child's behavior. Maybe then you won't be falsely accused of child abuse again!

Concerned!

Perri anticipates progress in ceramics

by Jean-Marie Dauplaise

John Perri, Ceramics instructor in Stout's art department believes his classes are, "like a buffet. I want everyone to get something out of my it." He teaches to mainly art students but he has taught and welcomes non-art students.

Perri has taught at Stout for 21 years, and he remembers when the department was located where Don's Super Valu's parking lot is. It was very poorly made, Perri can appreciate the new facility.

Every day in Menomonie countless shoppers venture across the parking lot of Don's Super Valu. Very few of them realize, however, that the site of that parking lot is where the original Stout ceramics department was housed. The department was located in the first and lower level of an old farmer's store building.

John Perri, an instructor who has been teaching in the department for the past 21 years, laughingly recalls the old facility. "The roof leaked so bad I had to put plastic over my books when it rained. And that was in the basement!"

The new facility has been housed in the Applied Arts building since it was relocated from the leaky brick farmer's store. Perri obviously prefers the newer site where the kiln used to fire the work is located inside. In the past it was kept outside in a metal shed where "it was so cold the water from the rags used to wipe the shelves would freeze and stick to them."

Perri has been teaching at Stout since receiving his MFA in Ceramics at the Alfred University College of Ceramics in Alfred, N.Y. His undergraduate and some graduate work was done at the Indiana University of Pennsylvania.

Robb Wilson, who has been a staff member with the art department since its conception has been at Stout for 27 years. He received his MFA at Ohio State University where he majored in Ceramics an minored in sculpture. Before th inception of the art departmen Wilson taught in " a token branc of the home economics prograr called 'related arts'"

Together, the two instructor teach 4 or 5 sections of ceramics each semester. Ordinarily there are two beginning and two advanced sections offered. They both obviously are extremely dedicated and believe in what they are doing.

"I love this. Teaching has been good to me, ... I really consider teaching to be a noble profession." says Perri.

Perri enjoys a good rapport with his students and is also democratic. The other day he allowed his third period first semester class to overide his particular preference for classical music when, after confirming the class' overwhelming veto, he tuned in to a local pop station.

The ceramics classes are comprised of mostly art majors, but unlike most other studio areas, a relatively high percentage of non art students take the class. Perri estimates that between 30 to 40 percent of any class may be comprised of non art majors.

"I give those kids a lot of credit." says Perri. "That cross section has made me very aware of what I'm doing. It's like a buffet. I want everyone to get something out of it."

Perri believes that more people would take additional ceramics classes if their schedules permitted it. "Students will actually come in and apologize for not taking a class." he said.

Noting that the beginning ceramics class may be a student's only experience in that area, Perri conducts his class in the hope that everyone will get something out of the experience.

"I don't expect them to remember me or this class 20 years from now. But if nothing else I hope to ignite a spark. I hope at least they learn to appreciate ceramics, perhaps become patrons."

For all the people who pass through the department never to return, there are some who have really taken advantage of ceramics, eventually making their living in that area.

In the Menomonie area alone there are four different people making a living from their ceramic work. Two recent Stout graduates, Rich Meredith and Mary Pratt, have gone on to pursue their MFA's in the ceramic area.

Perri is looking forward to the progress of the department, having returned this year from a one year sabbatical. After taking that time off, Perri explains, "I feel refreshed. I have a lot of things to share."

The ceramics department has proven, over the years, to be quite a feat of clay.

Paul Delong

Printmaking instructor Paul Delong recently had a show of his work in a Washington D.C. gallery. A feature article on Delong's reaction to the experience will appear in an upcoming issue.

Audience involved in psychic's show

by Rhonda Olson

"We as human beings use only 10 to 20 percent of our brains...Some even less!" said Craig Karges, a mentalist, who demonstrated mind reading, blindfold vision, predictions, and some wild demonstrations of mind over matter.

"The Magic Of The Mind" show was sponsored by the Special Events Commission. It took place Wednesday, February 4, at 8p.m., in the Great Hall of the Student Union. There was no fee for admission and approximately 100 to 150 enthusiastic people attended.

Karges demonstrated his blindfold vision techniques by covering his eyes with three different layers. He chose a man from the audience to assist him with the two silver dollars, surgical tape, and finally a black cloth. The man from the audience seemed satisfied that Karges was without sight. Three people from the audience were chosen to bring up items for Karges to "read".

The first person brought up a part of a match book. She was instructed to hold it in front of Karges open palms. Karges was able to "read" the item to the point of "seeing" King Edwards printed in the colors of red, black, and white.

The man who assisted Karges with the blindfold was instructed to write any word on a marker board. The assistant wrote CASTANDA on the board in capital letters and showed it to the audience.

Karges ran his hand above the board and asked, "Is that eight letters? You capitalized all of them?" The assistant agreed to both of the statements. Karges again correctly "read" the item.

The third and fourth volunteers from the audience brought up their items one at a time and were amazed as Karges read the address and name of a borrowed driver's license, and the serial code on a one dollar bill from the Bahama's.

Karges had many other breath taking illusions. Three students from East Public School in Menomonie, and one Stout student helped Karges in a Poltergeist type of demonstration.

The students were allowed to check the table for any deceitful qualities. The five of them gathered around the table.

Each assistant in this illusion rested their finger tips lightly on a handkerchief that Karges laid on the table. Karges placed his finger tips on the center of the table and told the four students to close their eyes and concentrate on moving the table.

The small table slowly tipped on it's side and rose above the floor. Karges and the students turned in circles along with the table. Karges asked the students to move back as he proceeded to direct the table to the edge of the stage, his only contact with the table being his finger tips. Karges directed the table back and the crowd applauded excitedly.

"Incredible...he combines illusion and psychic power to create some of the most bizarre happenings you've ever seen!" broadcasted PM Magazine.

Craig Karges is married and living in Wheeling, West Virginia with his wife and their dog. Karges paid his way through college working magic shows. He graduated from Marshall University in Huntington, West Virginia with a degree in Speech and Journalism. Karges works as a full time mentalist, appearing at business conferences and colleges across the country.

Karges dazzled the audience with magical, mysterious stunts. Several students particpated in one particular activity. The students were asked to leave their hands on the table, and follow Karges instruction as he magically lifted the table.

Craig Karges, full time mentalist, impressed an audience at the Great Hall Feb. 4. He was able to "read" items the audience presented him with while wearing a blindfold.

It's A Mans World

Denise Cain

At the beginning of the year my four female roommates tried to fool me with their culinary skills. They bought foods like potatoes, ground beef, and celery in hopes that they could prove to me their worth as women.

It is February now and they still have not cooked. The potatoes sprouted so they tossed them in the garbage, the ground beef was destroyed in a range fire over homecoming and they used the celery as stir sticks in Margaritas.

Contemplating the reasons as to why my roommates do not cook I interrupted their favorite program "Alf" with my probing questions. Their responses follow:

Mare Bear: "I do not cook because I am attending college to free myself of mundane kitchen duties. I want to be a woman of the 80's, independent of that typical 70's woman image. I do not want to have it all! I just want the part about executive luncheons, company cars, and sophisticated Polish men. I may bring home the bacon, but I WILL NOT fry it up in a pan."

Wave: "I do not cook because I am an H & R major. Do you see a doctor giving operations on his kitchen table? I guess cooking is just too conventional. Sure we could get a microwave oven, but that radiation, after what happened at Chernobal you know. Besides microwaves give me dry skin. I am kind of funny about things like that. I used to cook but I kept getting confused trying to balance my checkbook and my diet at the same time."

Kelly: "I am just too attached to my food to cook it. I think cooking is a form of torture. I cannot stand there watching those tiny starch cells hydrating, ballooning up like whales and not feel some sort of remorse. How could I possibly eat a hamburger made up of the proteins I just denatured? I was in a cooking major before, but it got just too emotional; that is why I switched to Psychology."

Sandy: "I used to cook until I had Meal Management. After that class, I could not even fix breakfast without costing out my dry milk, selecting the perfect placemats and napkins, and arranging a center piece. I was missing all of my morning classes. By the time I WAS finally done with my breakfast, it was time to start planning my lunch, and then dinner. I was missing out on life! I dumped my friends for Don at Super Valu. I had to give up my addictive cooking and return to a more sane life."

My roommates are asking anyone to bring them the following food for Valentine's Day. The recipes are from their favorite file of foods they cannot make themselves.

Deluxe Pecan Chocolate Cookies

2 3/4 cups flour
1 1/4 tsp. baking soda
1 1/2 cups butter, softened
1 1/2 cups firmly packed brown sugar
2 eggs
1 tsp. vanilla extract
3-4 cups Nestle Semi-Sweet Chocolate Morsels
1 cup chopped pecans

Preheat oven to 375-degrees. In a bowl combine flour, baking soda, and salt; set aside. In bowl, combine butter and brown sugar; beat until creamy. Add eggs and vanilla extract; beat until light and fluffy. Gradually blend in flour mixture. Stir in morsels and pecans. Drop by well-rounded tbsp. onto ungreased cookie sheets. Bake for 10-12 minutes. Allow to stand 2-3 minutes before removing from cookie sheets; cool.

Valentine Meltaway Moments

1 cup butter
3/4 cup cornstarch
1/2 cup powdered sugar
1 cup flour
1/2 tsp. vanilla

Mix and roll into balls. Bake at 350-degrees until light brown. Frost with: 1 cup pwd. sugar
1 tbsp. butter
little milk
1 tsp. vanilla
1-2 drops red food coloring

Gingerbread Cookies

1 cup brown sugar
2 tsp. cinnamon
2 tsp. ginger
1 cup melted shortening
2 cups molasses
2 heaping tsp. soda in 1/2 cup water (Put soda in measuring cup and fill with 1/2 cup water.)1 beaten egg
5-7 cups flour; enough to make a soft dough

Mix all ingredients, adding enough flour for a stiff enough dough to roll and cut. Use a heart shape cookie cutter for Valentine's Day cookies. Bake in 350-degree oven.

Spontaneous Combustion

Socialize

James 'Unk' Falkofske

Does anyone really know what time it is? Does anyone really care? -- Chicago ???

Friday night, oh what a night. Music was playing, people were swaying, and the whole room stank of beer. But to what do we owe this pleasure? I would be a liar if I said it was to conduct high intellectual conversations on the meaning of life and the condition of the cosmos.

Party night. The two sure ways to have people talk about you in a less than innocent light is to either have someone scrawl your name and number in the women's john or to have your roommates throw a party with you as the guest of honor. I was recently the victim of the latter.

My roommates, bless their soul, decided that I was in need of companionship and social interaction. Thus, the Friday that I should have spent studying for my accounting exam was dedicated to entertaining guests I didn't even know.

There are many reasons to hold a party at your residence. Many people think that the only reasons for such activities is to spill beer on each other, drink yourself sick, and pass out on the living room floor. However, there are many benefits from throwing your own bash.

The most obvious of all gains from holding a blowout involve meeting new people, sharing jokes, and loosening up from a hard week's work. In order to have a successful party, the following rules should be applied. * Always have music. Social gatherings in which fermented beverages are served are enhanced by the presence of sound. Not only is music useful as background distraction, but it also serves as a barrier between those who want to make a statement and those who don't really care. What? What? * The event should be located where floor space is readily available. Persons inclined to slam dance can easily damage not only other persons, but any furniture that may be in the way. By giving ample arm room, many potentially disastrous situations can be avoided.

* The bathroom should be well stocked with with paper products. Although this often lends itself to paper tosses across the living room, many otherwise peaceful people become raging bulls when their Charmin is taken away.

* The roommates should all agree on what type of refreshment should be served, and contribute equally toward such. It's no fun when you end up paying for their friends (especially after they steal the tap).

* All the neighbors should be contacted. Thus if people show up at their door, they can kindly redirect them to the proper location.

* Above all, the roommates should have a good nights sleep before the social gathering. When they are tired, they get grumpy. Finding people in their bed at three in the morning does not help the situation much.

Since music is a contributing factor to the success of the event, some helpful hints should also be followed in order to prevent problems.

* Unless the crowd is of the older school, country music is inappropriate for such a gathering. Punk is poor, but heavy metal may be applied with strobe lights.

* Speakers should be located as high as possible in the party area. This lets the music travel farther and prevents people from using a five-hundred dollar set of Klipsh as a coffee table.

* If possible, speakers should be sealed inside of plastic garbage bags. This is protection in case anyone decides to start giving Schlitz showers in the room.

* The amplifier should be located in a separate room. A microphone should be attached. That way if Menomonie's finest show up to carry on a conversation, everyone at the party can be informed of the delay in music.

* Finally, to get rid of people, turn the music off. This is a good hint. If the hint isn't taken, Doberman Pinchers may come in handy.

One Point Perspective

Wheel of Misfortune

Jean-Marie Dauplaise

The audience was clapping, shouting, and whistling with wild abandon not unlike the display at the gallows when Marie Antoinette was beheaded. The crowd knew this was no ordinary game show. This was the Wheel of Misfortune, and they wanted action.

As the camera focused in on the spinning wheel, the crowd shouted in unison "WHEEL OF MISFORTUNE!!!" Then the announcer commanded the rapt attention of the wild audience.

"Look at this beautiful studio, filled with these agonizing tortures. An authentic medievel rack, a Poulan chainsaw, a genuine French guillotine, and much much more."

The crowd made noises similar to those heard at Fourth of July fireworks displays as each instrument of torture was announced.

"And now lets meet our host, Rat Payback. Rat."

"Thank you, and welcome everyone to Wheel of Misfortune, where we promise your wildest dreams of revenge against the people who most infuriate you will be fulfilled on our stage. And now let's welcome my lovely assistant, Anna Spite. Oh, Anna!"

A glaring blaze of sequins temporarily blinded the audience as Anna appeared. As their eyes adjusted to the bright light reflected off Anna's dress, they were blinded a second time when she smiled, parting her red lips to reveal the orthodontic miracle of her Pepsodent smile.

The audience waited patiently as Rat and Anna bantered in a ridiculous manner which many secretly suspected to be the thinly veiled evidence of a backstage love affair.

Suddenly remembering the purpose for which he was being paid exorbitant sums of money, Rat turned to the audience. "And now let's meet our contestants!"

"Our first contestant comes all the way from Menomonie, Wisconsin. He's an arrogant closed minded male clinging hopelessly to his self inflated opinion of himself, venting his own personal frustrations and sexual dissatisfaction in a local publication. We'd like to welcome Rocky Macho to our show."

"Thanks Rat. Just my frotting luck I'd get stuck at this thing. It's Thursday, I should be at the Marion picking up some chicks," Rocky exclaimed in the vernacular of other pathetic individuals like himself, belching as he let a Black Label beer can drop to the stage floor.

"Our second contestant is Prissy Grandeur, a truly obnoxious specimen from New York, New York who believes that she and every aspect of her life is perfect. She is extraordinarily selfish and thinks only of herself."

"Well I just wanted to say hi to everyone back home watching me here tonight... I just got my hair done and..."

"Shut up." said Rat, rudely interrupting. "And our third guest is Judge Venial, who enjoys subjecting others to his limited and uninformed views, while simultaneously condemning those who do not subscribe to them."

"Rat does it bother you that you will be punished for lusting Anna? It says here.."

"Go to hell Judge. And now, our first puzzle. It's a person."

\- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

"Prissy, you won the toss backstage. Give that wheel a spin!"

Prissy leaned over carefully so as not to wrinkle her immaculately clean and perfectly starched designer dress. "OOOOHHHH I broke a nail!" she shouted as she set the wheel in motion. The crowd waited breathlessly, eagerly awaiting the misfortune awaiting Ms. Grandeur. At last the wheel settled on "Lose a Limb."

The crowd cheered as Anna fired up the Poulin. Meanwhile, Judge Venial, exalting his good luck, spun the wheel. The wheel stopped on the $500 space. "Can I have a G please?" Queried the Judge.

Anna dexterously revealed the G. The puzzle now read:

\- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

\- - - G

"I'd like to solve the puzzle please."

"You can't solve that yet, you only have one letter." said Rat, obviously annoyed.

"I know everything. It's MALE CHAUVINIST P..aarghaaaahh!"

"Gee too bad that lightning bolt just killed the Judge. I guess that means it's your turn Rocky."

"Sorry Rat, I was too busy lusting Anna to think."

"Gee, that's too bad Rocky," said Rat, his voice suddenly drowned out by the snarl of the Poulin offstage.

Stout's Luther Forrest (14) skies for a lay-in between two River Falls defenders. Forrest scored 14 points as the Blue Devil's pulled away in the second half and defeated the Falcons, 78-60.

Cagers gain revenge with win over Falcons

by Paul Emerson

When the UW-Stout men's basketball team took the floor of Johnson Fieldhouse against the UW-River Falls Falcons last week, they had something to prove. And prove they did with a convincing 78-60 win.

With the win Stout improved to 8-3 in the WSUC and 17-3 overall. The victory keeps the Blue Devils within one game of the UW-Eau Claire Blugolds who are 9-2.

In this week's NAIA top twenty UW-Eau Claire is ranked 4th, UW-Stevens Point is ranked 16th, one ahead of the Blue Devils, who are ranked 17th.

River Falls took the tip and held leads of up to five points for the first ten minutes of the game, until a layup by Luther Forrest put the Devils on top 14-13 at the 9:27 mark.

Stout was down by one, 25-26, at the 2:14 mark, when Ron Hunter drew a foul on an attempted shot. River Falls Head Coach Rick Bowen then drew a technical foul.

Hunter made 1 of 2 free throws to tie the game, and then Brian Ellingson hit the technical free throw to put the Blue Devils on top for good. Stout went into the locker room at the half with a 29-26 lead.

"Things had already changed," Head Coach Dwain Mintz when asked if the technical may have turned the tide for Stout.

In the second half Stout slowly increased its lead to as many as 18 points on two occasions, the second being the final margin after a 3-point field goal by Brian Ellingson at the buzzer.

"We protected our possessions much better in the second half. We had much better control," Mintz said.

According to Senior Tom Gomolak, "We started to play better in the second half, much better than the first time we played them," (an 81-72 River Falls victory).

Senior point guard Brian Ellingson, who took game high scoring honors with 19 points, said that, "this time we were ready and we played the way we should have."

Ellingson hit on 3 of 4 3-point field goals and also grabbed 10 rebounds to lead the Blue Devils. Ron Hunter scored 14 points and had six steals, as did Dave Sandstrom, who grabbed a game high 16 rebounds. Gomolak chipped in 12 points and 10 rebounds.

Stout shot 48 percent from the floor, hitting on 32 of 66 shots and sank 10 of 13 free throws for 77 percent.

River Falls was led in scoring by Paul Denny with 12 points. Steve Justice, Roger Maupin and Neil Yost each had 9 points.

The Falcons connected on 23 of 56 shots for 41 percent and 9 of 17 free throws for 52 percent.

This Friday the Blue Devils face a crucial test when they travel to UW-Stevens Point for a rematch with the Pointers. The Pointers are the only team to have beaten Stout on its home floor this season.

"It's a special game for us. We really want to win this one," Ellingson said. Gomolak said, "We're out for revenge."

Mintz sees the key to the game and to beating UW-Oshkosh on Saturday night as being able to shoot 50 percent in both games. "We've got to get the ball to Gomolak and really hit the boards," Mintz added.

Stevens Point will be coming off a tough game against UW-Whitewater this past Tuesday and a loss in that game will make Stout's game with them even more crucial, according to Mintz.

After Friday's game the Blue Devils travel to UW-Oshkosh Saturday night. Stout won the first meeting at the fieldhouse back on January 24, 77-61.

"They play a lot better game on their own court," Mintz said. Ellingson said, "Oshkosh always gives us a good game, but I expect we should come away with a win."

The Blue Devils have had 8 days off going into Friday's game and Mintz sees the rest as a chance to refine fundamentals.

"We've been practicing very hard. The playoffs are coming up, and we want to get tuned up," he said.

"We still have a shot at the conference title, but to win it we'll probably have to go undefeated the rest of the season."

The WSUC title chase has been narrowed down to three teams with a legitimate shot. Conference standings and recent results are as follows:

Team	WSUC	Overall
UW-Eau Claire	9-2	19-2
UW-Stout	8-3	17-3
UW-Stevens Point	8-3	16-5
UW-River Falls	6-5	13-8
UW-Oshkosh	5-5	13-7
UW-Platteville	4-8	12-9
UW-Superior	4-8	11-11
UW-Whitewater	3-7	13-7
UW-La Crosse	3-7	8-13

Saturday's Results

Eau Claire 48, River Falls 47
Stevens Point 79, Superior 66
Oshkosh 87, Whitewater 84
La Crosse 77, Platteville 60

Swim teams save best performance for last at Point

by Slash La Freniere

Head Coach John Miller said it best, "Overall, this was our best meet of the year." With 12 first place finishes and 1 more national qualifier, Lara Perkins in the 200 yard (yd) breast stroke, one would have to agree with Miller. Although UW-Stevens Point won the overall point total for the meet in both the men's and women's events, the Stout swimmers performed well.

For the women, the day started off fast. In the first event of the day the 400 yd medley relay team of Cheryl Debaker, Lara Perkins, Wendy Heineke, and Jackie Gilbert won the race by a 12.54 second margin over the closest Point relay team.

In the 200 Individual Medley Wendy Heineke and Lara Perkins provided a one-two finish for Stout. Heineke was also placed first in the 100 yd freestyle event with a time that broke the conference record.

"I was really pleased that I broke the conference record. and I will be swimming in this event at both the conference and national meets," said Heineke.

Gilbert was first in the 500 yd freestyle, winning by 0.12 second margin. Gilbert, one of the captains for Stout, swam in 3 events on the day. Many of the stout swimmers compete in multiple events. Because of this, overall team scores are held down due to Stouts lack of depth, even though many Stout swimmers win their events.

In the 200 yd breast stroke Stout swimmer Lara Perkins time of 2:38.00 was good enough to qualify for nationals. Perkins said, "I was excited to qualify for nationals in my favorite event.".

Finally for the women, divers Natalie Wicks, Lisa Bjerkelund and Terri Petersen finished one-two-three in both the 1 meter and 3 meter diving events.

For the men the top performers were Mark Kukuzke and Steve Kostrova. Both men had three victories on the day. The 400 yd medley relay team of Kukuzke, Kostrova, Stu Boese, and Kent Siebert won the event by a 0.40 margin.

Kukuzke was also victorious in the 200 yd and 500 yd freestyle events. Kostrova added wins in the 200 yd induvidual medley and butterfly events.

Said Kukuzke, "I just did my best and good things happened for me."

The final victory of the day came in the 400 yd freestyle relay. Mike Carlson, Kevin Siebert, Eric Peterson, and Bob O'Riely contributed to the winning effort.

Coach Miller said, "I was very encouraged with our performances and we are looking forward to conference and national meets." The Stout swimmers are beginning to peak at just the right time and they are looking to make their final push to the top in the coming weeks.

The next meet for the Stout Swimmers and Divers is the conference meet here at Stout beginning Thursday, February 19 through Saturday the 21st. Anyone interested in working at the meet is invited to call coach John MIller at x-1337.

An athlete for Valentine's Day

Cosmas A. Whitten

For Valentine's Day I was about to write something boring about how athletes should send Uncle Sam a valentine for supporting their cause with all the generous funds that are donated to athletic programs. Suddenly my buddy, Stoutonia columnist Rich Brueckner, inspired me with this marvelous idea:

The following are the ten commandments to finding a Stout athlete for Valentine's Day. These commandments apply to both male and female athletes.

1.Hang out in the weight room. Athletes are always in the weight room lifting so that they may keep their muscles strong and toned. An increase in strength has also been proven to improve athletic performance.

2.Hang out in the training room. On a daily basis Stout athletes are always being taped up or soaking an injury in the whirlpool. My roommate met her boyfriend, a football player, four years ago while she was soaking her shin splints in the whirlpool. Her boyfriend was soaking an elbow injury in the same whirlpool.

3.Attend athletic events. Athletes are always looking into the crowd to see who is watching. Yelling a lot will usually attract the athlete one is seeking as their valentine.

4.Attend victory parties. After a winning game, many athletes will host a lively victory party. Always tell the athlete you are attracted to, "I watched your every move — you did great."

5.Never register for classes after 2:00. Practice for athletes begins after this hour, making it impossible for classes to be attended at this time.

6.Hang out in the fieldhouse between 2:00-6:00. Athletes are practicing at this time. Observe their practice and clap when the one in mind does something good.

7.Hang out at athletes' favorite bars. The most popular bars for athletes are The Spot and The Marion. On occasion a group of athletes will venture into The Log Jam. Don't expect to find athletes at Triple Cripple because they are at practice during this time.

8.Go to parties at the End Zone. Many athletes attend these parties. A female athlete is usually the bouncer so watch out, she can be mean.

9.Go to the library after 8:00 p.m. Athletes do not begin to study until this time due to the fact that after practice they are very hungry and take a long time to eat. This prolongs the time in which studying can begin.

10.Become a Stoutonia sports reporter. As a Stoutonia sports reporter a person may interview the Stout athlete of their dreams.

Gymnasts show depth despite loss to Hamline; prepare for Sweetheart Invitational in Superior

by Cosmas A. Whitten

On Tuesday, February 3, the UW-Stout women's gymnastics team lost to St. Paul's Hamline University 116.40 to 131.30.

"Monday night's practice produced two injuries that drastically affected our team score against Hamline. Carolyn Bjerke suffered a fairly severe ankle sprain and Patti Roenitz had a slight sprain in her knee," Coach Zuerlein said.

Coming back into competition was Freshman Jode Schaefer who is recovering from stress fractures in her legs.

"I'm not feeling one hundred percent better but there is only three weeks left in the season so I'm just putting up with it for the remainder of the time," Schaefer commented.

"The crew that did compete did not give any ground. Many improved their scores. The 116 points indicates that our depth is not hurting," Coach Zuerlein said.

Vault was not as strong an event for Stout as it usually is. Due to the recent injuries there were only four competitors on vault. Senior Cosmas Whitten lead Stout on vault, scoring an 8.0. Freshman Kelly Kramer followed close behind with a 7.8.

Uneven parallel bars went well for the gymnasts. Senior Tammy Dennis scored her season high score of 7.9 to take fifth place in the meet, followed by Sophomore Patti Roenitz with a 7.8. "My routine felt pretty good and I was happy with my score," said Dennis.

There were no Stout performers to stick their balance beam routines. Even so there were two Stout gymnasts to place. Patti Roenitz placed second with a score of 7.7.

Freshman Michelle Scott took third place with a 7.4. Scott had two falls but was still pleased with her performance, which received her highest season's score.

"I was pleased with my score, but now I would like to stick my routine so I can get the eights that my routine has the potential for," Scott said.

Stout had only four performers on the floor exercise due to the two previous injuries. Cosmas Whitten led Stout with an 8.1 while Kelly Kramer followed with a 7.8.

"We travel to Superior for the Sweetheart Invitational on Valentine's weekend. Everyone should be back to full swing by then, and we can get our scores back up there where they belong," Coach Zuerlein said.

Grapplers victorious over Oshkosh, 26-15

by Tim Nichols

With the help of a string of victories in the upper weight classes, the UW-Stout wrestling team came from behind to record a 26-15 victory over UW-Oshkosh at the Johnson Fieldhouse last Friday night.

The Blue Devils found themselves behind 8-15 after the 158 pounds match but kept Oshkosh off the scoreboard the rest of the meet by winning the last four individual bouts.

The meet started with both Stout and Oshkosh forfeiting the 118-lb. match. Since Stout does not currently have a 126-lb. grappler, Blue Devil Keith Rusch, who usually wrestles at 118, was bumped up to the 126-lb. class to wrestle Mark Purtell. The move proved to be beneficial as Rusch decisioned Purtell 10-7 and gained three team points for the Blue Devils.

Wrestlers are peaking at the right time and should be healthy for the final tournaments of the season

—Coach Early

The Blue Devils captured five more team points with Anthony Brown's 19-6 decision over Kip Miller of Oshkosh in the 142-lb. match. Brown's aggressive wrestling helped him to nearly record a technical fall over his opponent from the beginning of the second period on.

Wayne Hendrickson started the final Blue Devil win spree with an 8-2 decision over Chris Campion of Oshkosh in the 167-lb. match. Blue Devil Steve Smith won by a forfeit at 177.

With the help of some impressive reversals, Larry Grein dominated his opponent in notching a 17-3 victory in the 190-lb. match. In the heavyweight match Blue Devil Rich Rupp shut out Troy Duborg of Oshkosh, 10-0.

Prior to the meet with Oshkosh on Friday, Stout traveled to UW-Stevens Point on Thursday. The Blue Devils ended up losing the meet by a 28-12 score.

The Blue Devils gave Stevens Point 12 points in the form of two forfeits. The points spotted to Stevens Point were never quite made up as the Devils were handed the loss. Individual winners for the Blue Devils included Keith Rusch, Kevin Burbach and Wayne Hendrickson.

The Blue Devils are now preparing for the WSUC tournament to be held this weekend in La Crosse. Coach Michael Early feels confident about his team as they head into the tournament. Early said, "We're at the point we want to be." Early also said his wrestlers are peaking at the right time and should be healthy for the final tournaments of the season.

With the help of some impressive reversals, Larry Grein dominated his opponent in notching a 17-3 victory in the 190 point class. Grein grabs his opponent's legs as he scores a take down in the Friday, Feb. 6 meet held in the Johnson Fieldhouse.

Bad half sinks Lady Blue Devils again, 73-51

by Paul Emerson

The UW-Stout women's basketball team once again put in one good half of basketball their last time out. Once again, however, the one bad half told the story as the Lady Blue Devils lost to UW-River Falls, 73-51.

"In the first half we played real well, but they shut us down in the second half," said women's Head Coach Lynda Lee. "They didn't play heads up in the second half. We let them get some easy baskets," said Lee.

In the first half the Lady Blue Devils jumped out to a 6-2 lead at the 18:00 mark, but that would be their biggest lead of the game. Stout was down by seven with 4:10 left in the first half, 25-18.

But they managed to cut the deficit to two points at 29-27 with 31 seconds left in the half. From there River Falls scored five unanswered points, including a 25-foot 3-point field goal by Shelley Kostick at the buzzer, to make it 34-27 at the half.

In the second half River Falls went on a 12-2 spurt to go up by 17 points at 46-29. And from there the Blue Devils could not recover, as River Falls took their biggest lead at 22 points. That was also the final margin.

In the first half we played real well, but they shut us down in the second half

Junior Renee Kasten led Stout in scoring with a game high 19 points. Kasten also dominated the boards with a game high 17 rebounds.

Sophomore Suzi Krank also hit for double figures with 10 points, while Janet Turowski and Patti Cook each chipped in six.

The Blue Devils hit on 20 of 63 field goals for 33 percent and sank 11 of 16 free throws for 68 percent. Stout won the battle of the boards, 40-36, and had 20 turnovers to just 11 for River Falls.

River Falls was led in scoring by Kim Gustafson with 14 points. Stacie Robie had 13 points while Shelley Kostick chipped in 11.

The Lady Falcons connected on 31 of 69 shots from the floor for 44 percent and were 5 of 12 from the line for 41 percent.

Lee stated that the past week off has helped the Lady Blue Devils. "We have a few injured people who can heal, so we should be in good physical shape."

Lee also said the attitude of the team is still very good and also stated that the goal of the team is to beat UW-Eau Claire and UW-Platteville the second time around. Both will be home games for the Lady Blue Devils.

When asked about the game plan for beating these two teams, Lee said, "I plan to get a ton of scouting reports and a video tape of their games. The team and I will watch the films, try and get their offense down and then go all out and really take it to them."

In WWIAC statistics through February 3, Junior Renee Kasten leads the conference in field goal percentage, shooting 60 of 102 for 58.8 percent. She also leads in rebounding with a 13.2 average through 10 games.

In the latest women's NCAA Division III statistics, Kasten's 13.2 rebounds per game average puts her 7th on the list.

The Blue Devils will travel to UW-Stevens Point Friday night and UW-Oshkosh on Saturday night before returning back to the fieldhouse next Tuesday for the showdown with the Blugold ladies.

Lee noted that this game was moved up from the original February 24th date at Eau Claire's request.

The Eau Claire game continues the "Tiny Tots to Hot Shots" matching contest, and Lee and the team would very much appreciate a lot of support.

Blue Devil tracksters place second in 11-team meet at UW-La Crosse

by Denise Cain

The UW-Stout men's track team placed second out of eleven teams at the UW-La Crosse meet last Saturday. Scoring 78 team points, the Blue Devils finished behind La Crosse.

Once again Co-captain Paul Bons led the squad as he captured two first place finishes. Bons ran the 1,000-yard run in a time of 2 minutes, 18.9 seconds and coasted through the 2-mile run in a time of 9:31.4.

Head Track Coordinator Steve Terry commented that Bons "had a good day running the 1,000 and 2-mile events, especially for the first time this season."

It was the first meet of the season for Co-captain Scott Romenesko, who has been recovering from a knee injury. Romenesko vaulted a height of 14'0" in the pole vault, landing him a second place finish.

When asked about his finish for his first meet, Romenesko replied, "I wasn't really pleased with my performance. I didn't jump to my expectations. I'm still working on my technique."

In a faster lane sprinter Kenute Connell not only placed fifth in the 60-yard dash, but he also captured a fourth place finish in the 300-yard dash in times of 6.7 and 34.1 seconds, respectively.

Another steady Blue Devil force, Dan Doucette, earned himself second place honors in the 200-yard intermediate hurdles with a time of 26.2 seconds. Doucette also proved his ability as he anchored the 800-yard and mile relay teams.

Out in the field, Gary Klopp jumped into a fourth place long jump finish in a distance of 21'8 1/4". He came back to land sixth place with a distance of 42'1/2" in the triple jump.

Demonstrating a team effort, Jeff Fimreite, Mike Todey, Steve Hoeshele and Dan Doucette led the men's mile relay team to a second place finish in a time of 3 minutes, 32.1 seconds.

The 880-yard relay team placed fourth with a time of 1:36.7. The team consisted of front runners Jeff Fimreite, Steve Hoeschele, Rob Woelfel and Dan Doucette.

Another talented runner, Steve Hoeschele, is pleased with the way the season is going, even though the times are slow. Steve responded, "We are training through the meets so it is difficult to determine the full potential of the team. The potential will be easier to determine when we get closer to the conference meet."

Overall Coach Terry said that he was not very pleased with the performances, adding, "We are in the middle of some very hard training weeks. I have confidence that when we begin to taper for conference in two weeks, our times will come down considerably."

Ruggers drop two at Stevens Point

by Slash La Freniere

Despite their good intentions, the Stout Centaurs Rugby Club came away from the Arctic Rugby Fest, held at UW-Stevens Point, empty handed. The Stout ruggers were defeated in both of their matches by 6-0 margins on Saturday and were eliminated in the first round of play.

The weather was beautiful for the matches and was not a factor, as temperatures reached into the 50's and the sun was shining all day long.

In the first game, the Centaurs were pitted against one of the four Stevens Point squads in the tournament, the Point "A" side. Stout had defeated this squad by one point in the fall season and they were confident of doing well again.

The game started with Stout attacking often and the even had a shot at a penalty kick. This type of kick is a result of a major infraction. The team that suffered the penalty is awarded a penalty kick and if the kick goes through the uprights, it is worth three points.

The kick was taken, but it sailed just wide and the match remained scoreless until half time. The Stout ruggers had hoped to knock the Point ruggers out of their own tournament and to advance in the winners bracket.

This was not to be. In the second half, Stevens Point took to the attack and play became very physical.

Point gained possession of the ball from a scrum, which is a method of restarting play. A man from their backline broke free on a long run and scored a try. The try, for four points, along with the conversion, worth two more, gave the Point ruggers their margin of victory.

On the run, Centaur player John Wangen was injured while trying to make the tackle. He later left the match and was replaced by Mike Weege.

Stevens Point held on for the victory as Stout could not penetrate the try zone. A feeling of great dissappointment was shared among the entire Centaur team. Immediately following the match, many team members headed for the first open bar.

The Stout ruggers did have another chance to redeem themselves. In the afternoon match, the Centaurs met Luther College of Decora, Iowa. This match was more of a kicking duel, as both teams tried to advance the ball by kicking for touch, (out of bounds).

This strategy produces a line-out , which is a throw in from the side line. Luther could not maintain possesion of the ball after the line-outs and neither team could control the ball for very long.

Late in the first half, Luther sent a kick into Stout's try zone. Stout fullback Ed reesman gave chase. Reesman only needed to touch the ball down to force a 22 meter drop-out, a form of free kick for Stout.

A Luther player also ran after the ball. Reesman touched the ball first with his hand but the Luther player smothered the ball and was awarded the try. The conversion kick was good and Luther won the match, 6-0.

Said Reesman," It was a bad call by the ref, but one bad call does not make a game.".

The Arctic Fest tournament was eventually won by the Point Old Boy's squad. This tournament puts the winter season to an end for the Stout ruggers. The next match for the Centaurs will come in late March, as they will compete in a Spring season.

Lab hours cut back after computer theft

by Tim Hopkins

The theft of approximately $2,000 of computer equipment from the new Communications Technologies building late Friday afternoon, has left the more than 150 graphic communications students suffering from an eight hour reduction per day in open laboratory hours.

As a protective measure, access to the lab in the newly-remodeled building, located in the old student center, has been restricted to the hours between 4 p.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, except when a class is being conducted there.

Before the theft incident, the open laboratory hours from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday gave students 14 hours a day to use the lab.

Graphic communications instructor Andy Bear was concerned about the impact on graphic communications students caused by cutting the hours of access more than 50 per cent.

Graphic communications program director Dr. James Herr echoed these concerns saying prior to Friday's incident, "We really haven't had a problem" concerning the security of equipment.

Bear identified the missing items as an Apple IIe computer and monitor with two disk drives and two printers.

Campus police supervisor Robert Hoage said the normal policy was to lock all computers down using a bicycle cable chain locking device. Hoage said the equipment stolen from room 126 of the communications center had not been chained down since it was recently moved from Fryklund Hall.

Wednesday morning, Hoage said Protective Services had no leads concerning who stole the computer equipment.

Dr. Herr said that he doubted that the computer equipment had been taken by a Stout student.

One concern is that it was late on the Friday afternoon when the equipment was taken and few people were around, Herr said.

"We're really hoping somebody did see what happened and they do come forward," Herr said.

Responding to the suggested alternative of using a heavy metal chain to secure the computers, Bear said, "Not a single chain could stop somebody from stealing one of the computers."

"I don't care what you do to a computer," Bear added. "If somebody wants it, they'll take it."

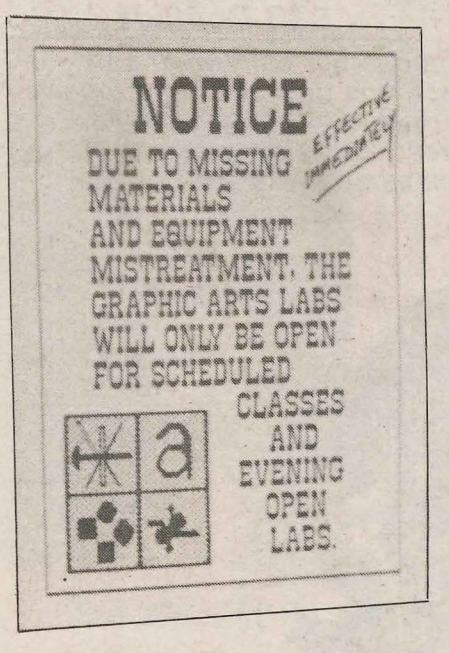
A sign on the door of room 126 of the newly-remodeled communications building tells students that lab hours have been restricted because of a recent theft. Two chairs sit before a bare table where computer hardware, now stolen, once sat.



The four entrances to the new graphic communications and technologies building are double the number of entrances to the Fryklund Hall building which used to house the graphic communications department on one floor.

Bear said the computer equipment in the room was located next to the room's front door and was easily accessible because the room has three entrances.

The department is working with campus security and custodians to review the events in the communications center on the afternoon of the theft.

The graphic communications staff will meet Thursday, Feb. 19 to review what happened and consider changes that might be required in department policy.

According to Dr. Herr, the department is considering having graphic arts students volunteer one hour of their time each week to supervise lab activities. Dr. Herr said the question of workman's compensation coverage for the volunteers needs to be reviewed before the volunteer program becomes a viable option for extending lab hours.

Commenting on the immediate needs at the new building, Herr said, "We have got to get everything secured after the move."

Increased laboratory supervision would help solve the security needs in the new building, Herr said.

"But that's beyond our control," he added, "because the budget doesn't have the dollars to cover that."

Area police enforce illegal sales of beer

by Judy Weitzer

Seven people were arrested by Menomonie Police on February 7th on the charge of selling beer illegally.

The arrests were made after officers entered a large house party under cover and observed the illegal beer sales.

12 half barrels, a stock tank, and other dispensing equipment were confiscated, along with $282 in cash receipts.

According to Wisconsin State Statutes, a Class "B" license is required to authorize "the retail sales of fermented malt beverages to be consumed either on the premises where sold or off the premises."

Chapter XLIII, Section I.5(e) of the Menomonie Ordinances provides for a license quota, granting only one license per 500 population. This includes licenses for both fermented malt beverages and intoxicating liquor.

"We have no more licenses available for issue," said Police Chief Dennis Beety.

Even if licenses were available, there are several other restrictions listed in the Menomonie Ordinances.

Issuance of a license "for the purpose of possessing, selling or offering for sale any alcohol beverages in any dwelling house, flat, or residential apartment" is strictly prohibited by Section I.5(d) of Chapter XLIII.

Menomonie Ordinances also prohibit the issue of a Class "B" license for "any premises which does not conform to sanitary, safety and health requirements of the State Department of Labor, Industry and Human Relations" as stated in Chapter XLIII, Section I.5(d)

In other words, there is no way to have a legal party.

"I do not want to be pitted against the students," Beety claimed. "We're not your nemesis, we're just here as a resource."

Beety expressed his concern for the increasing number of underage students who attend these parties.

Many participants want to "get their money's worth" out of the cover charge. "As a result," Beety stated, "there are more kids committed to hospitals for detoxification than ever before."

Beety's concern also extended to citizens, whose privacy is violated by excessive noise, public urination, littering and vandalism to their property.

Beety said his department intends to "step up enforcement in this area by utilizing under cover officers from other agencies as well as citizen informants."

Retardation likely

Babies born to mothers who were pregnant and lived near the Chernobyl nuclear power plant when it exploded last year are 50 percent more likely than others to be mentally retarded, a researcher said Sunday.

Studies by Robert Gale of the University of California, Soviet doctors and the US Department of Energy estimate that 39 of the 300 babies who have been born to mothers who were exposed to Chernobyl's radiation during their pregnancy will suffer from some form of mental retardation.

Reporters chided

Washington Post reporters were faulted for not being more skeptical of police speculation about a group called the Finders by Post ombudsman Joseph Laitin.

"There was an element of the witch hunt, of Salem, here," said Laitin.

Reporters from the Post covered a story on six children found with two men in a Tallahasee, Florida park. Members of the Finders, who follow the teaches of Lao-Tse, a 5th century B.C. Chinese philosopher, claim they are the mothers of the children.

Local police said the children were dirty, bug-bitten and abused. An anonymous tip told police and the press that human remains could be found on a Finder farm, but the tip and most other charges have been unsubstantiated.

Health department social workers subsequently said that the children were healthy and well-nourished.

The children remain in state care until a judge rules on custody.

Maximum sentence given

An Altoona man who pled guilty to the Jan. 20 murder of UW-Eau Claire student Susan Fahrman, received the maximum penalty of 20 years for second-degree murder.

Jeffrey Allen Smith, 31, was out on a signature bond on a third-degree sexual assault charge at the time of the murder.

In his confession, Smith said that he had met Fahrman through Alcoholics Anonymous. He said that he was still intoxicated from the previous night when he went to Fahrman's apartment on the morning of the murder.

Smith said that he discussed an ex-girlfriend with Fahrman, became upset and attacked Fahrman. He said that he wrapped a leather bootlace around her neck to keep her quiet, tried to sexually assault her and then realized she was dead.

Fahrman's sister found her nude body in the apartment the following day.

This year's placement rate, a near record

by Stout News Bureau

In what has been described as a "sluggish" period for employment, recent UW-Stout graduates achieved a near record placement rate, according to the university's annual placement report.

The report said that 95.8 percent of the 1985-86 graduating class had been placed, mostly in jobs related to their majors at the university.

The report was compiled by a follow-up with all Stout graduates receiving a bachelor's degree during the reporting period, Robert Dahlke, director of Career Planning and Placement Services at Stout explained.

Dahlke's staff was able to reach 93 percent of the class, a figure he described as "significantly high."

This year's placement rate is the third highest in the recent history of the university, where graduates generally show a placement rate of 90 percent or better. Only 1977-78 with a 96.1 percent rate and 1978-79 with a 95.9 percent rate topped the current figure.

"The class did well in what is perceived as a flat market," Dahlke said.

Of those who reported being employed, 90 percent said they were working in fields in or related to their major courses of study.

According to this year's report, 97.2 percent of the education majors were placed.

"For business and industry programs, the overall placement rate was 95.5 percent," the report said. "Salaries for most programs showed increases from previous reports."

Dahlke said that he was pleasantly surprised by this year's figures, which exceeded last year's report by 2 percent.

"It's been a flat economy, thus a flat job market for three or more years," Dahlke said.

Dahlke credited the tenacity of Stout graduates, along with their specific academic preparation, for keeping the placement rate high.

"Students knew it was pretty tough (in the job market) and they worked hard to find employment," Dahlke said.

"The type of student that comes to Stout," Dahlke said, "is employment-oriented. They come with the work ethic and polish it here at Stout."

Dahlke also noted that Stout graduates have a high potential for placement based on the education they receive. Stout programs, Dahlke said, include an abundance of laboratory work, internships and cooperative education, which involves students earning credit while holding full-time semester-long jobs in business and industry.

"As a result of this, a Stout graduate can go to work in industry with little or no additional training," Dahlke said.

Dahlke said much of the increase in demand for Stout graduates comes from the service sector.

"What's happened is we've held our own in the manufacturing areas and grown in the service areas," he said. "The reputation of Stout has increased tremendously in the service sector."

Another unexpected figure in this year's placement report is a 1 percent increase in the number of recruiters coming to campus.

"I think nationwide, college recruitment is down," Dahlke said. "From what I've read, fewer recruiters are visiting most campuses."

Dahlke attributed Stout's high placement rate as a "total university effort." He said an increasing number of staff members at the university are maintaining contact and developing new relationships with business and industry.

Local candidates for City Council welcome student participation

by Rose Shakal

City council candidates Jan O'Neill and Laurel "Vince" Hague both said that they think it is great that the students are getting involved in city government.

The candidates also said the community will benefit from student involvement.

O'Neill opposes Franz Kniesz in Ward IV and Hague is running against Jim Falkofske in Ward V. Kniesz and Falkofske are both Stout students.

Jan O'Neill

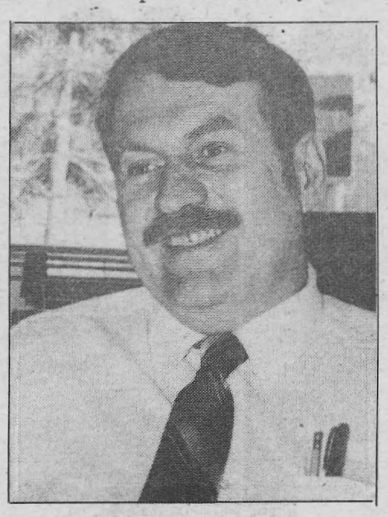
vs.

Hague and O'Neill are also involved in Stout. Hague taught part-time from 1978-1981 as a guest lecturer in the mathematics department.

"I'm familiar with Stout, it's systems, and the students too," Hague said.

"If you live here, you're involved in Stout," he added.

Hague, who has lived in the community for 13-14 years, is involved with the Airport and Rotary Club.



Laurel Hague

O'Neill's husband, Bill O'Neill, teaches in the English department. He has been the advisor to the Stout Student Association and is currently the faculty chair for the University Speakers Series Commission.

"We've had a lot of contacts with the students," O'Neill said.

The O'Neill family has lived in Menomonie for about six years.

O'Neill said there are numerous issues that need to be dealt with, such as more and better parking facilities, economic development of the downtown area, and property improvement.

These topics involve the students, as well as the community, O'Neill said. O'Neill emphasized that this concept is the key in city politics — involving students and the community.

There have been efforts in this direction already, O'Neill pointed out. She cited the Winter Carnival and the University Speakers Series as successful examples.

O'Neill said that joint efforts like these are fruitful to the community and to the students.

"There is so much untapped talent among the students that the community could benefit from," O'Neill said.

Hague said that his biggest concern is helping to remedy some of the governmental problems the City Council is having.

"You kids live here" Hague said. "Everyone who lives here should have a voice."

O'Neill said she feels that the students need a spokesperson; someone to collect data on issues and voice student-oriented concerns to the Council.

Whoever is involved needs to be concerned about the community as well as the students, O'Neill added. Council members, she said, need to have the long-range consequences of their decisions in mind.

O'Neill said she feels she can be a good student representative, and carry some clout with the Council. She is very interested in students' views, and plans to attend Stout student government meetings so she can be up to date on student issues.

The election for City Council members will be held on Tuesday, April 7.

Shultz crowned "Mr. Valentine" in highly successful pageant

by Masha Roberts

Approximately 100 students cheered and shouted in support of the contestants for the 3rd Annual Mr. Valentine's pageant, held for the first time in the Pawn on Thursday, Feb. 12.

"The pageant was organized by several members of the Antrim-Froggart Hall (AF) who have been putting on the show for the past two years now, just for the fun of it," said Jacki Jensen, advisor of the organizers.

> "Only one can be chosen
> —Chris Decoster"

Jensen said that the show has improved considerably over the years. For the first two years, it was held in AF.

Because of the pageant's success this year in the Pawn, ground floor of the Memorial Student Center, the organizers are hoping to hold it next year in the Great Hall.

The hour-long pageant was judged on talent, originality, appearance, poise and how appropriate the contestants answered the questions asked.

One of the questions was, "How would you entertain a beautiful girl on a date?"

Mark Schultz, winner of the Mr. Valentine's pageant, replied to this question that he would take her to a movie or a show, then to dinner,making a little conversation to get to know her better and, finally, to his place for champagne and music.

In the talent category of the pageant, Schultz did a lip-synch to the song "Wise Men Say," and distributed roses to the crowd.

"Schultz won because he consistently presented himself very well throughout the various categories of the pageant," said Denise Lierman, one of the judges of the pageant.

Lierman believes that the show could be more rewarding if a winner is determined in each category judged.

"Everyone did a good job," said Schultz, "but I feel that each of the contestants should have been asked different questions, because

ITS - An instructional service to improve quality of education

by Steven Lemire

Instructional Technology Service (ITS) sits quietly on the western edge of campus, in the Communications Center building, and improves the quality of education for every student at UW-Stout.

ITS designs and produces communications media and instructional aids for faculty and staff. They also maintain communications and graphics equipment all over campus.

"We are a service which designs solutions to instructional problems for faculty, staff and increasingly, students," explained Harry Herbert, director of ITS.

"If you have a message to get across," Herbert added, "ITS can design the best method to present that message."

"When instructors come to us with pre-conceived ideas of what media they wish to use," said Herbert, "it is our job to examine the problem and sometimes steer them toward a better choice of media or technique."

Another important aspect of ITS is designing, installing and maintaining computer and communications systems valued at $2.8 million.

"Over half that cost is the computers in the various resource centers and department offices," said Herbert. "We are responsible for about 5300 pieces of equipment."

ITS designed and installed the new Graphic Communication Lab as well as the sound system for the Field House.

Television sets in many classrooms are tied into the ITS closed circuit television system. Video productions can be shown in any number of classrooms on any of six available channels.

ITS gets some of its programing off the air and from satellite transmissions. A show called "The Learning Network" is taken from satellite and shown on the residence hall network every night.

"We are, of course, very careful to comply with the copyright laws," stated Herbert.

Many videos are produced with the cooperation of ITS and various departments on campus.

Multi-media presentations are created by ITS media specialists and are used to advertise UW-Stout at college fairs and industry conventions.

Tele-conferencing is also conducted in a studio in the Communications Center. The teleconferencing can be used in three ways, said Joseph Hagaman, instructional development consultant for ITS.

"In the first case, a class may assemble in the studio to call an expert in their field for a two-way audio conversation," said Hagaman. "Video transmissions may be picked up via satellite from that location and directed into a classroom's closed circuit set to augment the phone link."

"Also, a professor can teach a continuing education class from Stout to adult students in vocational schools all over Wisconsin," Hagaman explained, "where there would normally not be enough students in one location to assemble a class."

"The other two applications are similar to each other since they are both 'dedicated lines,'" Hagaman said. "That means they are always on."

"One is Education Telephone Network, which is used for extension and continuing education programs," said Hagaman. "They mostly originate from the Madison campus."

"The other is Administrative Telephone Network, which allows counsellors, administrators or even student organizations to meet others all over the state at a fraction of the cost of traveling there," he said.

Some of the additional services provided by ITS are to help with equipment selection for the various departments, in-service programs on topics related to instructional media and conference planning.

"We make extensive use of student labor through the state payroll program," Herbert said.

He said that students who work at ITS have "an excellent opportunity to learn about graphics, maintenance, editing and production."

ITS offers help with student projects, but Herbert emphasized that the service does charge a fee.

"They must understand that we won't do their work for them and we are not a free service of UW-Stout," Herbert said. "We charge for labor, and materials and student projects are not our highest priority."

Marty Springer is the photographic coordinator for Instructional Technology Services (ITS). ITS is a fee-charging service which designs and produces media and instructional aids for faculty and staff at UW-Stout. They also provide and maintain advanced communication systems for student and faculty use.

Correction Box

It was incorrectly printed in The Stoutonia in last week's issue that Lois Von Berg is a registered nurse.

The article, titled "AIDS committee to educate students" should have credited Von Berg with being the director of Student Health Services.

University Notes

by Tracy Lea Landis

"Catch-up" answer

The University of Wisconsin has filed its official response to a court order that required the system administrators to provide an explanation for not implementing "catch-up" pay increases for academic staff.

The UW-System now affirms that academic staff will receive salary increases in two payments.

In his sworn affidavit to the Dane County court which ordered the explanation, Associate Vice President Lemon stated:

"Implementation of the academic staff title and salary structure will be accomplished in two steps. Required salary adjustments...will be paid on April 1, 1987...Employees shall receive fully retroactive...salary adjustments on June 30, 1987."

"We are happy that a schedule has now been established for distributing the long overdue catch-up," said Robert West, Wisconsin Education Association Council academic staff division director.

"However, the university has still not explained why these long delays are appropriate," West added.

Expecting veto

Proposals that would allow collective bargaining for academic staff of the UW-System face almost certain veto by Governor Tommy Thompson.

Senate Bill 25 and Assembly Bill 24, recently passed by the legislature, would allow academic staff to organize and bargain for salaries, benefits and working conditions.

Academic staff include persons employed as librarians, researchers, instructors, counselors and other non-faculty jobs.

Thompson is expected to veto any bill that would point toward collective bargaining for faculty, an idea he has opposed for quite some time.

Twenty-five other states already have legislation allowing collective bargaining by employees of their university systems.

Sharp future

UW-System campuses will have more sharply defined missions and improved undergraduate programs in the future, UW-System President Kenneth Shaw predicted at a convocation speech in early February.

Speaking at a UW-Madison convocation ceremony which marked the first anniversary of his appointment to head the UW-System, Shaw said that the university system was built when Wisconsin was in a prosperous period.

Shaw said that at that time, the taxpayers of the state were able to support the system.

"The economic climate has changed drastically since those days," Shaw said.

Since Shaw was appointed, a plan has been mapped out for the system's future which calls for enrollment cuts and higher tuition.

It is up to the Board of Regents, the university community and the rest of the state, Shaw said, to see that the state's declining wealth, its lower tax base and foreign competition do not erode the quality of the UW-System.

"The battles by which this state struggles to meet the challenges of a changing world," Shaw said, "the battles by which this nation competes against other nations, are going to be won in the classrooms of our schools and universities."

Abuse services

Evaluation services for students with alcohol and other drug related abuse are available through the Stout Alcohol and Other Drug Education Program (AODEP).

The AODEP is sponsored by student services and is located in the lower level of Bowman Hall.

AODEP services are available to students and employees of the university who wish to discuss drug-related discipline issues, concerns about a family member's drinking problems or a friend's consumption patterns and resultant behaviors.

The office will also help connect individuals with self-help groups like AA, AlAnon and Adult Children of Alcoholics. Media resources, films and tapes that relate to alcohol and other drug issues, can be located through the office.

AODEP is seeking interested individuals to volunteer some time and effort in the development of programs. People interested in volunteering can call 232-1211 or 232-2111 and ask for Allen Ebel, program coordinator.

Landlords meet students—

Students considering relocating their stuff got a chance to shop around for an off-campus rental at the Off-Campus Housing Fair, sponsored by the UW-Stout student government. The event, organized by John Lee, Landlord/Tenant Representative of the Stout Student Association, was held on the Cobblestone Court. Landlords from the city of Menomonie set up displays and talked with students about rental property available.

Student seat on Positive Action Committee under discussion

by Gretchen Eke

There may be student representation on the University Level Faculty Positive Action Committee after the Faculty Senate votes on it, according to a report made to Stout Student Association (SSA) representatives at Tuesday's meeting.

The Positive Action Committee reviews complaints against faculty members.

It was reported at this Tuesday's SSA meeting that Chancellor Swanson had written a letter to the Faculty Senate, the governing body for Stout faculty, urging them to vote on this issue by March 3.

Chapter Six of the UW Administrative Code directs the faculty to designate a committee to hear grievances, according to John Enger, director of University Relations.

Such a committee, Enger added, shall have the power to conduct hearings and the authority to recommend solutions to the Chancellor.

"Chancellor Swanson told the Faculty Senate floor to get going on it," Vice President of Academic Affairs Julie Weiss reported to the SSA Senators.

Weiss also told the senators that Chancellor Swanson was urged to put pressure on the Faculty Senate after receiving a letter to do so from SSA President Paul Nelson.

"Our process indicated that this concern be forwarded to the Faculty Senate Personnel Policies Committee for consideration," said Dr. Susan Nurrenbern, Faculty Senate chair.

"During the first semester of this year," Nurrenbern added, "a sub-group of that committee was formed to deal with the issue."

Nurrenbern said that, shortly after she received a letter from the SSA president, the chair of the Personnel Policies Committee, Dr. Lorry Sedgewick, reported to the Senate.

Nurrenbern said that Sedgewick reported that "the sub-committee was preparing a final recommendation on the subject and that it would be coming to Faculty Senate very soon."

At a meeting with the Chancellor shortly after, Nurrenbern said, Swanson indicated that since a report was forthcoming, there was no reason for him to interfere Nurrenbern said that the Chancellor asked if it was possible for the Faculty Senate to act on the matter on March 17.

"So there wasn't any pressure from anybody here," said Nurrenbern, "least of all the Chancellor."

Next week the SSA will vote on a constitutional change which would establish a job description for the position of the Minority Affairs Senator.

The Financial Affairs Committee of the SSA has announced that its budget recommendations will not be released until Tuesday, Feb. 24.

some of us who overheard got a better chance to prepare for answering."

Agnes Duda, a member of the audience, said that she believed that the show could be improved by having entertainment while the contestants were changing and more publicity to encourage others to participate.

Regardless, Duda said, "My friends and I had a great time and the show was good overall."

Having a bigger place for the event is not such a bad idea, Duda added.

Shelley Holen and Chris Decoster, other members of the audience, said they felt that all the contestants did a good job. They said that the contestants had to have guts to be there in the first place.

Both Ryan Tonolli and John Steffers, contestants in the pageant, said that they signed up for the show because they were asked and also for the fun of it.

"At first it was embarrassing, but the deeper the show got, the less embarrassed I felt," said Steffers.

The five female hall directors were invited to judge the contest by the organizers of the pageant.

Second and third place winners in the competition were Tim Elmer and Dave Clay, respectively.

Audience members Holen and Decoster said they felt that, for those who did not win, credit is due, and they should try again.

"All deserved to win, but only one can be chosen," said Decoster.

First reaction to theft neglects the students

The theft of the computer equipment from the communications technologies laboratory was unfortunate but the severe reduction of laboratory hours only added to the problem.

This knee jerk reaction by the administration hurt dozens of students by closing a laboratory for an eight hour period each day which these students considered essential to getting their work done. It is difficult to blame the students for failing to be their brother's keeper when it is believed the computer was taken late on a Friday afternoon when the laboratory is normally closed and few if any students are around.

Closing the laboratory is responding to the symptom rather than the cause of the problem. The computer in this case was not even locked up as normal procedure dictates. It has been said that locking the computer to a cable would have been inadequate deterrence.

UW-Stout needs to establish a system which virtually eliminates the chance of a computer being taken without limiting our ability to use them. In this case, the thievery by one or a few individuals damaged the rights of many students to use the computer.

Since creating as many open laboratory hours as possible for students while maintaining needed security is the goal, qualified students can work together by volunteering their time to supervise operations in the laboratory. If workman's compensation is a consideration eliminating student volunteers from the picture, student's might consider signing waivers on workman's compensation so UW-Stout need not feel vulnerable hiring them.

The student's enrolled here to study graphic arts deserve the opportunity to do just that and ought not be penalized for inadequate security measures for which they had no responsibility.

The Rubber Review

Jef Maynard

It couldn't be any more socially or morally offensive than any other "personal hygene products." We see ads for all sorts of menstrual paraphenalia, including Maxi-pads that have wings, and for all I know, fly out of the box and stick into place.

Preparation-H and other bunghole medications could be pretty disgusting to some people. And what could be more repulsive than what happens to those plush, absorbent Pampers after a meal of Gerber's Liver and Onion Puree?

Our civilization, this six-lane backroad to oblivion we call Western Culture has a strange repulsion to almost any body function. Our secretive toilet ritualism makes it appear as though we shouldn't have these functions, no one else has them, and if they find out we have them, we will be forever an Outcast even among the unclean.

Meandering through a downtown drugstore, I went looking for a condom display. Down the wrong aisle, I found a stash of over-the-counter diet pills. They all said Maximum Strength. They all said "the most powerful, potent, etc, diet aid available without a prescription." They all turned out to be 75 mg. of phenolpropanolamine. Ride 'em, cowboy.

After coming down the right aisle, I found a much larger display of condoms than I expected. No longer a few Trojans modestly and suspicisously tucked away near the cash register, there they were in plain view of nice old ladies, who are always buying stuff in the drugstores, and little kids, who are always buying stuff in the drugstores.

Now if they can be displayed openly to nice old ladies and rambunctious little kids, right across from cold sore medications, lip balms, mouth washes and various gargles who is going to be surprised that they show up on TV?

Has possession of a condom actually ever caused someone to commit an immoral act?

The products vary in price and appeal. Fourex brand Natural Skins are expensive, like $2 apiece. The thing that bothers me about these is that they have a picture of a sheep on the box. Just what are they getting at? (What does the cow say? moo, what does the cat say? Meow, what does the sheep say? Go home to your wife.)

Trojans have been around since before the Immaculate Conception and lead the pack in variety. All condoms are indiviually tested and wrapped. Can you imagine how tired the testers are after an eight-hour shift?

Most packages warn that the condom is not 100 percent pregnancy-proof. They also warn against "excessive heat." I suppose they melt from excessive friction. This is known as "condom meltdown."

The on-package advertising is unintentionally comical. The couple pictured on Excita Ultra Ribbed features a nice-looking woman in a high-collar blouse. The guy is ecstatic apparently from a kiss on the cheek. Another Excita product has a picture of the same guy, but a different woman. You can think what you want about that.

Some condoms are directly packaged for women to purchase. Lady Protex has a smart looking turgouise and silver package for "today's woman."

One product is called Tingla. It is made by a company called Peacock. I'll avoid my juvenile tendency towards a joke here. On the box it says, "another fine product from Dean Rubber Co." They also make fine steel-belted radial tires.

Peacock also makes Redi-Wet, (probably for the premature ejaculators.) You have to look carefully, because the box looks like you could be buying ski wax. "The original—accept no substitutes."

The people upset by TV condom ads might be the same people who refer to their genitals as "pudendum," from the Latin word for "shame." The shame is in the voluntary ignorance.

Subject: The benefits gained from participating in the DECA organization

by Tim Hopkins

Via a circuitous route, Dean Tabor became a marketing education instructor at UW-Stout, as well as the advisor of the Distributive Education Clubs of America (DECA) chapter.

A native of the Durand area, Tabor was drafted into the Army in 1969. He spent four and one half years in the Army which included a tour of duty in Vietnam as a member of the 101st Airborne division.

He returned to the Menomonie area through a public relations type job for the Army which requested "home town" individuals to work presenting the Army as a viable option for graduating high school students. Tabor spent two and one half years recruiting students from the local high schools.

Encouraged by the GI Bill, Tabor then enrolled at Stout. Tabor graduated from Stout in 1978, he taught at the Altoona high school but claimed no initial intention of teaching at the college level. The marketing education instructor and DECA advisor says he oversees "probably the biggest DECA chapter in the nation." DECA has 80 Stout members and the group continues growing as DECA tries to turn its attentions to the needs of the nontraditional students at Stout today.

Dean Tabor

Tabor said that DECA involvement was strongly encouraged for marketing education students and he is confident that the number of DECA members will grow because "the demand for teachers is there." Tabor's confidence for the future of marketing education is bolstered by the 80 percent increase in marketing education enrollment here since 1980.

Tabor said that marketing education and the DECA activities attract students "who certainly have an interest in the people

Drug testing is needed

I would like to respond to the Campus Slant survey on company drug testing. First, let me confuse the issue with some facts from the Semiconductor Safety Association's January, 1987 journal. The alcohol/drug user has four times the absenteeism rate and five times the normal worker compensation claims rate of the unimpaired employee. Chemically-dependent employees have an accident rate four times greater than their non-chemically-dependent counterparts. They cost their employers between 25 and 33 percent of their annual income in terms of accidents, absenteeism, inefficient work, tardiness, etc. Burned-out workers are one of the factors in America's sliding competitive ability.

Many people appeal to the concept of civil liberties to stop activities such as drug testing. What they fail to understand is that civil liberties cannot exist without commensurate responsibility. American s wouldn't dream of testing people for drugs except that dopers and drunks are killing "innocent" people and ruining our economy.

Mark J. Hottel

Compassion is needed

I feel the point Gene (Emahiser) was trying to make in comparing Josh McDowell and Craig Karges was not one of how it was advertised, but on how many students benefited from having each come to campus. If we looked at it properly, we would see that about 1500 students attended Josh McDowell. Sure, people left and I will give you the benefit of the doubt that maybe 100 people did so that evening. That still leaves us with 1,400 compared to 150 at Craig Karge's show. Now, I am not saying that one is more important than the other, however, McDowell dealt with something that affects everyone sooner or later, and that's a relationship.

I guess I have to disagree with Rita Dahms, I feel that I am getting my money's worth from Gene Emahiser's column. If not for the fact that he is opening my eyes to issues that I would have ignored before. I think people get upset with Gene because he stands firm in his beliefs and convictions and does not falter. As for the rest of us, we can seldom make a stand on anything, we are easily swayed by earthly and worldly values. So, when we see someone firm in their beliefs, that person becomes the point of attack.

This world certainly needs to make room for compassion. If we could only do our "homework" and seek the truth and be honest with ourselves, maybe then we can accept other people's opinions and accept them for who they are in stead of condemning them.

Sincerely, DAVE IRWIN

Getting it straight

Two weeks ago The Stoutonia erroneously referred to people under the age of 21 as "minors" in its article about alcohol consumption on campus. The law in the state of Wisconsin is quite clear on who is a minor and who is not.

CAMPUS SLANT/ What do you think of collecting interest on your security deposit?

By Brian Kraimer

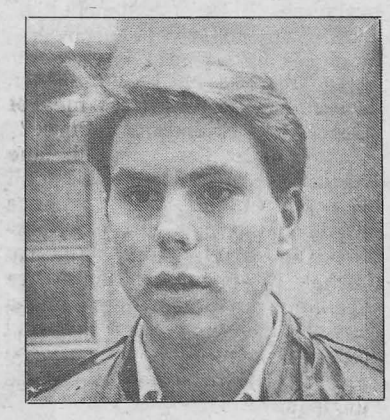
Ray Thompson,
Industrial Technology,
Senior,

When I used to rent, before I came to UW-Stout, I did collect interest on my security deposit. So I think it is only fair that you should be able to collect it here. When I rented they told me they would take some of my security deposit for cleaning, which I do not think is fair. I think a check in and out service would take care of these problems.

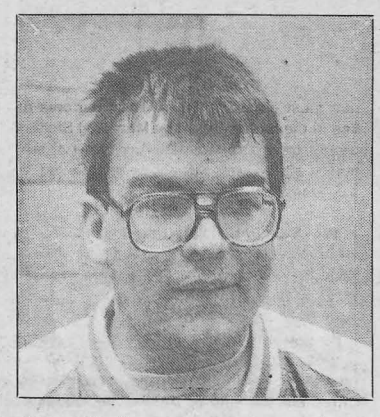
Jill Caflisch,
Vocational Rehabilitation,
Sophomore,

They almost have to give us interest on our security deposits. I think they will have to do a thorough check of the place before they check in and then again when they check out so they know what damage was actually done. If this is done, the tenants will not get wrongly accused of any damage.



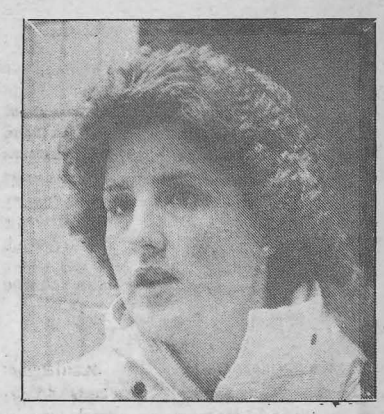
Adrian Amelse,
Industrial Technology,
Senior,

I really like the idea of tenants receiving interest because I know some of the landlords are in big outfits that have 13 to 20 homes and are collecting $2500-3000. Students are being taxed enough and I think right know it is a good idea that they get some interest on their deposit.



Steve Holten,
H&R Management,
Sophomore,

My friends and I just put down a security deposit of $770, and interest on the money would be nice. I like the check in and check out policy. I think that this will be good for accessing damage. If you incur some damage you should have to pay for it. I think that the new system will save me some money.



Peggy Perry,
Fashion Merchandising,
Senior,

I really like the idea of collecting interest on my security deposit. I think that the system that used to be in effect did not work too well. The check in service was not done thorough enough. We have some damage this year that we did not do and I know we will be charged for it.

America will not be Amerika

Ali Vazirabadi

Ten years from now, Russia will gain power of the United States, aided by the United Nations. The capital will move from D.C. to Chicago. The picture of Lincoln -the president who signed for the freedom of black slaves - will be on the flag with Lenin. The logo of the United Nations will be portrayed with the Soviet flag.

It is unfortunate to see that ABC is getting so desperate that it produced a too narrow-minded a movie like Amerika. It is important to know why ABC production is spending $40 million for a boring fiction movie like Amerika. It is also hard to see why this kind of movie is suddenly aired at a time when the Reagan administration shows its impotence on arms control with the Soviets.

It is unfair, unethical, and opportunistic to stereotype any groups, country, or organization under the name of freedom.

The history of East and West shows that both sides are good at stereotyping people and groups. For example, in the not-too-old movies, Mexicans were always portrayed as maids and third class people, and blacks were shown as bad guys and thieves, and so on.

The Cold War is one of the basic weapons for both sides to gain support for their policy such as in Arms Control. On Soviet television, the CIA agent is stereotyped as cold and capitalist; a slave owner. On the other hand, American television shows the KGB agent in the same negative way with some hard English accent.

It is very difficult to find the real truth in a movie. Amerika is a sympathetic movie production that presents both sides fairly.

Some other television productions try to offset the propaganda of movies like Amerika; programs like Donahue from Moscow or Beyond Fear by CNN production do just that.

At a time in history when nuclear power can destroy the Earth 20 times, it is important and necessary to communicate with other countries such as the Soviet Union.

Media should play a responsible and constructive role by bringing people and governments together.

It is also obvious that the United States will not be invaded through El Paso, Texas. The invasion of the United States starts from inside of the country by ultra right and left groups who brainwash people with their idealogy and religion.

It is at that time that ethnocentrism of groups starts to destroy the humanity and democracy under the name of God or religion or political party. Movements like this happened in Germany in the 1930's and 40's.

Defending the United States doesn't come with a propaganda movie like Amerika. Defending this country from communism comes by educating people about principles of freedom and justice and the constitution of this country.

It has been shown that the majority of college students still don't know about the ten Amendments of U.S. constitution.

Movies such as Amerika and Rambo don't solve the problem of communism, but instead increase the fear and anxiety among the people. A fight against a bankrupt idealogy like communism should begin by educating not only U.S. citizens, but all the people around the world, about democracy and justice for all.

businesses." He mentioned the growing dichotomy between the emphasis on technical skills and personal service today. As computers take over many previously clerical tasks and eliminate the lower level decision-making tasks, managers will increasingly need to focus on personal service to the consumer as the key to success.

He stressed the flexibility that marketing education students end up with. "Some majors are pretty much stuck," he said, referring to the limitation of options for some graduates to their specific specialty. Marketing education offers students the option of moving back and forth between business and education careers, he said.

Tabor said a strong factor that businesses often consider essential to the marketing education job candidate is the skill to perform effectively with a large group of people. Tabor said marketing education students prove these skills by gaining the 4,000 hours of student teaching required for certification in marketing education.

A key element to the effective marketing education program at Stout is a strong DECA organization like the one at Stout, said Tabor. The DECA's are designed to develop leadership and advisorship skills through their focus on the elements in the DECA diamond, leadership development, civic consciousness, social intelligence and vocational understanding.

In 1972, the state lowered its age of majority to 18. It has never changed. People mistakenly believe that the minimum drinking age and the age of majority are the same thing. They are not. If the age of majority were raised to 21, people under that age would not be able to vote, handle contracts, file lawsuits, or receive medical treatment without parental consent.

The proper term for someone over the age of 18, but under 21, who is in violation of a law dealing with alcohol is "underage drinker". The Stoutonia, local taverns, and other people should use the correct term in the future, as this is a sensitive issue among many people under the age of 21.

Bottom Line

The big beer bust

Rich Brueckner

"You'll never hear their standard-issue kicking in your door."–Roger Waters

Stout's beer parties are now receiving national attention thanks to Police Chief Beety's highly visible beer bust.

The Milwaukee Journal gave The Jungle a front page story. My hysterical parents immediately called to find out if I was involved. Sorry Dad, I got there too late.

You may wonder why this event received so much publicity. Stout parties have been getting busted since the dawn of selective law enforcement.

What we have here is what the police like to call a "crackdown on a serious breach of the law". The chief says that there are more parties since the drinking age changed. Give me a frotting break.

The new law has created a legion of adults who are now "under-age drinkers". Enforcement has been about as effective as the network ban on condom advertising.

Things really start happening when the rules change. Another crackdown might result if the police suspect that some people in the dorms are using their new microwaves to dry their dope.

What happens during a crackdown? The police use informants and question people with stamps on their hands. They storm the house and grab the beer. It's kind of like when another school's rugby team rolls into town.

What are the effects of a crackdown? A few parties get cancelled. This ensures additonal customeers for the houses with enough balls to throw one anyway.

All kinds of related crimes result from these parties.. The worst of which may be when this line works: "Do you feel that sexual pleasure in a mature relationship is directly proportional to emotional committment?"

They weren't born yesterday here. In Whitewateer, you can sell buttons at the door of a party and give the beer away. We live under a different interpretation of the law in this town thanks to the valiant efforts of District Attorney Michael Furnstahl.

You can sometimes see the DA eating lunch in the Terrace Cafe. Just look for the guy in the trenchcoat and thank him for a dull weekend.

The chief apparently reads The Stoutonia. I went in there once about a parking ticket and he knew me by name. I was glad he has a good sense of humor.

The Stoutonia will let you know if parties cease to exist around here. It'll be on the front page next to the story about the 10th anniversary of the Soviet takeover of America.

Graphic design prof. shares his expertise

by J. Dauplaise

On Monday, February 16, students in the Graphic Design program had a unique opportunity to view the work of a Graphic Design professor from another university and to hear his views about the field and future of graphic design.

Philip Hamilton, a Graphic Design professor from UW-Madison spoke at 6:00 p.m. in Applied Arts room 321 to a group of students and faculty.

Hamilton recieved his BS in Advertising Design from the University of Cincinnati in 1961, and his MFA in Graphic Design, Printmaking and Art History in 1964 from Indiana University. He has a great deal of experience in the design field and is enthusiastic about sharing his knowledge with others.

Hamilton shared his insights about Graphic Design with the audience, emphasizing the increasing importance of new technology, specifically computer graphics, and the growth of design in such areas. Job opportunities were pointed out for designers in areas such as film, video, photography, packaging and signage, in addition to the traditional emphasis on print and typography.

Several times Hamilton mentioned the advantage Stout students had in their experience with the packigang application of graphics in their Product and Package Design class. He mentioned that lack of experience in that particular area was a downfall of Madison's Graphic Design program. Early in his career Hamilton had done design work for such companies as Duncan Hines cake mixes, Jif peanut butter, and Crest toothpaste.

In addition to surveying the job market, Hamilton gave his personal views on the importance of design as a means of communication.

> Good design is beautiful, innovative, and creative
> —Phil Hamilton

"Good design," he said "is beautiful, innovative, and creative. It teaches and informs .. it reflects a new way of seeing."

Hamilton emphasized the importance of originality and commented negatively about plagiarism.

"I see lots of it, not only in student work but in the professional world."

Hamilton said of such overworked ideas, "99 percent are mediocre."

Earlier in the day, Hamilton had reviewed th portfolio work of seniors graduating from Stout's Graphic Design program in May.

"There's a sense of individuality here," said Hamilton, who dissaproves of copying styles from others.

After expressing his view of the Graphic Design field, Hamilton showed slides of his work compiled since he came to Wisconsin in 1964. Many impressive pieces were shown.

Among the pieces show were a graphic system he developed for the University, which included establishing a unified university publication system which saved the university 33 percent of their alotted printing budget.

Hamilton later developed a new symbol for the Madison campus, his version of Bucky Badger, and numerous announcements and invitations to university events.

Hamilton also showed some of his free lance work for a myriad of Madison - based businesses.

Hamilton then showed ideas of student work done in Madison. This was particularly interesting to students in Graphic Design, giving them a chance to compare their work against students from another program.

It was a great opportunity to see what other students are doing and how they're doing it.

It's a shame more students did not attend the lecture and slide review. Those who did attend gained information, confidence and inspiration.

The Graphic Design Association hosted a guest speaker on Monday. Phil Hamilton is a professor of graphic design at U.W. Madison. Hamilton reviewed the portfolios of seniors in graphic design, gave them advice and later commented on Stout's program at a lecture in the evening. He also presented slides of his student's work.

University Dance Club offers Children's Day

by Jennifer Tooley

Rarely do we think of university students and elementary school kids together, but this Saturday, the University Dance Club will change this view. At 10:00 am in the Crystal Ballroom, the first Children's Day will take place at UW-Stout, uniting college students and kids through dance.

> —Kathy Noziska

"I think it will be fun," said Dance Club Vice-President Kathy Noziska. "It will be a good day of exercise and healthy activity!"

The Dance Club is inviting children from the Menomonie area, ages 5-12, to come to Stout; they will be teamed with a big brother or sister who will guide them through two dance routines and keep them company during a light lunch provided by the club.

Dance Club President, Kaleene Kenning came up with the Children's Day idea. Kenning taught dance in Minneapolis before starting school at Stout. She missed teaching and saw Children's Day as a way to be with children again. "I'm really looking forward to it, it's so much fun to be with the kids." said Kenning.

The members also see the event as a way to enhance the relationship between Stout students and the residents of Menomonie, as well as a small fund raising event for the club. For $5, parents can let their children have an enjoyable experience under the guidance of the club members. "It's a break for moms," said Noziska. "You can't hire a baby sitter for that much."

The Dance Club hopes to make Children's Day an annual event. Anyone wishing to participate in this year's Children's Day, the club suggests contacting Nicole Braun, Club Secretary, or to arrive at the event 15 minutes prior to the 10:00 am start time.

Student group, "Dance Dimension" offers non-alcoholic alternatives

by Stephanie Weiss

Dance Dimension, a non-alcoholic alternative to the bars, celebrated it's one-year anniversary Saturday, February 14 in the Great Hall.

Dance Dimension, started by Derrick Gibson, Derek Perez, Liz Pumper and Gail Krezowski, grew out of house parties at the Beat Box.

The original proposal for Dance Dimension included a provision for alcohol "because we were dealing with what we thought was a drinking student body" said Perez.

The provision was cut because the founding members, "didn't drink that much."

"We wanted a place where people could socialize without getting drunk," said Perez.

Because Dance Dimension wants to create a nightclub atmosphere there is an enforced dress code, waiters and waitresses to serve mocktails and soda along with a several DJ's- to "spin the right tunes."

"If people take the time to dress up we thought they'd act more mature," said Perez.

with S.U.D.S. and the Stout Powerlifting Club, who act as bouncers.

"Working with S.U.D.S. gave them publicity and us more publicity," said advertising representative Krezowski.

To help celebrate their first anniversary, Dance Dimension brought in the Twin Cities band, Vision. Originally from St. Louis, the five-man band played a range of music including Prince, Duran-Duran and Janet Jackson.

"If you like dance music," said student Sherri Malicki, "you can't go wrong...I could listen to this music 24-hours a day."

Perez, Gibson, Krezowski, Pumper and others involved with Dance Dimension hope to make the dance a weekly event.

"With the drinking age being raised to 21 it (Dance Dimension) will give the underage students something to do, somewhere to bring a date," said DJ Peter Dufek.

With an average turnout of 200-300 people, Dance Dimension's crowd is mostly Stout students, some UW-Eau Claire and UW-River Falls students and even some high-school students.

"I think the turnout is great," said Nick Loise, "there's more to college than just bars and this is a chance to do something besides drinking."

Food For Thought

"I hope that something better comes along." - Kermit the Frog

It is my twenty-first birthday today. That makes me adult. What a horrible feeling. The scariest thing about being 21 is the fact I have to face another collection of birthday cards from my two grandfathers wondering if I am going to get married.

The picture looks grim. I thought maybe I should ask women of the campus how they can manage to keep a man. Hopefully by Easter I will have something to bring to the fertile farm community of Murdock, Minnesota, population 343.

Ten Ways To Keep A Man

1) Keep mystery in the relationship. In another words, never cook for him. It will be over the minute he spies your secret macaroni-tuna delight.

2) Never let him see you without your make-up. There is nothing more appalling than a cake without frosting or a woman without make-up.

3) Stay physically fit. This is easily accomplished by wearing a pair of Reebok shoes and skipping around in your leotard and tights.

4) Never give him too much. Serve him the appropriate portions that leave him a little hungry.

5) Never forget dessert. A package of Oreo cookies and a glass of cold milk will satisfying any yearning man.

6) Buy him presents. The most appropriate gifts are those that you can both enjoy. A fine example for this would be a bottle of Obsession perfume.

7) Allow him his night out with the guys. Just make sure that you are one of the guys.

8) Never do his dishes or wash his laundry. Jealous feelings might evolve between his mother and yourself.

9) Let him stay friends with his old girlfriends. Just make sure they know you are armed and dangerous.

10) Keep a good sense of humor. Laugh at the fact he eats like an animal from a farm. The following recipes are my all-time favorite foods that I will eat for the birthday supper and probably all night long. The frosting recipe goes terrific on top of German chocolate cake.

Spaghetti Pie

6 oz. cooked spaghetti
2 Tbsp. butter
2 eggs well beaten
1/2 cup Parmesan cheese

Mix all of these ingredients together and form into in a 10-inch pie plate.
Mix 6 oz. tomato paste
8 oz. can tomatoes
1 tsp. sugar
1 tsp. oregano
1/2 tsp. garlic salt
Mix and set aside.
In a fry pan brown: 1 lb. ground beef
1/2 onion
1/4 cup peppers
Add the tomato mixture to this and heat through.
Add to the spaghetti crust: 1 cup cottage cheese,

Add tomato/beef mixture on top of cottage cheese. Bake for 20 minutes, uncovered in 350-degree oven. Sprinkle 1/2 cup mozzarella cheese on top and return to oven for 5 minutes. (You may add as much cheese as you desire.)

Caramel Filling with Chocolate Chip Glaze

1 cup brown sugar
1/2 cup sour cream
3 egg yolks
Cook until thick. Add choppped nuts and 1 tsp. vanilla. Spread over cooled German chocolate cake.
For glaze, heat: 1/2 cup semi-sweet chocolate chips
2 Tbsp. margarine
1 Tbsp. light corn syrup

Stir constantly until chocolate is melted then drizzle over caramel filling.

Student-run organization creates book of creative art

by Steve Voll

Prometheus was a Greek god who stole the divine fire from those infamous gods on Mount Olympus. After he stole the divine fire, he gave it to the common mortal man to do with it as he pleases. Needless to say, Prometheus was punished for this dastardly deed. Today, "Prometheus" is known as a creative arts journal right here on the Stout campus.

"Prometheus" is a student run organization that is filled with creative work that is done from the first semester through the second week in the second semester. The work includes five categories: black and white drawing, black and white photography, poetry, fiction and non-fiction articles. The work is judged by a rotating panel of judges from the University staff. Prizes are awarded in each category ranging from $25 to $50.

Warren Lang, the staff advisor, emphasized that entries are open to all students on the campus and that the student staff runs the journal. He was very happy with the student staff he had this year.

"They are a good staff and very responsible." He also mentioned that positions are open to students who are interested in being staff members next year.

The four positions that constitute the "Prometheus" staff are editor, graphics editor, business manager, and arts editor. This years staff in respective order are John Michael, Tim Fox, Dave Aschenbrenner, and Mike Laing.

The editor, John Michael, who has been on the staff for the past two years, was happy with the position on the staff as it related directly to his major, which is graphic arts management.

"I, personally, really enjoy working with "Prometheus" and the positive reactions we've gotten in the past." The work, he said, involved organizational skills that would be a helpful experience for any major. It is a good experience to be a part of such a project.

"Prometheus," which has been circulating each spring since 1962, is growing in popularity according to Michael. He also encourages people to think about entering their work for next year.

The "Prometheus" creative arts journal will be released this spring in the middle to the end of April. It willl be distributed without cause in most of the buildings on the campus.

This spring, make a break for it.

"YES, THERE IS LIFE AFTER BREAST CANCER. AND THAT'S THE WHOLE POINT."

–Ann Jillian

A lot of women are so afraid of breast cancer they don't want to hear about it.

And that's what frightens me.

Because those women won't practice breast self-examination regularly.

Those women, particularly those over 35, won't ask their doctor about a mammogram.

Yet that's what's required for breast cancer to be detected early. When the cure rate is 90%. And when there's a good chance it won't involve the loss of a breast.

But no matter what it involves, take it from someone who's been through it all.

Life is just too wonderful to give up on. And, as I found out, you don't have to give up on any of it. Not work, not play, not even romance.

Oh, there is one thing, though.

You do have to give up being afraid to take care of yourself.

One Point Perspective

The Naked Truth

J. Dauplaise

Last semester, when registering for classes at Bowman Hall, I achieved a task of monumental importance. I finally, after garnering 103.5 credits, managed to register early enough to secure a position in a Life Drawing class.

Anyone who has ever attempted to gain admittance to the class will understand my exultation. While vociferously exclaiming my achievement to a friend, a nearby eavesdropper whispered to a companion, "They get to draw naked people in there."

The person who made this comment is among many who misunderstand the purpose of the class and also that there is a distinct difference between sexuality and nudity.

I'm sure many girls remember their seventh grade gym class. In the locker room it was standard procedure to cram your torso as far into your locker as possible, and to don the dreaded gym uniform undetected by classmates also jamming themselves face forward into their lockers.

I find it unfortunate that people are brought up ashamed of their bodies. In Greece, France, and other countries most people sunbathe nude and could care less who sees them.

I am not suggesting running nude in the streets, especially in this weather. I do wish, however, that people were more accepting of and comfortable with their own bodies. It's too bad that the media promotes such images of unattainable air brushed perfection as a standard of judgement.

Anyone who has had Life Drawing can attest that the class does not consist of the lustful rendering of Heather Locklear and Rob Lowe look-a- likes. In fact, without going into graphic detail, some of the models have figures straying quite far from the current standard of perfection.

The object of the class however, for the uninformed, is to master, or rather attempt to master the difficult art of figure drawing. The human form, in my estimation, is the most difficult subject to render well.

Believe me, everyone in the class is so intent on drawing, and drawing well that there is no energy left to indulge a single lustful thought. I am speaking at least from my own experience, and assuming it on the part of my classmates swearing and stamping around me.

There are those, however, that are convinced that they are missing out on a huge thrill in viewing the nude models. Last semester a certain young gentleman, who had class in the life drawing room just prior to the life drawing class, would find any number of ways to linger about the room until the class started in hope of viewing a nude model.

He would ploy the instructor with preposterously contrived questions on the level of, "Say, what time is the sun supposed to rise tomorrow in southern New Hampshire?" If this method failed to buy enough time, the old trick of spilling drawing supplies all over the floor, then retrieving them with the speed of a comatose Neanderthal would be employed.

This person was extreme, but not alone in his attempts to view the models. I've heard many footsteps slow to a grinding halt outside the door as curious hall wanderers attempted to sneak a peek at the really hot action going on inside the classroom.

I've even heard success stories of those who've succeeded in their attempts to see inside the room.

"Yeah, and she was naked and everything."

I have always wondered at the origin of the phrase, 'naked and everything'. I have always thought 'naked and nothing' would be more appropriate.

Aside from the antics of such overbearingly mature individuals, I still have some degree of faith in the superior intelligence of homo sapiens.

After all, the calculating maneuvers necessary to gain admission to the class are testament enough to the enduring and indomitable human spirit.

Spontaneous Combustion

The Morning After

James 'Unk' Falkofske

Last week you found out how to plan, have, and survive holding a crash and bang bash at your house. Now that you know what to do during the party, here are some "morning after" tips.

Depending upon how enthusiastic your friends were, many steps may be unnecessary and overlooked . However, for the best of bashes, the cleanup is as follows.

Remember how your friends had so much fun the night before? Well, they are now sleeping in the driveway covered with mud and sand. Wake them up and ask them to rake the plastic cups off the front lawn. Ask your neighbors if you can borrow the rake and shovel

More than likely you will awaken earlier than your other roommates. Go to their rooms and get the bedspreads from them. They make handy mops for the linoleum in the kitchen.

If your roommates don't want to help in the cleanup, padlock one bathroom (hopefully the house has more than one), and superglue the lid on the other. As the day wears on, you'll soon get some responsive workers wanting the combination to the toidy.

Whatever smells like "lost lunch" should be donated to the local Goodwill (what do you mean, security deposit). It is also a good idea to let the sanitation department know that some people are now lodging in the dumpster. Pickup next week.

However unfortunate, sometimes these social events make the house "uninhabitable." This means that you must continue to pay rent while the house is being repaired. This means that you have "thrashed" your first house. Your friendly neighbors are sure to inform your landlord of the event.

If the landlord informs you of such a infraction, turn the stereo up on Twisted Sister "We're not Gonna Take It," invite all your friends over, offer them free beverages, and ask them to help you "fix" the house.

As for the national music scene, Bruce Springsteen continues to top the album charts with his five-record live set. Paul Simon is coming under much controversy as his album "Graceland" (which was recorded in South Africa) reaches the number three position.

For non-traditional rockers, Robyn Hitchcock and the Egyptians hold the number one position for college albums with "Element of Light" (Relativity records), and the Bangles are still at the top of the singles chart with "Walk Like an Egyptian."

Gymnasts place third at Sweetheart Invite

by Cosmas Whitten

The UW-Stout women's gymnastics team travelled to UW-Superior for the Sweetheart Invite held on Valentine's Day. The gymnasts earned their season's high score of 125.65 to take third place.

Northern Michigan won the meet with 137.55 while Minot State (North Dakota) took a close second with 135.35. Following Stout, taking fourth place was UW-Superior with 120.00. The final placer in the meet was UW-Eau Claire with 113.00.

The meet had a California theme. Gymnasts marched out with sunglasses and Hawaiian shirts on. After all teams were announced, a birthday balloon was brought out to Stout gymnast Patti Roenitz who was celebrating her 20th the day of the meet.

For Sophomore Roenitz birthday wishes would come true as she performed for a home town crowd. Stout started off on floor exercise. Roenitz performed great, tying the school record of 8.7 to place sixth in the meet.

Freshman Kelly Kramer was off to a nice start as she placed seventh on floor with a score of 8.5. "I wasn't feeling good the night before the meet which added extra pressure the day of the meet. I wanted to perform well so that I could help our team hit our score," commented Kramer.

The next event for Stout to perform was vault. All five of Stout's performers scored in the eights. Leading Stout on vault was Patti Roenitz with a 8.45, followed by Sophomore Carolyn Bjerke who was vaulting with an ankle injury. Bjerke scored an 8.35.

Other Stout gymnasts to score in the eights were Senior Cosmas Whitten with an 8.3, Freshman Kelly Kramer with an 8.15 and Freshman Michelle Scott with an 8.05.

"We did not do as well on bars as we could have. It has always been a rough event for us," Head Coach John Zuerlein said.

> "I wished for a good meet when I blew out the candle on mybirthday cake
> —Patti Roenitz

Patti Roenitz scored her season's best score on bars with an 8.3 to take seventh place. Roenitz added a new move to her routine. "The C move she added to her routine added another 6 tenths," Zuerlein said.

Other strong performers for Stout on bars were Senior Tammy Dennis with a 7.8 and Sophomore Kim Nelson with a 7.45. "I was feeling pretty confident with my routine. It has become consistent in practice. I had fun performing it for this meet," Dennis said.

Balance beam was Stout's last event. The gymnasts fared pretty well in this event with two of six routines having no falls.

"I was pleased with Jodi Schaefer's beam routine. It was her first no-miss routine. Cosmas Whitten stayed on too and added a new dismount," Zuerlein commented.

Schaefer commented on how she stayed on the beam. "I just pretended that I was in practice and tried not to feel the pressure of the meet."

Patti Roenitz placed fifth on balance beam with a score of 8.4. Jodi Schaefer and Cosmas Whitten scored their season's high of 7.7 and 7.2, respectively.

The final excitement of the meet was Patti Roenitz placing fifth in the all-around with a record-breaking score of 33.85. The previous school record in the all-around was set four years ago.

"I felt confident about my routines plus I wished for a good meet when I blew out the candle on my birthday cake," Roenitz said.

The gymnasts travel to La Crosse for the conference meet to be held on Saturday at noon. "We haven't put it together 100 percent yet. Feeling stable with routines will hopefully come around for conference and Nationals," Zuerlein said.

Coach Zuerlein picks UW-Oshkosh to place first and UW-La Crosse to place second. "We will battle for third between River Falls and Superior. If Eau Claire gets their all-around back, who knows...," added Zuerlein.

Stout students petition to bring back hockey

by Laura J. Olson

Lack of artificial ice created problems for the Blue Devil Ice Machine (the former UW-Stout hockey team). This led to the suspension of the program in the 1982-1983 school year. Currently students are forming a movement to bring back the Ice Machine.

Two hundred students from all majors signed a student petition for hockey. On the petition they wrote suggestions for artificial ice fundraising. Comments range from fashion shows and dances to snowmobile races on Lake Menomin.

The Stoutonia recalls in the January, 1976 issue, "The NAIA Ice Machine tourney team wasn't treated like one because there was no temperature regulation [members got the flu]. They have managed with inadequate facilities, equipment shortages and budget leftovers."

The 1980-81 Ice Machine missed 21 practices and rescheduled seven games due to the lack of artificial ice. Thomas Slupe, Blue Devil hockey coach, said that artificial ice was as important as talent.

Slupe believed the lack of artificial ice promoted lack of ice time, missed practice and the eventual failure of ever returning to Nationals as was accomplished in 1975-76.

Slupe's 1982-83 Ice Machine was off to a good start. Seventy talented Stout students tried out. Alumni players held their second annual puck run from October 7-9, raising $2,500 for the Stout hockey program.

Lack of artificial ice hurt the team, which finished with a 3-24 record in 1982-1983. Stout hockey was finally suspended in 1983 until the Dunn County Recreational Facility could acquire artificial ice.

Stout student James Taylor, Menomonie Saints player, said, "Because of record temperatures this winter, and with no artificial ice, we have only played once. We discontinued the Saints after that. How could we play?"

"College hockey is better than professional because college hockey students aren't playing for money," Mary Oberaiener said.

Oberaiener, a Hotel and Restaurant Management major, was originally from Minnesota and attended all high school hockey tournaments.

"I'd go to as many games as possible. I wouldn't play it but I'd love to watch the action," said Drew Schmidt.

"I think it would be a good idea to be in competition with other Wisconsin colleges," said Joe Brown.

Stout students have asked questions about the UW-Stout suspended hockey program. "When will Dunn County have artificial ice?" is a question many ask. The Dunn County Recreation Department currently maintains natural ice for hockey games.

Why can't Stout purchase artificial ice? Stout is a state organization. A state-run organization cannot purchase artificial ice and place it on Dunn County property. This can only be done by a nonprofit organization.

Stout Hockey is only suspended, in the hopes that it will someday be reinstated. Dr. Warren Bowlus, Stout Athletic Director, has set aside $10,000 in residual funds for equipment, supplies, transportation and nonpersonal items.

Sluggers gear up for season

by Slash La Freniere

With spring just around the corner, the UW-Stout baseball team is gearing up to play America's favorite pastime. They have been hard at work, practicing indoors since January 15, under the guidance of head coach Terry Petrie and his assistant, Mark Thomas.

Petrie handles the pitching staff mainly and Thomas oversees the infield and outfield players.

Going into the season, the following players will hold starting positions unless somebody can beat them out;

In the infield at first base is senior Scott Aschenbrenner. At second base, junior John Davenport. At third base, senior Karl Drezek. At catcher is senior captain Jeff Kloes.

The shortstop for the Blue Devils will be a freshman, either Mark Crandall or Clark Bobert.

There is a veteran pitching staff returning this season. "We've got some talented pitching this year.", said Petrie.

Top reliever Brad Resch is also returning this season. Resch led the team last season with an E.R.A. of 1.33, had five saves, and pitched in 12 games. Charbonneau led the Blue Devils in complete games with five, pitched 46 innings, and also led with 36 strike outs.

Other players who should contribute to the pitching staff according to coach Petrie are Karl Drezek, Tim Peterson, and Jay Yoder, who was a red shirt last season.

Stout lost four players for various reasons this year who probably would have started, giving Stout an all senior line-up. One of these players, Kraig Kukaba, left for educational reasons. Said Petrie, "After all, these players are here for school first. I told him he should take it." (his opportunity).

Many teams would be crushed by the loss of four seniors, but not Stout. "We have a lot of depth and hopefully the people that replace these players will come through.", said Petrie.

Petrie continued, "We play by far the best schedule in our conference. We have eight games against Division one schools and seven against Division two. Everyone that we play is a scholarship school, except our conference.". The conference includes UW-Eau Claire, UW-La Crosse, UW-River Falls, and UW-Superior.

Last year Stout's overall record was 23-16, and 14-5 in the conference. Three of the five conference losses were by one run. Petrie said that this year the team to beat is either Eau Claire or La Crosse.

"You could call either of those schools and they would say that Stout is the team to beat.", added Petrie.

The season for the Blue Devils starts March seventh, with an eight day, 21 game exhibition season that will take them through Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama. The regular schedule includes games against the University of Minnesota and three games in the Metrodome.

Bad knees

Cosmas A. Whitten

With spring break closing in, many students are vigorously trying to get in shape for the shorts and bathing suit season. Along with the rewards of being in great shape comes the bummer of blowing out a knee.

Bad knees have become a very common occurrence for both athletes and non-athletes. In Chicago there is a billboard showing a mother holding her son's hand while carrying three heavy shopping bags in one arm. Underneath is an advertisement saying something about how knee surgery is not just for athletes anymore.

I have known many people who have gone through the ordeal of having knee surgery and many more who are planning on it. The four holes in my left knee are a dead giveaway that I too have gone through knee surgery. Many people ask me what is it like? Well I'll tell it like it is:

To be a truly enthused knee surgery candidate, that knee should be so painful that the thought of having surgery is a very pleasant one.

Take for instance my knee. It often felt as if it would pop right out of joint at any moment. The bones felt like they were barely able to stay aligned. I could always feel my knee grinding and cracking away.

I was eagerly awaiting my surgery. I was a little nervous though. I had heard so many horror stories about knee surgery. The night before the surgery I pigged out for dinner because I was not supposed to eat anything after midnight.

Surgery was not scheduled until around 3 p.m. All I knew was I was craving cheeseburgers. The thought of munching those yummy things was what kept me going.

The time finally came, boy was I scared. Of course it was the day that the med students got to practice, and of course they got to practice on me. One med student was learning how to insert an IV into my vein.

The first attempt was a failure. Figures though. The second attempt was a failure too. Another med student wanted to try on my other arm — he found a big vein. "No, I can get it this time," the first med student said.

Sure enough she got it only she forgot to connect the needle to the sugar water bag. Blood was squirting out of the tube which was stuck in my vein. I felt the warm blood cover my whole hand.

Finally, the med students' instructor came over and remedied the situation. At this point in time I felt more like an experiment than a patient.

Just put me under, was all I was thinking. My hand hurt, my stomach was upset (I know why I couldn't eat now) and I was craving cheeseburgers.

An hour later I woke up with this mask on my face. I thought it was just a bad dream but it wasn't. I was wheeled back to my room and two hours later allowed to go home. I remember the doctor coming to see me and telling me what he found in my knee. I thought he said cheeseburgers.

I was sitting in a wheelchair in the front of the hospital lobby, zoning out until my ride could pick me up. Of course people kept talking to me. I barely had the energy to keep my eyes open much less tell people what happened to me.

I finally arrived home with a leg the size of a watermelon. I also was finally able to eat my cheeseburgers. The next day I was cruising around on crutches in shopping malls.

Two weeks later I couldn't even remember what a grinding, cracking knee was. I was jogging and everything. I even lost 11 pounds after surgery.

So if you're trying to get back in shape and you injure a knee, don't worry. You'll only be reminded of it every time you see holes in your knee.

Grapplers sixth in WSUC tourney

by Tim Nichols

In the WSUC tournament last weekend in La Crosse, the UW-Stout wrestling team proved to be better than their record this season might indicate. The Blue Devils entered the tourney with a 3-8 dual meet record but earned a respectable sixth place finish.

Head Coach Michael Early was pleased with the results. "As a team we wrestled really well," Early said. He also added, "They showed courage and that they can wrestle with the best [in the conference]."

The Blue Devils finished just 6.75 points behind fourth-place UW-Eau Claire in the team standings, which separated the teams into three groupings.

UW-Whitewater took first place honors with 88.25 points. Whitewater was closely followed by UW-River Falls and UW-Platteville, with 78.75 and 73.5 points, respectively.

The next group was headed by UW-Eau Claire with 37.25 points, edging UW-Stevens Point with 35 points and UW-Stout with 30.5. The final three included UW-La Crosse with 16 points while UW-Oshkosh narrowly escaped last place with 12.5 points to UW-Superior's 11.5.

Once again Wayne Hendrickson led the Blue Devils with a second place finish. Hendrickson, who currently holds a 24-10 record this year, missed an individual championship in the 167-lb. class with a 6-5 loss to Bob Smith of Eau Claire. Last year Hendrickson also placed second in the conference tourney.

Blue Devil Rich Rupp upset the second and third seeded grapplers in the heavyweight class and captured second place. Rupp decisioned Randy Meyer of Whitewater 4-3 and pinned Bill Kolodziej of Stevens Point before losing by a fall to Bruce Rivard of River Falls in the finals.

Other individual placers for the Blue Devils included a third place finish for Keith Rusch in the 118-lb. category. Rusch edged Ryan Burns of Stevens Point by a 1-1 referee criteria decision in the third-place match. Freshman Steve Smith earned fourth place in the 177-lb. class.

Coach Early feels his team has shown improvement throughout the season. Early commented, "In terms of wins and losses, we haven't had a good year. But tremendous strides have been made in the program."

The Blue Devils will next compete in the NCAA Division III Regional Tournament to be held in Oshkosh on Friday, February 27.

Athlete of the week: Paul Bons

by Darron Vanman

Name: Paul Bons
Sport: Men's Track
Year: Senior
Major: Plant Engineering
Previous awards: All conference cross country, sophomore and junior years. All conference indoor and outdoor track, freshman to junior years.
Coaches: Lou Klitzke and Steve Terry
Athlete's statistics: Feb. 7, Cherry Coke Classic at La Crosse. Stout finished second behind La Crosse in the 11-team meet. Paul Bons had two track victories to be The Stoutonia's athlete of the week.
2-mile run: 9:31.4
1000-yard run: 2:18.9
Coach's comments: "Paul did most of the work [running] at La Crosse by himself. If he would have had better competition, he could have probably qualified for nationals in both events," Coach Terry said.

Coach Terry added, "Bons is an outstanding leader. He leads by his actions. He has put in the work for four years to reach his potential as a runner. And this determination has rubbed off on the younger guys."

Athlete's history: Bons started his running after Thanksgiving his freshman year in high school. His brothers encouraged Paul to run. Bons said he couldn't run the sprints so he tried the distance.

Paul plans to graduate this December. He still has one year of eligibility left for cross country. Bons wants to land a job in the Midwest in a medium- to large-size plant.

Bons decided on plant engineering since it offers two aspects. One, he will be doing some consulting. Second, he will be drafting. Mostly, though, Paul likes the idea of meeting a lot of new people.

Most people would cower at the mention of running, but Bons does it because he enjoys it. "I love the competition, the people I meet at track meets and it's something to do," Bons said with a laugh.

Determined Bons has set his sights to qualify for the national meet in the 1500-meter and 1000-yard runs.

Cagers jinxed in weekend road losses

by Paul Emerson

Friday the 13th and bad luck are said to go hand-in-hand. Add to that playing on the road in none other than the Dawg House of UW-Stevens Point and there is quite a deck stacked against the UW-Stout men's basketball team.

Such was the draw for the Stout Blue Devils last Friday night as they battled the Pointers right down to the wire before running out of aces and losing the game by a 66-63 score.

That loss coupled with a Valentine's Day loss to UW-Oshkosh on Saturday night, 111-110, was enough to leave the Blue Devils broken-hearted and in third place in the WSUC with an 8-5 mark (17-5 overall).

The two losses dropped Stout out of this week's NAIA Division II top twenty poll. Eau Claire lost to Stevens Point Saturday night, 60-52, and dropped to seventh while Point climbed to the number 13 spot.

Stevens Point 66, Stout 63

"We started out real tight. Except for Tom Gomolak we couldn't get anything going," said Head Coach Dewey Mintz of the Blue Devils, who never led in the game.

Stout did get the offense going enough to pull within one at 10-9 with 14:30 showing on the clock. But from there Stevens Point went on to take their biggest lead of the half at 22-14 with 5:19 to go in the half.

The Blue Devils pulled to within three points at 27-24 before Stevens Point hit a 3-point shot with 3 seconds left in the half to go up 30-24 at the intermission.

"We probably shouldn't have given up that shot. But if you're going to give them a shot, that's the kind of shot you want to force them to take," Mintz said.

Stout came out in the second half and quickly pulled to within two at 32-30. But from there Graig Hawley, the Pointers' 6-foot point guard, took over.

Hawley scored the Pointers next 11 points as Stevens Point increased their lead back up to eight points at 43-35 with 11:43 to play.

The Pointers twice increased the margin to 14 points, the second coming at the 5:17 mark with a 57-43 score. The Blue Devils, however, were far from throwing in the towel.

Down by 10 points with 1:00 to go, Stout cut the deficit to 3 with 10 seconds left after Tom Gomolak hit one of 1 of 2 free throws.

Point's Tom Richardson grabbed the rebound off the missed free throw and was immediately fouled by Dave Sandstrom. Richardson missed the front end of the bonus and Tom Gomolak grabbed the rebound.

Gomolak then hit Luther Forrest with a pass that allowed Forrest to get off a 22-foot off-balance shot that would have tied the game had it gone in.

Forrest and Gomolak led the Blue Devils in scoring with 18 points apiece. Gomolak also had a game high 11 rebounds. Ron Hunter had 12 points for Stout while Dave Sandstrom had 8.

Graig Hawley took game scoring honors with 21 points while Timm Naegli had 16 for the Pointers.

Oshkosh 111 Stout 110

"No defense at either end," was the way Mintz described the high scoring shoot-out Saturday night between the Blue Devils and the Titans of UW-Oshkosh.

In a game highlighted by Luther Forrest's career and game high 42 points, but marred by fouls and some questionable officiating, the Blue Devils may have had the victory literally stolen away at the end of regulation.

Stout was leading 98-93 with 1:05 left in regulation when Oshkosh's Mike Goldsworthy hit a 3-pointer to make it 98-96 Stout.

Stout then ran 33 seconds off the clock until a turnover gave the Titans the ball and 20 seconds left to work with.

Oshkosh missed on three attempts to tie the game when Stout's Rick Wynveen finally grabbed a rebound and time expired. But thanks to a good acting job by Oshkosh's Cleveland Hardee, the Titans were awarded two free throws.

Hardee gleefully cashed in at the charity stripe to tie the game at 98. On to overtime.

Stout went up by six with a minute gone in the five-minute extra period but just couldn't put the Titans away as they came back and took a one-point lead with 52 seconds left, 109-108.

Stout responded when Luther Forrest connected on a jumper with 30 seconds left to put the Blue Devils on top, 110-109.

Dave Sandstrom then fouled Goldworthy with 7 seconds left and Goldsworthy promptly hit two free throws for a 111-110 Oshkosh lead. That lead stood as an off-balance shot by Forrest failed to find the mark.

Five Blue Devils fouled out in the game as Stout finished with five eligible players, including Brian Ellingson who earlier sprained an ankle and had to be taped up and put into action to finish the game with five players.

Forrest's 42 points ties the school record for points in a single game. The mark ties a mark set in 1968 by Heideman against UW-River Falls.

Tom Gomolak scored 19 points and Ron Hunter 15 for Stout. Oshkosh was led by conference scoring leader Gordy Skagestad with 25 points and Hardy with 19. Oshkosh led at the half, 52-51.

The Blue Devils now return to the fieldhouse to close out the regular season with 3 games in the next week. They host UW-Whitewater on Friday night, UW-Platteville on Saturday and UW-Eau Claire next Wednesday. All games start at 7:30 p.m.

"Play-off position is the important thing. These games coming up are all vital games for us to win." Mintz said.

Improvement shown by Tracksters

by Denise Cain

The men's and women's track teams participated Saturday at the Eric Liddell Games, hosted by Bethel College, located in Roseville, Minn. The Liddell Games are an open meet, meaning no team scores are kept.

Individual top performers included Dan Doucette, who continues to lead the Blue Devils in team points. Saturday's meet proved to be a successful experience for Doucette as he placed third in the men's 400-meter dash.

Blue Devil runner Doucette commented, "It was a fast track and a step up in competition. Those conditions were helpful in bringing down the times."

Head Track Coach Steve Terry seemed very happy with the teams' performances, stating, "I was much more pleased with this week's times. Even though we had a hard week of practice, the performances were still good."

Running the 800-meter open for Stout, Senior Steve Hoeschele came away with honors, placing first overall with a time of 2 minutes, .08 seconds.

Once again, Senior Paul Bons dominated the track as he placed first overall with a time of 3:57.04 in the 1500-meter invitational run.

Coming off a struggling start to the season, Chris Hagen proved his ability Saturday as he reached a height of six feet, six inches in the high jump. This jump enabled him to take home fourth place honors.

Freshman Jeff Fimreite earned himself a third place finish, completing the 400-meter open in a time of 52.66 seconds.

When asked about his strong finish at a tough meet Fimreite replied, "I feel good about my performance because I cut a second off my time. I feel the meet was a good learning experience and I know now I can do better than I have been doing this season."

Standing out for the Blue Devil women was shot-putter Renee Leffel who had a personal best for the third week in a row. The distance of 36 feet, 10 1/2 inches landed her a second place finish.

High-jumper Barb Peterson also had a personal best as she toppled a third place finish in the high jump, reaching 5 feet even. Peterson, a leader on the women's team, said, "Our performances are improving as we begin to taper. Our hard work is starting to pay off and we're expecting a good conference meet."

Other women who ran well for Stout were Beth Claas, Lisa Heimmermann and Kristin Mauk. Claas placed second in the 55-meter hurdles and fifth in the triple jump. Heimmermann ran to a third place finish in the 800-meter open and Mauk received fourth place honors in the 400-meter run.

In view of the women's performances Saturday, Coach Terry said, "They had the best meet of the season. All the girls had fine performances which is a good indication of the hard work they have been putting into their practices."

Stout athletes also excel in academics

by Darron Vanman

When you think of athletes, you immediately think sweat and dumb jock. Well, you may want to reconsider those thoughts after learning about Stout's athletes.

Golf Coach Sten Pierce said, "My golfers are here to go to school." This attitude is shared by most in the athletic department.

Since Division III schools do not offer scholarships, athletes here love their sport that much more. Athletic Director Dr. Warren Bowlus said Stout is anxious to provide a good education and added, "There are not dumb jocks at this school."

To back this up, only three out of the 85 football players had academic difficulty, according to Dr. Bowlus. In fact the top 11 football players' grade points were posted in the fieldhouse. The top five tallied a grand 3.74 grade point, while the 11 averaged an impressive 3.55.

Adding to this is the golf team's top five making the grade with a 3.26 grade point. These grade points are not by taking a softer load either. These athletes are taking between 14 and 16 credits.

Coach Pierce believes athletes are better students because they have a purpose. Pierce said, "They have the other players, myself and theirselves riding on them to do well." Coach Pierce also said that athletes develop better work habits and manage their time better.

> "There are not dumb jocks at this school —Dr. Warren Bowlus"

Head Track Coach Steve Terry related that he could say about 50 percent of the nonathletic students drop out of school, while students in athletics have between a 20 and 30 percent dropout rate. Coach Terry said, "[Their sport] is an incentive for the athlete to stay in school."

Coach Terry went on to share some of the recent studies he has found. ACT, SAT and IQ scores show no evidence of indicating success for students. But it has proven over and over that extracurricular activities have been found to determine success in later life.

Dr. Bowlus believes the NCAA's and NAIA's added emphasis on academics in the past three years has played a major role in greater academic achievement by all athletes. Dr. Bowlus said, "There are fewer scholarships today, and they [NCAA and NAIA] require certain course work to be done and higher grades in high school."

Coaches at Stout share a common belief. The coaches feel it is not their responsibility to monitor their athletes' grades. Cross Country Coach Lou Klitzke said, "I would rather not have a student with a low GPA even come out." Klitzke strongly believes grades, learning and the courses are too important.

Coach Pierce wants to lessen the strain on his golfers as much as possible. He would prefer that his athletes would not hold a job during the season. Pierce wants his golfers to have full attention on their studies and golf. He commented on the dumb jock label: "Some athletes are carried, but are eventually weeded out. Most athletes, though, are overwhelmed with their tight schedules."

Coach Pierce feels his responsibility to his athletes is to minimize their conflicts. He tells them to stay ahead of their course work, and he applauds them for their fine work.

Coach Terry says he has had little trouble with his runners being ineligible over the years. But Coach Terry said, "The problems come from not understanding or knowing the eligibility rules." The rules for athletes are that they must complete 24 credits in two consecutive semesters. This could include the summer. Also the same course, if repeated, can only be counted once for credit.

Technicals, Turnovers Costly as Lady Cagers lose to Blugolds

by Paul Emerson

After a rough weekend on the road the UW-Stout womens basketball team came home to the somestimes friendly confines of the Johnson Fieldhouse. Tuesday night however, was not one of those times as the Lady Devils lost a game to UW-Eau Claire, 65-55.

"We went in expecting to win this one but we were again hurt by too many turnovers," said womens head coach Lynda Lee.

Stout committed 31 turnovers in the game to just 22 by the Blugold ladies. Many of those turnovers occured in the second half which hampered the Lady Devils efforts to get back in the game.

"Except for a couple scoreless stretches, we played well with good defense. But I think it was our offense that hurt us," said Lee.

The Lady Devils started quick playing tough for the first 8 minutes of the game. But while holding a 15-10 lead head coach Lynda Lee was given a technical foul for arguing a call.

Thirty seconds later point guard Lisa Blume was also whistled for a technical foul for voicing aloud her frustration of having just committed a turnover. And by the 11:00 minute mark the game was tied at 15.

From that point on the frustration began for Stout as Eau Claire took it's biggest lead of the half at 9 points with 5:31 remaining, 30-21. "This scoreless stretch hurt us the most," said Lee.

After taking a 36-31 halftime lead, the Blugold ladies widened the margin to 14 points, the biggest lead of either ream in the game at 59-45 with just over 8:00 to go in the game.

Eau Claire womens head basketball coach Sandy Schumacher summed up her feelings of the game this way, "they've improved and we have to. The difference was we moved the ball a litle more , but Stout did a nice job on defense."

The Lady Devils were once again led in scoring by Renee Kasten who scored 13 points and grabbed a game high 20 rebounds.

Suzi Krank had 12 points for Stout, while Senior Patti Cook chipped in 10 and had four steals.

Stout shot 42 percent (26 of 62) from the floor, but were just 3 of 8 from the line for 38 percent.

Eau Claire's Janel Kempen took game high scoring honors with 27 points. Eau Claire connected on 29 of 61 shots for 48 percent, and were 7 of 16 from the line for 44 percent.

Over the past weekend the Lady Devils dropped a pair of games to two very tough opponents. On Friday night (13th) Stout traveled to conference leader UW-Stevens Point and were defeated by a 67-42 score.

Senior Patti Cook led the Lady Devils attack with 10 points and 6 rebounds. Kasten scored 8 points and grabbed a game high 14 rebounds. While Kristin Knutsen and Janet Turowski each had 6.

Then on St. Valentine's Day night Stout dropped the game to UW-Oshkosh by an 82-54 margin.

Kasten poured in 19 points and grabbed a game 17 rebounds. Suzi Krank chipped in nine points, while Justine Becker had 7 and Knutsen 6.

The Lady Devils close out their season this weekend witha pair of games at the fieldhouse. UW-Whitewater is Friday's opponent in a 5 p.m. contest, while UW-Platteville comes to town on Saturday for a 3 p.m. game.

Lee noted that this weekend is Parent's Weekend for the Lady Devils.

Chubbles Talks!

(On Monday, February 17, this reporter received a phone call from someone claiming to be the mysterious Chubbles Chipmunk, Esquire. We agreed to meet at a local establishment and the following interview took place.)

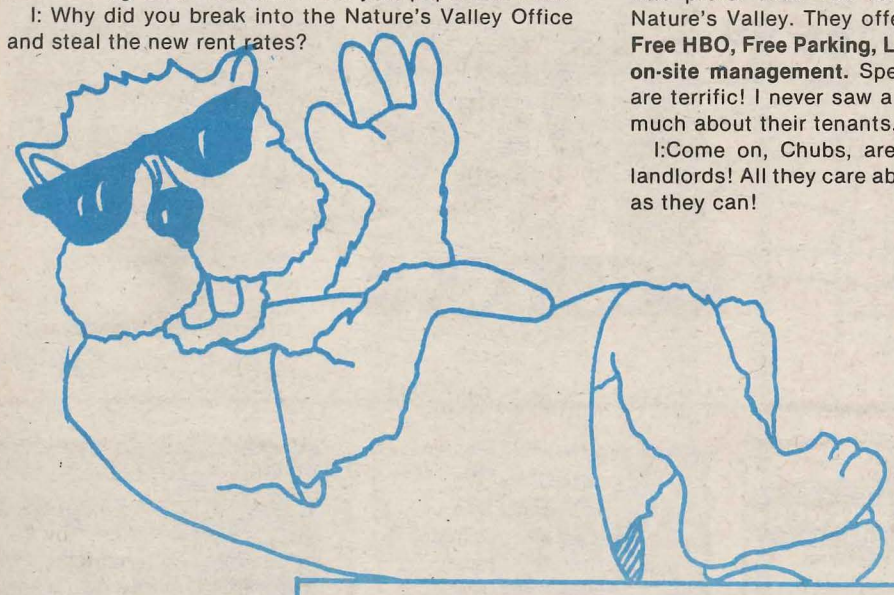
INTERVIEWER: Mr. Chipmunk, why all the mystery?

CHUBBLES: Please call me Chubs.

I: O.K., Chubs, why has it taken you so long to reveal yourself?

C: Well, I really wasn't trying to hide. I didn't know I was causing such a stir until I read your paper last week.

I: Why did you break into the Nature's Valley Office and steal the new rent rates?



C: I didn't really break in, I just snuk into the office and borrowed the new rent rates. See, I really like the people at Nature's Valley - they're so easy to get along with and so much fun and Nature's Valley has so much to offer them, I wanted them to get a chance to sign new leases as soon as they could.

I: I've heard the Nature's Valley is noisy.

C: Not really, at least not any noisier than any other apartment complex. The management tries to control the noise by setting aside quieter buildings for those who prefer that. You really can't go wrong living at Nature's Valley. They offer so much: Optional Leases, Free HBO, Free Parking, Laundry Facilities, furnishings, on-site management. Speaking of management - they are terrific! I never saw a group of people who care so much about their tenants.

I:Come on, Chubs, aren't you exaturating - they're landlords! All they care about is making as much money as they can!

C: I won't deny they're interested in making money, they're a business and that is what a business does, but they are also smart. They know that to make money you have to make the customer happy. That is why they recarpeted 27 apartments and that is why they provide FREE HBO and all the other features. Personally, I think they're a little crazy offering the use of a 19" COLOR TELEVISION, but you would be crazier not signing a lease with them before April 1, 1987 and take advantage of the TV offer.

I: What about the drawing for a free 12-month lease? Is it for real?

C: I know it sounds crazy, but like I said, it would be crazier not to take advantage of it. All you need to do is stop by the office and register before 5:00 p.m., May 1, 1987. While you're there, check out the place - you'll love it.

I: Well, I've got to be going., Chubs.

C: Already? Where are you headed?

I: Nature's Valley, I'm not crazy!

C: Hold on, I'll walk with you. It is only four blocks from campus you know.

(There you have it. Chubbles Chipmunk is real. Look for the 6 foot, fuzzy brown Chipmunk at Nature's Valley and invite him over to watch HBO on you free 19" Color Television.)

Students to feel effects of tax changes

by Catherine Schneider

Students will be among those effected by the Tax Reform Act of 1986, causing them to pay more taxes in the coming year.

One of the major changes dealing with students will be the inclusion of scholarships and grants in the earned income category.

Any scholarships and fellowships granted after August 16, 1986 and used in 1987 will be taxed as earned income.

Students will be allowed an exclusion limited to the extent that the scholarship is used for qualified tuition or related expenses. Related expenses will include such items as class fees, books, supplies, and equipment.

"Supplies," said Sue Thibado, manager of H&R Block in Menomonie, "such as notebooks and pencils and bigger items, such as tuition, will need to be recorded."

"Students will have to keep their receipts when they go to the bookstore," Tibado added. "If they don't keep their receipts, they will pay taxes on it."

Monies used for room, board, or incidental expenses will not be deductible and will be treated as earned income.

The scholarship donor will be required to issue income statements to students receiving awards.

Students and their parents may also be affected by the changes in the number of personal exemptions allowed.

> "If they don't keep their receipts, they will pay taxes on it."
> —Sue Thibado

Beginning in 1987, an individual who is claimed as a dependent on another person's return may not claim his own personal exemption.

However, under the new law, the personal exemption will increase to $1900 in 1987, $1950 in 1988, and peak at $2000 in 1989.

Additional exemptions for age and blindness will be repealed in 1987. Taxpayers previously eligible for these deductions will be receiving an additional standard deduction.

Replacing the current zero bracket amount will be a standard deduction. For single taxpayers under 65, this deduction will be $2540.

The tax rate structure will also be changing from the current fifteen rates to five in 1987. In 1988 the number of rates will decrease to two - 15 percent and 28 percent.

The new law will also create changes in defining what population will be required to file a return.

Singles under the age of 65 will be required to file a return if their gross income level is $4440 or if their unearned incomes such as rents, dividends, and interest exceed $500 while they are being claimed as a dependent on a parent's income tax return.

Although Tibado felt that changes brought about by the new law would be beneficial overall, she said, "with the taxing of scholarships and grants and the changes in personal exemptions, students may be the ones who get caught."

20 year old North Hall resident dies of meningococcal meningitis

by Rose Shakal

Mark Paschka, a 20-year-old resident of North Hall, died from meningococcal meningitis Sunday, Feb. 15 at United Hospital in St. Paul.

John Enger, director of University Relations, said that Paschka had reportedly been feeling ill and went to Myrtle Werth Medical Center on Wednesday, Feb. 11.

Tests were run on him, but proved inconclusive. He returned to the hospital on Friday and was diagnosed as having meningococcal meningitis, and was transferred to United Hospital.

Enger said that State Epidemiologist Morgan Meissner met with students from North Hall Sunday evening to explain to them the nature of the disease and its treatment. Meissner also discussed prevention of the disease.

Meissner said that Pashka's death was an isolated case in Western Wisconsin and that he does not expect other cases to occur.

Six individuals who had been with Paschka were receiving preventative treatment as a precautionary measure, according to Enger.

Meningitis is a disease of the meninges, which are the coverings of the brain and spinal cord.

It may be caused by any number of germs and viruses that invade the body. The disease is usually associated with infections that are present elsewhere in the body.

> "He was a loyal, dependable, soft-spoken person.
> —Erv Schlick

Many times, meningitis occurs in the course of some other illness. The symptoms include severe headaches, nausea, vomiting, and a rise in temperature.

An important diagnostic sign is a spasm which pulls the head backwards. The victim may become delirious and fall into a coma.

Sulfa drugs and a variety of antibiotics are used in the treatment of meningitis.

Paschka, whose hometown was Albert Lea, Minnesota, was active in the Art Club and performed as a drummer in the Stout Concert Band.

Ken Clough, a friend of Paschka's for two years, who is also a drummer in the Concert Band, said Paschka was one of those people who was always there for him - ready to help.

"He was really a nice guy," Clough said. "I really miss him."

Paschka's roommate, Dave Neihoff, said that Pashka was very easy to get along with.

"He was a great guy," Neihoff said.

Erv Schlick, director of the UW-Stout Bands, said he enjoyed having Paschka in the Concert Band and the Pep Band.

"He was a loyal, dependable, soft spoken person and a fine drummer," Schlick said. "Mark will be sadly missed by me and all of his fellow band members."

Funeral services were held for Mark Tuesday, Feb. 17, in Albert Lea.

Kidnapers outwitted

Police in the Netherlands said they outsmarted the kidnapers of a 10-year-old girl, freeing the daughter of a wealthy Dutch businessman who had been tied to a bed for 12 days by her captors.

Authorities in the eastern Holland town of Laren said that they traced the phone calls from the kidnaper's hideout and convinced them to reveal the location of Valerie Albada Jelgersma.

200 police officers raided four houses and arrested five men and a woman on Sunday.

Minors on death row

The Supreme Court announced Monday that it has decided to consider whether the death penalty is appropriate punishment for convicts who committed murder before they were 18 years old.

The case, which will be tested on the Constitutional grounds that the death penalty for minors is "cruel and unusual punishment," involves the appeal of Oklahoma death row inmate William Thompson who was convicted of a murder committed when he was 15 of age.

Thompson and three others were convicted of in the death of his former brother-in-law, Charles Keene in 1983.

Schools boycotted

Parents protesting racial issues kept their children out of school Monday In Senatobia, Mississippi.

"About 90 percent of our black students are still out (of school)," reported Superintendent Mike Waldrop.

A controversy over racial issues at the school has prompted biracial meetings held to duscuss the grievances of the black community for the past two weeks.

Blacks, who make up an estimated 34 percent of the system's student population, stayed out of four days of class last week and the leaders of the protest vowed to continue the boycott until their grievances were addressed.

Program works to curb substance abuse

by Judy Weitzer

Concern has been repeatedly expressed by local authorities for students whose lives are literally at risk due to alcohol and other drug abuse.

These authorities include the Menomonie Police Department, the court system, medical emergency facilities, the Dunn County detoxification unit and others, according to Allen Ebel, program coordinator of Stout's Alcohol and Other Drug Education Program (AODEP).

"I have this deep sense of concern and I've been struggling with ways to deal with it," said Ebel.

There were 222 alcohol and other drug related citations given during the fall semester of 1986, not including those issued by the Sheriff's Department or those received outside of the Menomonie city limits, according to Ebel.

In addition, 37 incidents were recorded where students needed emergency room and overnight detoxification treatment for overdoses of alcohol or other drugs last semester, Ebel said.

The AODEP office is located in the lower level of Bowman Hall. This office currently provides evaluation services for students with alcohol and other drug related abuse or behavior problems.

The department also makes recommendations for counseling services, self-help groups, treatment and bibliotherapy for students with problems.

The office is also in the process of developing and implementing a Student Assistance Program (SAP), consisting of a structured and consistent method of prevention and intervention to aid students who may be experiencing problems with alcohol and other drugs.

The SAP would provide a network system for identifying students who may need help prior to academic disqualification or physical injury.

"The University does not have a consistent message about what is appropriate," commented Tom McDonald, graduate assistant in the AODEP office.

"Even though this campus has acclaimed graduate level programs," Ebel said, "in which students learn to implement the most sophisticated, powerful and current techniques for intervening in and treating alcohol and other drug abuse problems, these services are not currently provided for our own students and staff."

Ebel is involved in collecting the data necessary to develop an SAP program.

"We are trying to design a program to encompass a broad range of problems that people will encounter," Ebel added.

Already completed, the first phase of developing an SAP was a request for University Administration to be represented on a task force to address issues that potentially interfere with university community life, especially alcohol and drug problems.

A function of the task force would be the development of policies and procedures, based on background data, to provide a method of handling problem behavior due to misuse of alcohol and other drugs.

The SAP would also provide continuing education, counseling and supportive services to the University community.

They would be responsible for coordinating efforts of both university and city communities to insure that the university population would receive maximum benefits of helping agencies in the form of both information and services.

The Wisconsin Office of Alcohol and Other Drug Abuse will provide consultation, training and program model development at no cost. This program could then be utilized by other universities in the state.

Funding sources for pilot programming and continuing research are also available.

The AODEP Office will gratefully accept offers from interested individuals who wish to volunteer time and effort in the development of their programs.

Student's self-inflicted wound responsible for tragic death

by Tracy Lea Landis

The death of a UW-Stout student in the early morning hours of Friday, Feb. 20 was caused by a self-inflicted wound to the chest, according to the Menomonie Police Department report.

Jeffrey Martin Havel, 22, locked himself in his bedroom at 114 17th Ave, Apt. B, a house also known as the Zooplex, at about 2 a.m.

According to the report, John A. Marks, 23, heard from outside the door of Havel's room what he believed was the sound of a gunshot followed by "distress sounds."

Marks forced the door open and found Havel, wounded in the chest.

The police report said that a .22 caliber bolt action rifle with a scope was found in Havel's room.

Though attempts were made to resuscitate Havel when he arrived at Myrtle Werth Hospital at 2:39 a.m., he was declared dead on arrival, according to a hospital spokesperson.

Havel was a senior at Stout in the industrial technology program. He had a technical sales and service concentration.

Havel's hometown was Middleton, Wisconsin.

According to Peter H. Deyle, a sophomore at Stout who was a friend of Havel's, he had a very enthusiastic interest in motorcycles and liked to play pool.

"He liked to hunt," Greg Hilderbrand, a junior at Stout who had met Havel when they lived together in North Hall. "He was into the outdoors alot.

Havel had been working as a stocker at Don's Super Valu for approximately a year, according to Gary Theelke, store manager.

New lounge provides meeting grounds for non-traditional students

by Jill Huppert

A new non-traditional student lounge will provide a much needed location for older students to meet on campus.

The new lounge is located in the Career Resource Lab of the University Counseling Center in Bowman Hall.

"Members of OASIS felt they needed a central location for older students to meet," said Toni Kunstman, president of the Organization of Adult Students Involved at Stout (OASIS), Stout's club for non-traditional students.

The lounge will be used as a study area, for tutoring, and as a message center, Kunstman said.

Since most older students hold jobs and have families, they are only on campus for their classes.

The lounge is important for the non-traditional students to get messages to each other, said Cindy Jenkins, OASIS Advisor and Assistant Director of Advisement and High School Relations.

Students over 25 years old are classified as non-traditional, according to Jenkins. Over 16 percent of the total enrollment at Stout is non-traditional students, she said.

"Stout is traditionally a young campus," Kunstman said. But with higher unemployment and more people retraining for jobs, Kunstman believes the percent of non-traditional students will increase.

Shirley Murphy, another OASIS Advisor and Stout Counselor, also believes the adult student population will grow. She said more single parents are returning to school because they need to be financially independent.

"People making mid-life career changes are also coming back to school," Murphy said.

"Stout is making an effort towards resolving problems with older students," Kunstman stressed.

The OASIS club assists older students entering Stout to make the change of lifestyle easier, Kunstman said.

Through OASIS, older students provide support for each other and build a network system, Kuntsman stated, which students traditionally usually get through the residence hall system.

OASIS is planning to host a non-traditional student conference for the Spring of 1988, if they receive enough funding.

Non-traditional students and faculty from other educational systems throughout the state would be invited, Kunstman said.

Murphy, a counselor at the Counseling Center, is coordinating a project to assess the child care needs of non-traditional students and employees of the university. A survey will be mailed out after spring break to determine if there is a need for expanded child care facilities at Stout.

During the first two weeks, student response to the lounge has been good," Murphy said, "people have been using it almost every hour of the day."

The lounge is open Mondays through Thursdays from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. and on Fridays from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

The new lounge designated for non-traditional students is being enjoyed by Nora Koch, shown reading The Stoutonia. The lounge is expected to be a meeting place for non-traditional students, those students who are older than the average age. The lounge is located in the basement of Bowman Hall in the Career Resource Lab.

Proposed funding cuts generate concern

by Gretchen Eke

Many organizations and Stout Student Association (SSA) senators expressed concern about the budget allocations proposed foe SSA senate floor Tuesday night.

Various organizations appeared at both the Senate Caucus and the general meeting to voice their concerns to the SSA before the senators approve or amend the committee's recommendations.

"I'm in a complete state of shock," UW-Stout's band director Erv Schlick said in response to the proposed cuts in the band budget. "We're getting a $1200 cut."

Financial Affairs Committee member Todd Nelson said, "Our allocated money is decreased from last year."

The Financial Affairs Committee's allocations decreased approximately $6000 from last year.

Schlick argued that the band needs that money because the band has grown from 65 members last year to 100 members this year.

"I feel the band needs to explore new ways of getting funding, such as fundraising," Vice President of Financial Affairs Cate Reszka said.

"The band performs 55 times a year," Paul Kniez, a spokesman for the band, said. "Time is very limited to do fundraising."

A spokesman for the Forensics organization expressed concern over the budget recommended by the Financial Affairs Committee, which would cut back the amount of travelling that the students who participate in Forensics can do.

"When you start cutting into the travel, you cut the essence of the program," said Mike Nicolai, director of Forensics.

The recommendations of the committee are tabled automatically for one week, after which the senators must vote to approve a final version.

SSA Minority Affairs Senator Adisola Adisa questioned the committee on why Amnesty International was not recommended for funding.

"It is aimed at people who aren't part of this campus," Administrative Assistant Wes Stead said. "They need a campus-wide impact to get funding."

Reszka said that many of the organizations on campus should look to cooperative programming for additional funding.

"Cooperative Programming allows organizations to work together," SSA advisor Bill Siedlecki said.

"Cooperative Programming also stops duplication of programming," Media Advertising Coordinator James Falkofske said.

The SSA reviewed the rest of the proposed allocations and discussion will continue next week.

A special session may be called so that the budget can be voted on before spring break.

In other business, a motion placing a job description for the Minority Affairs Senator in the constitution passed unanimously.

Women's Affairs Senator Connie Schnelle's resignation was announced at the meeting, leaving an opening for the affirmative action seat for the remainder of the Seventeenth Congress, which ends in March.

A replacement for Schnelle is being sought.

Deans Advisory Council reaches out to serve Home Ec students

by Judy Weitzer

In the School of Home Economics, students take an active part in revising, updating and introducing new, innovative ideas into their programs.

A group of students, call the Dean's Student Advisory Committee, meets regularly with Dr. Samenfink, the Dean of the School of Home Economics.

A major portion of each meeting deals with student opinions and program updates.

"But," said Mary Raymond, committee chairperson, "we cover a wide variety of topics."

In the fall, members of the committee participate in a program called "Reaching Out."

Each representative receives a list of students enrolled in their respective program. They then go door-to-door, handing out informational brochures and answering general questions about the program.

"It's a good way for us to get some visibility," said Raymond.

Throughout the year, students are encouraged to talk to their representative about problems, ideas, or suggestions regarding their program.

"If students give us feedback, it goes directly to the Dean," Raymond commented.

In fashion merchandising, student input proved effective, when a mandatory computer class was added to the program after representatives from the council brought the suggestion to the Dean.

An interest survey concerning student preferences of teaching methods is expected to be released in late March.

"We feel students should have some input in the way they are taught," remarked Raymond.

Suggestions will be made to the Dean after the results of the survey are analyzed.

The Dean's Advisory Council also sponsors an annual all-campus "Spring Fling" during the last week of April or the first week in May.

Last year's "Beauty and the Beat," sponsored by the council, lured people to go outside and be entertained by several bands. The year before, the council organized the "World's Largest People Picture," which received national recognition. They are still in need of a theme for this year's events.

Council positions become available when a current member graduates or steps down for other reasons. Open positions are listed in Cross Currents, the news publication of the School of Home Economics.

Positions on the council are open to self nomination.

After a primary election by peers, the top three candidates go through an interviewing process. The committee then makes the final selections.

No formal training is required of committee members.

"We are not program advisors," Raymond stressed, "we can only make recommendations."

Students with an opinion to voice can contact Mary Raymond for the name and phone number of their program representative.

Computers bring automation to hospitality industry

by Karan Nand

In keeping with trends towards automated computer management of hotel properties, UW-Stout has been developing new courses in computer applications and data base management in the hospitality industry.

The acquisition of four IBM-XT computers and the Lodgemate software program by the habitational resources department is seen by the faculty as the beginning of computer integrated education.

The impetus for computer related course development has evolved from negotiations between Dr. Leland Nicholls, department administrator and hotel industry representatives.

Participation in developing the program came from Marriott Corporation, Holiday Corporation and Lodgistix.

Marriott took the lead in developing the computer laboratory, with a generous donation of $40,000, according to Nicholls.

The courses being offered under this area of study are in the Front Office Management and Special Problems in Habitational Resources.

"We are all very excited about these courses and they offer tremendous opportunities for the students," said Robert Olson, assistant professor.

Olson is involved in developing the front office management section with specific emphasis on Lodgemate.

Lodgemate is a software program for hotel operations.

Using this system, students learn the computerized techniques involved in front office management.

Front office management includes reservations, registration, guest accounting, night audit procedures and the generation of various other reports and records.

Sections of this class have limited enrollment and students selected are screened for previous exposure to front office operations.

Starting on a sophisticated property management system such as this, without any previous experience in the front office, will not be beneficial to the student, Olson said.

"This is a pilot attempt for a small number of students," Olson said. "This effort will identify teaching and learning problems to be dealt with in subsequent semesters."

Each student needs their own terminal and the restricted number of computers was a stumbling block in this attempt, Olson added.

According to Olson, each student receives an orientation to the computers; the hardware, software and disk-operating system.

Students review the Lodgemate manuals and go through the computer-aided instruction in their initial exposure to the program.

The next phase is to get acquainted with the Lodgemate on the hard disk and page through the functions involved.

Each student then starts building a hypothetical hotel with specific codes which are assigned. Operating the hotel which they build in the hard disk memory is the next step.

Here, the students deal with the operations of reserving guest rooms, registering guests, maintaining the guest account and generating reports and records vital to the front office.

"Generating reports is one thing," said Olson, "and using these for management decisions is another."

The students are taught to use these reports in making vital decisions for the smooth and profitable operation of the hotel.

"The basic principles and procedures of front office operation must not be overlooked," said Nitin Nadkarni, graduate assistant involved in implementation of the course, "and the students are taught this right from the beginning."

"The computer is not an end in itself, but a means to the solution," said Betsy Bender, an instructor who is involved in the course development.

"The students are taught not to be afraid of the computers, but to view them as handy tools," said Bender.

"I feel it's a very good and an extremely user-friendly program, and the course has great benefits," said Ken Jamros, a student currently enrolled in the section.

Eulalia Rach, an instructor who teaches the other section, Special Problems in Habitational Resources, attended a training seminar on the application and use of the Lodgemate program. This seminar was held in New Jersey, at the RCA - Lodgistix Training Center.

The other area of computer application is in the section called Special Problems in Habitational Resources. This course imparts students with knowledge on the several software programs applicable to the hospitality industry.

"We are entering into a very exciting period of curriculum development," said Rach. "In the near future, the School of Home Economics will have a special computer laboratory allowing students the direct hands-on experience in the several software programs related to the hospitality industry."

Rach is involved in team teaching this section with Jim Buergermeister.

Florida break

In a move to make the Spring Break period fun and safe for approximately 250,000 college students who come to Fort Lauderdale, Florida seeking warmth and sunshine, the tourism and business communities of the city have designed a three-pronged program.

Created by a Spring Season Task Force, the program consists of organized games on the beach, a code of student behavioral ethics and a pedestrian walkway along Highway A1A, a popular route to the beach.

The College Games are an organized roster of intercollegiate competitions to be held on Fort Lauderdale Beach.

Among the daily competitions will be basketball, inflatable hydroplane races, volleyball, tug-of-war, aerobics, dace contests and a new "Beach Blanket Bingo" — on a blanket board, with people as chips.

The Code of Ethics, which will be available in print at many locations, details the local laws and ordinances. Among the points covered will be that the legal drinking age in Florida is now 21.

The Pedestrian Walkway will be created by a low barrier, blocking off the right-hand southbound lane of A1A, along the beach.

This will allow strollers to fan out past the normal boundaries of the sidewalk, while protecting them from moving traffic. The barrier will be decorated in a local art student competition.

No leads

"It gets to be like pounding your head against a brick wall," said Bob Hoage, campus police supervisor.

Hoage expressed frustration in having no leads on the theft of $2000 worth of computer equipment from the newly-opened, newly-remodeled Communications Building at UW-Stout.

Interviews and research continue in connection with the investigation of the theft, which occured on the afternoon of Friday, Feb. 13.

Peace tech

A conference entitled "The Technology of World Peace" will be sponsored in March 13-15 by the student government of an Iowa university.

The motto of the Maharichi International University (MIU) in Fairfield, Iowa, where the event will be held, is "Knowledge is structured in consciousness."

The conference will involve presentations relating individual success to world peace by students and national leaders in business, education and international affairs.

"It is clear that a new solution is needed to an age-old problem," said Scott Hickey, president of the World Congress at MIU, "and this is what we will explore during the conference."

"The MIU students are going to demonstrate a practical technology for world peace through 'yogic flying,'" Hickey added.

How to change

A motion to change the constitution of the University Programming Board (UPB) mandating the election dates of member organizations was brought to the floor at this week's Tuesday meeting.

The motion, moved by Dan Duhin, UPB's representative to student government, would require member organizations to hold their elections at the beginning of the fourth quarter if they do not already do so.

The constitutional change is expected to be voted on next week by the body, which is made up of executive UPB members, the chairs of its member organizations and assemblypersons-at-large.

Better never than late

As we approach spring break, it is intriguing to watch students try converting their bodies into works of art to be paraded around on the beaches.

Television has promoted the perfect body for years, featuring characters who are blemishless and for the most part are the correct weight for their size. Unfortunately, television overlooks the endless variety of body frame sizes and influences its audience to try and emulate the beauty of characters presented on shows and in commercials.

An important thing to remember is that dieting ought to be a lifetime process which combines a daily meal plan with exercise rather than a one or two-week rush to create the best possible appearance for one week in March.

Healthy dieting involves checking with a doctor for his or her approval of your planned alteration in diet and exercise. If you have not exercised recently, a sudden invasion of the weight room may be noble in intent yet your body may suffer severely from your blind ambition.

If you think a starvation diet is the only way to get into trim by spring break, think again. Starvation diets have been proven to lower the dieter's rate of metabolism while dehydrating the dieter. Studies have shown that losing two pounds a week is a normal healthy rate of weight loss for adults. Therefore, a ten pound weight loss program ought to take more than one month.

Exercise is valuable to dieting because it maintains a high metabolic rate in your body and prevents the build up of fat. Exercise has to be at least twice a week to be affective since the muscles start to deteriorate as soon as three days after the previous day of exercise.

As a result, it is tough to start exercising when you are out of shape, but easy to continue exercising once you have worked yourself into condition.

For whatever reason you want to lose weight, an affective diet takes time and planning. Otherwise, you will only find the experience unpleasant and unhealthy just like the individual who burns their skin in the attempt to gain a quick tan prior to break.

Our hope is that you realize your many expectations during spring break. Our concern is that you use common sense in attaining your goals.

Fine Line

Novel approach

Jef Maynard

I like Samuel Beckett. I know next to nothing about him; however in the course of fleshing out this time-saving study method, I will undoubtedly have to learn something more than I know. Using the Three Line with Interpolation technique, I can learn more in much less time.

First: the origin of the technique is from an impressive item from Beckett himself. This sentence which appears alone, at the top of an otherwise blank page at the end of a book of modern quotations: "Every word is like an unnecessary stain on silence." (Which is not the same as saying that every word is like an unnecessary stain on the sheets of silence.)

Need I say more?

Yes, and forever true to the forces of friction, yes, and yes again, there must be more words. (Have you ever stopped to wonder just how important friction, both molecular and interpersonal, is to our way of life?)

Another episode related to Beckett, which has nothing to do with the technique and amounts merely to a somewhat amusing digression of questionable worth, is a dimly recognizable memory of my friend, Danny Morden, performing at random, a scene from "Waiting for Godot," a play by Beckett.

The scene, of which not one word stains my memory, was performed for my amusement during a momentary pause near the end of an emotional roller coaster summer spent as a counselor in a camp for 180 mentally handicapped kids.

If you have never known a friend who could spout, entirely without context or provocation, lines from "Waiting for Godot" in a London/Scottish/Welsh accent, complete with gestures, while vacuuming up the fallout from a baby powder fight in a small, warm room in Pennsylvania, how can I explain it to you?

One other bit of Beckett destined to shape my life forever is the opening line from Murphy, a Beckett novel. I haven't read the book from cover to cover, as the expression goes-not in the usual sense, anyway. This is the Three Line Technique:

I read the first line, the last line, and the line I figured (by the number of pages) to be the middle line of the book.

The point of this column (in case there needs to be a point), is actually about a system for just that technique-reading three lines and then using interpolation or bogus circumlocution, (i.e. bullshit), to summarize the novel.

This method would save thousands of student hours each semester, and prevent countless millions of unnecessary words from cluttering already overburdened lives. It would also allow more time for an activity students perform best: daydreaming.

From Murphy: "The sun shone, having no alternative, on the nothing new."

This line so oozes with frothing philosophy, it could fill all the warm intellectual soaking tubs in all the professorial bathhouses from here to San Francisco.

In the middle of the book, the plot thickens, rich in action and compounded by the existential crisis of modern human drama: "He sat down on the Descartes linoleum, choking and writhing like a chicken with the gapes, seeing the scene."

What scene? By interpolation of course, the scene symbolic of the human condition. The great intellectual achievements of the world, the "I think therefore I am," basis of all existence, flopping around on the middle-class flooring, degraded, like a sick chicken.

The last line brings to death-like conclusion, but not resolution of the human crisis: "She closed her eyes. All out." People are blind and everybody dies.

Most students use condensed versions, skimming, Cliff Notes, or video remakes of novels to save time preparing for tests or papers. The Three Line system can help you avoid all these imperfect substitutes.

When you get the assignment of War and Peace, Moby Dick, or any other unnecessarily wordy imposition, try the Three Line with Symbolic Interpolation study method and show your respect for silence.

Opinions

Seeds of Change

Good vs. Evil

Gene Emahiser

Last Friday I had dinner with Alison Frederickson. You might remember her letter to the editor that appeared in the February 5th issue of the Stoutonia.

We chatted about her concerns for me and this column. During our conversation, it occurred to me that there were a few foundational differences in our thinking. Each one of them was food enough for days of thought.

At the root of our differences was Alison's view that man is basically good. I, of course, hold the Biblical view that man is basically evil at heart.

"There is no one righteous, not even one; there is no one who understands, no one who seeks God...There is no one who does good, not even one." (Romans 3:11-12)

First of all, let me say that if people feel that man is basically good, then it would naturally follow that fewer people would be in prison and many would be professional volunteers or public servants. Man would naturally do what is best for the common good. There would be no need for rules and regulations. The endless court battles over loopholes in the law would cease.

But, man is naturally evil. That is, that their natural inclination is to do what they can to please themselves, not God or others. Since they are basically evil, we have to create rules and laws to keep each other honest, to protect the weak from the strong, and to alter the behavior of man to ensure that they do what is right, not what is wrong.

If man were basically good, one could infer that they are in control. They choose to be good or to be evil, and to do the right or the wrong thing. If they really wanted to, they could be perfect and never do another evil thing again. And, since mans' heart is naturally inclined to do good, we should have an earth full of perfect, smiling, do-gooders.

Well, we don't. We never have and never will until Christ returns.

All mankind is sinful so they all have a natural inclination to sin. It is not the other way around. Man does not become sinful by sinning. Man, since the fall of Adam, have had to serve the desires of their sinful nature. Try as a man may, he can never totally shake himself free from sin without dying.

There are two basic problems with being a sin-driven person. The first is that sin separates a man from God. The Bible says that all have sinned and fall short of God. This is a major problem because man was created to function in communion with God. Without that communion with God, man wanders aimlessly through life, never knowing where to go or what to do.

As a result, many try to lose themselves in sex, drugs, and alcohol. This only makes the situation worse. People that stay on this path find that it leads to death; spiritually, for sure, and in some cases physically.

The second problem with living according to our sinful nature is that it is impossible to ever complete the course that God has given us if we are living a sinful life. Even if we knew what it was, we can never accomplish anything for God if our life is being spent serving his enemy.

Since our spirits were designed to be satisfied with knowing God and doing His will, everyone who lives according to their sinful desires is unsatisfied and unfulfilled. For this reason, suicide is on the rise.

The solution that God has offered is almost too simple to believe. Give up our life in exchange for the one He has waiting for us. Give up our wandering, hopeless, futile, and unproductive lifestyle in exchange for a destiny of hope, purpose, and meaning. Give up our shallow meaningless relationships in exchange for a loving relationship with the Creator and supreme ruler of the universe.

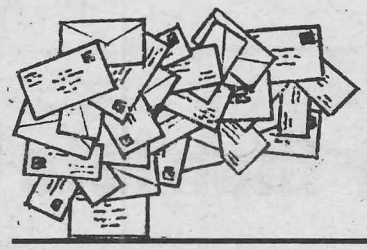
The only catch is that we must be ready to forsake our life completely. Jesus Christ wants it all or not at all. Jesus is not looking for any half-way commitments. He hates hypocrisy more than we do.

If you are at that place where you can see clearly that the road that you are on leads to nowhere, then you are ready to give up and give it all to God.

Jesus said, "Look! I have been standing at the door and I am constantly knocking. If anyone hears me calling them and opens the door, I will come in and fellowship with him and he with Me."

Rev. 4:20

If you have felt God knocking and calling, don't refuse his invitation. He desires to restore that communion with you. He showed His love for you on the cross. Now it's your decision to accept life or choose death.



Letters

Confusing the issue

Congratulations to Mark J. Hottel in his recent attempt to "confuse the issue" of drug testing (2/19/87). Actually, enough confusion exists in the media already concerning chemical usage by the general public without such planned slings and arrows.

"Use" is not "abuse" is not "dependence". As soon as we sharpen up on the semantics involved, perhaps we can strike at the heart of the problem without labels and stigmas projected onto others who need help.

Linda Christopherson

Getting the point

This letter is in response to the one written by Dave Irwin in last week's Stoutonia.

First, I would like to note that my previous letter concerning Gene Emahiser's column was printed with a point omitted, which I felt important. That (point) was that the Speakers Series, of which I am a member, refused to co-sponsor the McDowell event because of our policy of not sponsoring speakers who promote a particular religious viewpoint. This was the reason cited to Mr. Emahiser's group, and not the one having to do with audience appeal, as he printed in The Stoutonia.

If you, Mr. Irwin, would like your eyes opened to issues that you have ignored before, as you stated, then you must must support my view of a column exploring the beliefs of various religions, not just one. As for "the rest of us" seldom being able to "make a stand on anything...", I respectfully request that you speak for yourself, and not presume to make a comment on the virtue of all of "the rest of us."

I quote from your letter, "...maybe then we can accept other people's opinions and accept them for who they are instead of condemning them." I neither "condemn" Gene Emahiser nor his opinions. But I do find that he does quite a bit of condemning of other people's opinions, should they vary from his own, and very little exception.

What I DO object to strongly, is his misrepresentation of the facts, and the use of The Stoutonia as his platform for pushing his particular religious viewpoint. There are many religious viewpoints represented in the Stout population, and I feel that if we are going to give space to one, than we need to give space to others who wish it. And I find his misrepresentation of the facts, concerning the Speakers Series among other things, inexcusable. Even more so when it is done specifically to serve his own purposes.

Should there be others who agree with my objections to this column, I ugre you to take a minute and give The Stoutonia a call at extension 2272.

Respectfully,
Rita Dahms

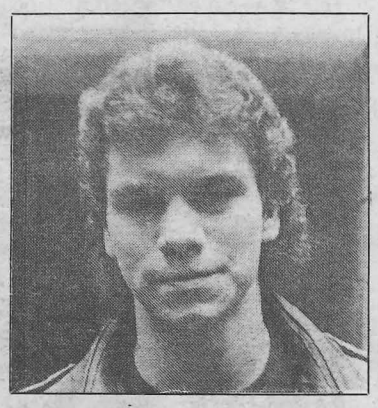
CAMPUS SLANT/ What do you think of running contraceptive ads on television?

By Brian Kraimer
Photos by Dan Banach

Gina Mehlum,
Fashion Merchandising,
Sophomore,

It will inform people for the most part. I think it will probably prevent a lot of unwanted pregnancies. I think, though, that this type of ad should be run later at night so the younger kids do not see them, because they may not understand them yet.



Mark Montgomery,
Applied Technology,
Freshman,

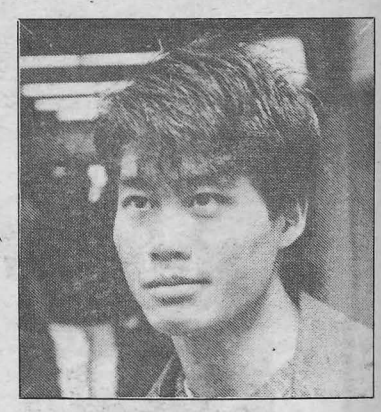
It would not bother me either way. It would probably inform people. Although they should really know what is going on already.

Pat Sullivan,
Merchandising and Business,
Senior,

Personally I think for the AIDS education it is a good idea, but for the younger children I think it promotes promiscuity. I do not think the ads will really offend me, but then again I might not be the majority.

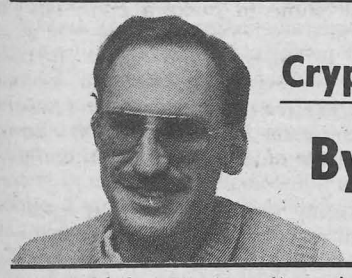
Tim Lang,
Psychology,
Freshman,

I think it is good to let the uninformed people know what is going on. It is a really smart idea that this is done. It will have a positive effect on children because they will be informed. I think the effects of this type of advertising are going to be positive for all people.



Shao Chang,
Psychology,
Freshman,

I do not think it is a good idea at all. I do not like to see this type of advertising. I think that the parents should be telling the children instead of seeing it on television.



Cryptic Notes

Byte-ing commentary

Tim Hopkins

I'm told that Stout won't receive any insurance settlement for the $2,000 in computer equipment stolen from the communications technologies laboratory unless they can prove breaking and entering occurred. It makes one wonder what drove the university to leave an unsecured computer in that room for the taking.

Word is that UW-Stout students have look-alikes from the Menomonie police department. If you can't beat 'em join 'em. As guests at house parties, these police are not apt to be asked back if they continue arresting their hosts. Hospitality only goes so far.

The strange thing is, Menomonie police can dress up as Stout students and arrest us. Yet, if we dress up as Menomonie police, we end up getting arrested again. I don't know what they're trying to tell us. Of course, if we all dressed up as police, the uniform would become meaningless and we could revel in anarchy. It could make for a fun weekend.

The best possible solution is for Stout students to start dressing so outrageously that you couldn't pay a police officer to dress up as one of us.

It's scary how easily the police can blend in with our lifestyle. My conclusion is that the Menomonie police benefit from the vast majority of conformists who inundate this campus. It should be fun to turn things around. Let's get weird. Weird is wired spelled sideways.

The recently proposed increase in tuition charges for enrolling in classes outside your degree program is another attempt to get us to be one-directional. The problem with being one- directional is that you are left with so little when you have focused your efforts in the same direction all along.

Did you read about "quality cuts" last week? Quality cuts is a term coined by Governor Tommie Thompson's administration. In case you didn't hear the news, enrollment in the UW system will be trimmed by 3,000 students as a method of maintaining class quality.

Remember the movie "Soylent Green" in which the people learned that their marvelously nutritious food was the product of human tissue? Those who knew the truth ran through the streets of the city yelling out the startling news that, "Soylent green is people!"

Don't be surprised if students start running through the halls here yelling, "Quality cuts are students!" If you are one of the 3,000 students refused entrance to the system because of these cuts, I agree you might feel a strange sort of quality.

What about quality cuts at the legislative level in Madison? What do you think, Governor?

Bottom Line

Stress reduction

Rich Brueckner

"The time I like is the rush hour, 'cause I like the rush."–Peter Gabriel Stress is the body's likely reaction to 19 credits and a co-op. Luckily, we Americans have learned and to combat stress with the placebo of leisure.

Socializing and forgetting your responsibilities for a while doesn't always work. Making up for 40 hours of work with six hours in a bar requires what I like to call "quality time."

Throwing a party can blow off a lot of steam. Happiness is discovering that your house is trashed, your speakers have melted, and every blood vessel in your face has exploded.

Sometimes doctors recommend the stress that only a vacation can inflict. Do you remember how uptight your patents used to get when they took a couple of weeks off?

We, as children, didn't really have any stress to reduce on these vacations. You learn quickly when the outboard falls off your Dad's bass boat because you were jumping whitecaps.

Getting back to nature and camping with your buddies from the lodge is a sure-fire reduction. Sometimes Dad relieves his stress by telling this story about how such a trip caused his friend's stress:

"Hey Dick, this is the worst tasting toothpaste I've ever had; flick on that flashlight, would you?"

"Jesus! That's my Preparation H, you dumb ass!"

Profanity causes a lot of people stress. This can be a vicious cycle for those who swear as a symptom.

Certain terms come to mind in this topic:

Speeders are the pills that some people take so they can stay awake and perform leisure activities all night long.

Dianetics is like the arms scandal; it uses the slogan, "It may be because of something you don't even know about."

Spring Break is the college student's escape from Wisconsin winter's lack of green grass, sunshine, and mushrooms.

As for me, well, I'm headed to the Padre's in a motor home with 50 cases and two half-barrels. It should be great preventive stress-maintenance for fourth quarter.

Campus fashions feature great diversity

by Rhonda Olson

The clothing that you scramble into in the morning tells people something about yourself. Several UW-Stout students share their opinions on the "Out of Africa", Midwest and Career looks.

Included in the "Out of Africa" theme are earth tones such as khaki, tan, brown, black, and white. Accessories incorporated are leopard print hairbows, earrings, bracelets, and wide 'alligator' belts.

Joan Eklund, academic staff and director for the Niche, reported that a belt similar to Ralph Lauren's five inch alligator belt selling for approimately $400, is a 'hot' item. The Niche will be carrying a knock-off of the Lauren design for $23.

Necklaces with large beads and animals such as giraffes, lions, tigers, and elephants are also important accessories in the safari look.

Jerry Lang, a Stout senior, commented on the "Out of Africa" look, "I've seen the khaki pants on men and the beads on women at a different campus. I'm not really for it, but to each his own."

Sophomore Kurt Beile said that he likes the "outfitting" clothes such as Banana Republic, L.L. Bean and Land's End. Banana Republic is a specialty store and catalog in which a wide variety of safari clothing is sold.

Many trends borrow accessories from each other. Safari features hair bows in leapord prints, while the Midwest features its hair bows in faded blues and lace.

Hairbows, sometimes referred to as Fergie bows, due to Sarah Ferguson's penchant for them, are often worn around the Stout campus.

"The bows can really make a person look striking," said Gaea Frerichs.

Hair bows are also a big part of the Midwest theme, also. The Niche sells denim and rhinestone hair bows that accent the faded blues present in the Midwest look.

A Stout junior, Mike Steinart said, "I'm not too thrilled about hair bows. They kind of get to me."

The Midwest theme features faded blues, other pastels, lace, and silver with turquoise accessories. Accompaniments to the prairie look are the bolo tie and concho belt.

"I think everyone likes the more feminine styles and the colors such as white, pale blue, and pink," freshman Sandy Mahoney said.

Senior Steve Schneeberger also enjoys the Midwest theme, "I think it's going to be a good summer look. The 'Out of Africa' is slowly fading, and I think the Midwest could replace it."

Sophomore Jenny Murphy said, "I like the Midwest look with the pastels and lace." Murphy added that she also enjoys seeing men wear the bolo ties, faded blues and other pastels of the Midwest look if it fits their character and they can wear it without feeling uncomfortable.

Many students are becoming less concerned with their play wear, and are beginning to think about their career wardrobes.

Said junior Laura Reek, "My emphasis right now is carreer wear because I'm interviewing for co-ops. I'm trying to build my career wardrobe up."

Reek also said that her goal is to look professional. Many other students have this goal in mind when it comes time to choose interview clothing. Some points to look at when buying a suit: make sure you feel at ease in it; the color should be understated.

Kelly Berenz, sophomore, said that a nice, classy suit for men is a good investment. "What really makes a suit is the right tie and good accessories."

Traditional colors for suits such as black, blue, and gray aren't neccessarily the best choice for interviews. Teek stated that she would like to see men trying something other than the basic blue suit with a white shirt.

Many suits are seen among the blue jeans which are popular with many students. However most Stout students live in blue jeans.

Mark Engel, a junior said that he thinks the Stout campus doesn't have an extreme range of fashion statements compared to other campuses. There isn't a radical or a preppy look which is outstanding.

Many students agreed that it's not so much the fashions theme, but rather the persons overall look that makes a fashion statement. As Kelly Berenz said, "If the shoe fits, wear it!"

University of Minnesota art professor shows work in J. Furlong gallery

by Steve Voll

It's Monday, I know that for a fact. I am sitting inside the J. Furlong gallery and that's a fact, too. It's dark in here and that's a fact. Actually, it's discretely lighted in this gallery and I'm the only one in the gallery. Well, what am I doing in here anyways?

I'm going to make sense out of this place and this lady's work. After a few seconds of heavy reasoning and doubtful thought, I realize that none her paintings make any sense to me. I'm just going to keep walking around until it all makes sense to me.

Now, I am standing at a chalkboard, one of which is found near every one of her drawings. On this one somebody has expressed to me, "PleAsE exPreSs YouRseLf, plEase." Well, I'm a little leerly about writing on this black chalkboard with this white chalk.

Moving myself around the room, I now find myself standing next to another one of her drawings. So, I pick up the chalk and express' six intersecting lines. None of this is making any sense. Reason, you know? Why did I make those marks?

> "I'm going to make sense out of this"

Well by now, I'm ready for a good headbutt from one of the guys to bring me back to reality.

Then, I turn around and see a big-corn-bin- type-thing of books. I get it now, there must be something in the middle of it.

So, I spend a few moments looking for what is inside of this thing and then the story behind the lollipops comes back to me. The surprise was never that great. In fact, it is just a big hunk of goo. How can this surprise be all that great?

Now, I'm reading. Her name is Diane Katsiaficas and she's an art professor at the University of Minnesota. Reason. Reason. Reason. Well, the show is open through March 6, 1987.

Maybe the titles are going to make sense to me. Ah yes, Tabula Rasa! Nope.

Swoosh, swish, bim bam BOOM!, color, color, color, line, LINE, LINE, line, Mark, color, swoosh and WOOSH, Scratch, scratch, Scraaatch, vroooom-vroooom, VROOoooommm.

One Point Perspective

Slow burn

J. Dauplaise

I am thoroughly amazed at how quickly the time has passed this semester. According to my less than technical calculations the semester is nearly a third over. This fact is of particular concern to me considering I have nearly three dozen or more unfinished projects and abligations to deal with.

This time element is also indicative of Spring Break, which is rapidly approaching. All over campus evidence of traditional Spring Break preparation can be seen.

There is a muddy trench beaten to the doors of the weight room which grows deeper as Spring Break draws nearer. The lines for the bench press are longer than the theater lines to see Platoon. I am thoroughly amazed at the number of people who believe they can go from the size of Willard Scott to Don Knotts in three weeks.

Other students are afflicted with jogging mania. The easiest way to distinguish the real athletes from the "Spring Break Fake" is to tail the runner in a car. (I am going to Iowa and Northern Wisconsin for Spring Break and will not be baring any flesh and am therefore entitled to drive rather than walk or run.)

The first indicator that the jogger is on a Spring Break fitness plan is the presence of inappropriate footwear. Pink hightops or cement-heavy gym shoes from high school that can be heard slapping the pavement from blocks away are generally a dead giveaway.

The second tip off is lack of stamina, or worse yet, lack of willpower. A jogger that cannot run more than three city blocks without stopping or collapsing is definitely not the Carl Lewis type. Worse yet is the jogger who stops dead in their tracks in front of Ted's Pizza and runs in for a large House Special with double cheese.

The amazing phenomenon of Spring Break preparation is highly evident in the dorms. Chubby girls fill the hallways doing spasmodic interpretations of Jane Fonda's Workout. After the event the girls waddle to their rooms to recuperate. Spent of their energy, they quietly sneak down to Vendoland after their work out and hope no one notices that a whole row of Cheetos is missing when they leave.

Some of the guys prefer to take a different and somewhat more realistic approach in their preparations. They spend the weeks before Break practicing packing the optimum alcohol supply into their luggage while still leaving room for their swimming suit and a box of Trojans.

The local tanning booths have gone into the annual 24 hour, seven day a week business hours to accommodate the pre-Daytona countdown. I personally cannot rationalize staying up until three in the morning to go to a tanning booth. I'd probably fall asleep listening to piped in Bon Jovi and they'd have to break the door down to get me out.

The funny thing about this preparatory tanning is some people are tanner exiting the city limits than when they return from vacation. I am uncertain whether this is do to unfavorable weather, or if they are in so much pain from their fifty dollar burns when they leave that they cannot bear to lay in the hot sun.

Personally, I'll be sweating out the time before Break trying to accomplish at least fifty percent of what I should have done, organize my precarious finances in such a way as to remain out of debt and out of jail, and remember to send Mom a card for her twenty ninth birthday.

I will also step up my fitness regimen which consists solely of running from one floor to another in the Applied Arts building. Instead of going from floor to floor thirty times a day, I will increase the number to fifty a day, as well as adding the challenging element of taking the stairs two at a time.

Dustin Hoffman delivers hilarity in 'The Graduate'

by Tim Hopkins

Take a script which captured the flavor of the mid '60s, add a Simon and Garfunkel soundtrack and direction by Mike Nichols of Dustin Hoffman in his first starring role and you end up with the film classic The Graduate.

The Graduate will be brought to you free of charge by the Pawn Live Friday and Saturday nights, 9 p.m. at the Pawn.

The film contrasts the differences between fantasy and reality in Benjamin Braddock's life as the recent college graduate. Many scenes in The Graduate are truly memorable because they are matched so well to the Simon and Garfunkel soundtrack.

The opening scene grabs your attention as Benjamin envies the quiet solitude of the fish in his room's aquarium while his parents revel in their son's past glories as a scholar and an athlete in the graduation party being held in the living room downstairs.

As Ben blends into the party he is congratulated by many friends and one offers the classic advice that he get into "PLASTICS."

In a classically funny moment in American film, the audience sees through Benjamin's eyes as he looks out at his parents through a skin diving mask. His parents have given him an aqualung suit for his birthday. Benjamin stands in the living room wearing flippers, mask and a wet suit saying to his father, "I am not going to do this." After convincing him into the pool, Benjamin nearly drowns.

Time and again Benjamin gets into trouble after meeting his parents' wishes rather than pursuing his own desires.

Dustin Hoffman is almost perfect as the exact opposite to Anne Bancroft's Mrs. Robinson. Hoffman portrays Benjamin as the young man trying to convince the world he is far more experienced than he really is. The fact he is a virgin when the film starts adds to his insecurity.

The first night of his affair with Mrs. Robinson, Benjamin is so nervous that it is clear to everyone that there is something funny going on. Initially, he registers under his own name and then changes his name right in front of the desk clerk played with comical straightness by Buck Henry. Mrs. Robinson is a bitterly matter of fact individual who appears incapable of experiencing emotions.

Film buffs should try to catch both Norman Fell and Richard Dreyfus in cameo appearances toward the end of this 1967 film.

The fun in The Graduate results from ther contrast between the dreams Benjamin's parents have for him and the nightmare Benjamin believes he is experiencing. There is a communication gap and a generation gap between Benjamin and his parents which makes their dialogues that much more entertaining. Neither one understands the other. As a result, neither one can please the other.

If you are looking for a fun film that takes you back to life in the '60s, I recommend The Graduate which features themes which remain timely today.

Spontaneous Combustion

Heavy Metal Hot Shots

James 'Unk' Falkofske

Today as I was wandering through the precariously balanced books in the long thin aisles of the University Bookstore, I passed by the magazine racks. I was looking to see if the new issue of Bunny Mag had come out with its Vanna White issue.

Searching the spindles, my eye caught a glimpse of a magazine that didn't belong. Among the various fishing and photography magazines, I found Hit Parader's --Heavy Metal Hot Shots. The last time I remember seeing this publication was in the hands of my kid sister who wants to go into show business, or psychology and pet therapy.

Well, I thought that Heavy Metal might be an interesting topic of conversation for this week's column. I still can't grasp what Heavy Metal actually is. I find that people who talk of Heavy Metal groups are often referring to those that play with amplifiers cranked wide open and use distortion and feedback as a axe to split the eardrums of their listeners.

I started at the back of the magazine (I should have learned to read in arabic). I glanced through the pages that advertised full- size concert pictures and fake ID cards printed for any state of the union. How many underaged drinkers have been busted lately?

High school stuff. I looked at the front cover. Hiding in the top right corner was the price $2.95/1.50 UK (the dollar must be losing ground again). Being bored and having time to kill, I "invested" in the journal containing pictures and half-aware interviews of the stars of iron metal feedback.

Turning back to page twenty-seven, I saw David Lee Roth standing between two women with bigger biceps than Hulk Hogan. The caption underneath has David saying, "I love women who can beat the crap out of me."

Flipping through even more pages, I discovered I was wrong. The magazine doesn't actually believe in publishing half-aware interviews. It doesn't even believe in stories. The only contents were pictures, captions, pictures, ads for posters, pictures, and more pictures. The page with the most words on it was an ad for "Super Discount Records."

Why?

Or maybe I should say wow. As I started flipping through the magazine again, I started thinking (eight in the morning is usually not my starting time). Maybe people who read Heavy Metal Mags really can't read. No, really! Stranger things have happened.

Let me rephrase my statement: persons who enjoy purchasing and viewing magazines displaying artists of the sub-culture belonging to the movement of driving bass and screeching feedback music enjoy viewing the artist's portraits more so than researching background information on them.

I am surprised. I knew that high schoolers read such magazines, but I didn't realize why. Maybe our high schoolers can't read or write either. When they graduate with eighteen credits of study hall, they go on to work for some magazine that pays them six-figures to randomly toss photos of half naked people on a page.

Actually, I am kind of upset. When I invested my hard earned dollars in this commodity, I thought it would (at the very least) give me material to write a column for this week's paper. I guess I'll have to check what Rolling Stone has to say about Bruce, "the Boss," instead.

Well, getting to the truth of the matter, maybe I am pleased. If the only qualification for producing a Heavy Metal magazine is the ability to take candid color shots of a rocker grabbing the behind of a teenage girl, then maybe I have finally found a way to pay for my college career.

Cagers end 3-game skid with win over Pioneers

by Paul Emerson

"Three strikes and you're out," may be true in a baseball game, but although the UW-Stout men's basketball team had lost three straight WSUC games before beating UW-Platteville 78-67 Saturday night, they are far from out of the postseason playoff picture.

The Blue Devils "third strike" came from a red-hot UW-Whitewater squad that seems to have shaken its midseason slump and proved so in Johnson Fieldhouse Friday night in an 82-71 victory.

With the weekend split of games, Stout's record now stands at 9-6 in the WSUC and 18-6 overall. Platteville, which lost a four-overtime marathon to UW-Eau Claire on Friday night, fell to a final 6-10 WSUC mark and 14-11 overall. Whitewater, which also lost to Eau Claire on Saturday night, is now 6-9 in the WSUC and 16-9 overall.

In this week's NAIA Division II top twenty poll, Eau Claire remained in the number seven spot while UW-Stevens Point dropped one spot to 14th. Stout was not ranked for the second straight week.

The Blue Devils moved up to the number three spot in this week's Dunkel Ratings. The Dunkels are used to determine the seedings for the District 14 playoffs.

According to the format, the Blue Devils will play the sixth seeded team, which Head Coach Dewey Mintz thinks will be one of the independents. Stout will host the first round game, regardless of who they play, on Saturday night at 7:30 p.m. in the fieldhouse.

The first round of the playoffs begins this Saturday, the semi-finals will be next Monday and the finals will be next Wednesday.

Whitewater 82 Stout 71

"They played their best game of the year," Head Coach Dewey Mintz said of the Warhawks. Led by Robert Barnes' 9 of 12 shooting from the floor and 24 total points, Whitewater fought off a second half surge by the Blue Devils en route to the win.

Down by eight points at the half, 41-33, the Blue Devils watched the lead expand to as much as twelve points and were down by 11 with 13:02 to go, 53-42.

Stout's offense then came to life as they whittled the margin down to one before taking their first and only lead of the game, 58-57, with 8:47 left.

But just as quickly as they jumped back into it, they fell off the pace as the Warhawks ran off a 15-2 scoring spurt and were never threatened the rest of the way.

Stout had five players score in double figures for the game. Brian Ellingson led with 16 points. Ron Hunter had 15 for the Blue Devils, while Luther Forrest scored 13, Tom Gomolak 11 and John Patterson 10.

Stout shot 45 percent from the floor, including 8 of 15 on 3-point field goals (4 by Ellingson, 3 by Hunter and 1 by Forrest), and attempted just 8 free throws, making 5.

Duane Vance scored 19 points for the Warhawks and Randy Maerz had 12. Whitewater shot 54 percent from the floor and cashed in at the charity stripe by connecting on 19 of 21 free throws.

Stout 78 Platteville 67

Stout shot out of the blocks and took a 10-0 lead to start the game. Platteville missed their first few shots and were scoreless until the 16-minute mark when DeAndre Woods finally ended the drought.

The Blue Devils took their biggest lead of the half at 25-11 with 9:49 to go. But the Pioneers managed to cut the deficit to six by the half, 44-38.

"We had a good first half as far as possession conversions [21 of 37]," Mintz said. "But in the se-

Swim teams host WSUC meet

by Slash La Freniere

The UW-Stout Swimming and Diving teams performed well last weekend at the WSUC championship swim meet, held at Johnson Feildhouse. UW-Eau Claire was the overall conference champion due to their depth, but the Stout swimmers stood up to the competition and did well.

Stout swimmer Wendy Heineke set conference records in two events. Heineke tied for first and the conference record in the 100 yard (yd) butterfly and she set her own record in the 100 freestyle event.

Coach John Miller said, "This was our best meet overall on the year." The Stout swimmers are peaking at the end of the season and Miller expects a strong showing from the 12 team members that are going to the national meet, March 4-7 at Schroeder Aquatics Center in Browndeer, Wisconsin.

The 12 national swimmers are, for the women;Cheryl DeBaker, Wendy Heineke, Jackie Gilbert, Lara Perkins, Laurie Potter, and Natalie Wicks. For the men; Stu Boese, Mike Carlson, Steve Kostrova, Mark Kukuzke, Kurt Seibert, and Bob O'Reilly.

The Stout women performed well at the conference meet. Wendy Heineke, besides her two conference records, placed 3rd in the 100yd backstroke, and 4th in the 200 individual medley.

Jackie Gilbert finished 6th in the 200yd freestyle, 9th in the 100 freestyle, and was 12th in the 500 freestyle.

Lara Perkins placed 7th in the 200yd individual medley, 8th in the 200 breaststroke, and 10th in the 100 breaststroke.

The Stout divers placed high in the 1 meter diving competition. Natalie Wicks placed 5th, Terri Peterson was 11th, and Lisa Bjerkelund was 12th.

In the womens relay competition, the team of Potter, Perkins, Heineke, and Gilbert placed 3rd in the 400yd freestyle and the same team was 4th in the 800 freestyle relay.

The realy team of DeBaker, Gilbert, Potter, and Kelly Shevcheck finished 4th in the 200yd freestyle event. In the 400 medley relay, Stout's team of DeBaker, Perkins, Heineke, and Gilbert placed 3rd overall.

The Stout men also turned in many fine performances. Steve Kostrova won the 100yd butterfly, was 2nd in the 200 butterfly, and was third in the 200 individual medley event.

Kostrova is the conference record holder in both the 100yd and 200 butterfly events, however, he did set any records at this years meet.

Stu Boese finished 8th in both the 200yd individual medley and the 200 breaststroke events. Boese also finished 10th in the 100 butterfly.

Mark Kukuzke placed 4th in the 1650yd freestyle, 7th in the 500 freestyle, and 15th in the 200 freestyle.

Kurt Seibert finished 11th in the 50yd freestyle, only 0.95 second behind the winner. Seibert finished 12th in the 100 freestyle, 1.95 seconds off of the winning pace.

Bob O'Reilly finished 9th in the 1650yd freestyle, 13th in the 100 breaststroke, and 15th in the 500 freestlye.

Mike Carlson finished 9th in the 100yd butterfly, and was 11th in the 500 freestyle. Tony Hauser finished 11th in the 1650 freestyle, and 13th in the 100 backstroke.

In the mens relay competition, the team of Kostrova, Boese, Kukuzke, and Seibert finished 4th in the 400yd freestyle, and were also 4th in the 400 medley relay. In the 800 freestyle relay, the team of Kostrova, O'Reilly, Boese, and Kukuzke were also 4th.

Wrapping up for the men, Erik Peterson finished 14th in the 100yd breaststroke. Steve Kosch finished 15th in the 100 backstroke. Jim Kalweit finished 16th in the 200 breaststroke.

Pig out

Cosmas A. Whitten

In last week's issue of The Stoutonia there was an ad announcing March 1 as National Pig Day. Who on this campus could be more qualified as a pig than an athlete? Have you ever seen a hungry athlete in action? Talk about pigging out.

Three meals a day are not enough for athletes. Try five. Many athletes complain about the high costs of eating. Besides the cost of food there is the cost of dishwashing soap to clean the many plates that athletes dirty.

An electric or gas bill is usually high due to the fact that the oven or microwave is always running in order to keep the food coming.

With the high utensil use that an athlete has, there is usually a need to replace food eating and preparation supplies more often than the average eater.

An athlete is usually more of a fast food patron than a non-athlete. Due to the fact that schedules are busier and the need for food is so intense that the cooking time would seem too long, athletes go for fast food.

I remember going to an all-you-can-eat deal with a couple of friends. I was surprised when I noticed that a football player stopped eating after only five trips. I asked him if he was feeling alright. He said he had already eaten a whole pizza at home.

Even those tiny gymnasts are pigs. I know — I've seen them in action. They have amazed many waiters. Gymnasts even have a special award that goes out to the biggest eater. They refer to this as the Queen Rita Crown.

The Queen Rita Crown is awarded to only one gymnast a year based on her overall eating ability throughout the season.

This year's Queen Rita will probably be the gymnast that uses a salad plate at the ice cream bar instead of the given dish. She claims it doesn't hold enough. She still goes back for seconds anyway.

I heard a story from the reigning Queen Rita. She said eating a lot all began at a young age. One memorable incident was when her family was going out for dinner. She was upstairs putting on a baggy dress that allowed room for stomach expansion.

While getting ready for dinner, Queen Rita's mother called her down to the kitchen. She had prepared a big hamburger with the works for her piggy daughter. "I thought we were going out for dinner," said the daughter.

Her mother replied, "We are, but if you eat this now, then you won't cost us as much."

Grapplers' road to nationals begins with regional tourney in Oshkosh

by Tim Nichols

The UW-Stout wrestling team is preparing to do battle in the NCAA Division III Regional Tournament to be held in Oshkosh on Friday, Feb. 27. The tournament marks the beginning of each wrestler's long road to possible All-American honors or even a national championship.

The champions from each weight class will automatically qualify for the NCAA Division III National Tournament to be held in Buffalo, New York on March 5-7. Grapplers not gaining championships can qualify by being selected as one of the two wildcard entries from the regional.

Competing against the Blue Devils in the tourney will be UW-Whitewater, UW-Platteville, UW-Oshkosh and two schools from California. Whitewater and Platteville finished first and third, respectively, in the WSUC tournament.

Blue Devil Senior Keith Rusch is ranked second in the 118-lb. class for the tournament. This season Rusch has compiled a 10-7 record and placed third in the WSUC tournament.

Wayne Hendrickson is ranked first at 167. Hendrickson's impressive list of performances this year include a first place finish in the River Falls Open and a second place finish in the WSUC tourney.

Blue Devils Kevin Burbach and Anthony Brown are ranked fourth in the 134- and 142-lb. categories, respectively. Steve Smith, who captured second place in the Cornell Invitational, is seeded third at 177 while Larry Grein is also ranked third in the 190-lb class.

Here is the probable Blue Devil lineup:

Athlete of the week: Luther Forrest

by Darron Vanman

Name: Luther Forrest
Sport: Men's Basketball
Year: Sophomore
Major: Vocational Rehabilitation
Previous accomplishments: 20-point scoring average in high school
Coach: Dwain Mintz
Athlete's statistics: On Feb. 14 Forrest scored 42 points against Oshkosh. Stout lost in the game in overtime, 111-110. The sixth man, Forrest, tied the school record.

Six of Forrest's 42 points were added in the overtime so the 1968 record held by Bill Heideman of 42 points in regulation still stands.

On Feb. 13 Forrest also took scoring honors with Senior Tom Gomolak with 18 points against Stevens Point. Luther Forrest's two quality performances earned him The Stoutonia's athlete of the week.

Coach's comments: "Forrest is quickly turning into the John Havlichek (the Boston Celtic's greatest sixth man ever) of Stout," Coach Mintz said.

"Luther had been spotty, but he has been more consistent in his execution and timing since the game against Stevens Point (Feb. 13)," he said.

"We lost our poise against Oshkosh and Luther was able to stay with them. He really kept us in the game," Mintz added.

Coach Mintz summed up Forrest's play: "He is turning into a strong, stable force. He isn't getting flustered as much, and his attitude is really good at practices and games."

Athlete's history: Luther Forrest has been playing basketball since he was in the fifth grade. Forrest shared his feelings about the game saying, "It's fun. I like the game, and I love to win."

Forrest, who is only a sophomore, was recruited heavily by Stout. Forrest's high school coach wished Coach Mintz luck with his new player's ball handling. But as Mintz said, "He should be a full-fledged guard by next year."

Forrest picked Stout for its fine vocational rehabilitation program. It must be good since Forrest comes all the way from Kentucky. Forrest wants to become a counselor for athletes at the Division I or NBA level.

"I know how much stress there is from basketball. I think I could help educate players from my basketball experience," Forrest said.

Forrest said he was well-rested and felt relaxed in his record-tying game. "I was in the groove with the team concept. Some times you can play off the bench and other times you can't."

As for his team, Forrest said, "My team is like a family. And every family has their problems. There's a lot of confidence in our team. We pick each other up."

Gymnasts achieve their goals, finish third at conference

by Cosmas A. Whitten

This weekend the UW-Stout gymnastics team travelled to UW-La Crosse for the WWIAC Conference Meet. Stout gymnasts had their eyes set on thrid place and they achieved their goal with a score of 124.90.

"In the preseason rankings we were barely mentioned. Third place made up for that oversight," Head Coach John Zuerlien said.

UW-Oshkosh took first place with 135.75 points, followed by La Crosse with 130.20. Placing under Stout was tough competitor UW-River Falls with 123.50 points.

Fifth place went to UW-Superior with 117.45 points, followed by UW-Whitewater's score of 113.40. The final team was UW-Eau Claire with 110.10 points.

Gymnasts started the meet on the floor exercise and tumbled their way to second place on this event. Leading for Stout was Senior Cosmas Whitten with a score of 8.6 to take third place in the event.

Sophomore Patti Roenitz and Freshman Kelly Kramer both scored 8.35 to tie for fifth place in the event. Freshman Michelle Scott turned in her personal best score of 8.2 and placed eleventh in the event.

The next event for the gymnasts was vault. Scores were harder to earn as compared to other meets. Patti Roenitz took fifth place with an 8.4 followed by Sophomore Carolyn Bjerke with an 8.2 which placed her number 17.

All of the gymnasts hit their bar routines. Again Roentiz placed, scoring an 8.4 to take sixth place. Senior Tammy Dennis hit her best routine ever but only scored a 7.45. Even after Coach Zuerlein protested the low score, it still wasn't changed.

"We were after River Falls and knew we could pull it off. Beam was our last event. It has stopped many teams but not ours. Everyone did their job. We hit beam and clinched third place," Zuerlein said.

Three of six performers stayed on the beam. Leading for Stout in no fall routines was Patti Roenitz who took first in the meet on this event with a score of 8.65, tying her previously-set school record.

Freshman Jodi Schaefer stayed on the beam and scored a 7.35 to place eleventh. Michelle Scott scored a 7.2 while Carolyn Bjerke scored a 7.15 for her no fall routine.

"Our team is a good mix. They support each other, give each other confidence and inspire each other. If one of them stumbles, someone picks them up. It's a very secure feeling to know this will always happen," Zuerlein said.

Patti Roenitz took second place in the all-around competition with a score of 33.80. Roenitz placed in every event.

"I was very surprised that I hit all my routines. It was a good feeling that I hit at the right meet," Roenitz said.

Making the All-Conference Team and NAIA District 14 Team were Patti Roenitz and Cosmas Whitten.

Roenitz and Whitten travel to Bryn Manr, Pennsylvania, this weekend for the NCGA National Gymnastic Meet.

"As far as I was concerned, all eight of our competitors were heros. Patti [Roenitz], Cosmas [Whitten] and Kelly [Kramer] were more visible because they won medals. Just knowing they had the others to back them up gave them the confidence to go ahead and extend themselves. That's teamwork," Zuerlein said.

New intramural events to start soon

by Chris Riba

Stepped on the scale lately? Maybe you've put on a few extra pounds. Perhaps your school work is really getting you down. Intramurals could be perfect for loosing those extra pounds, taking out frustration or just having a good time.

The intramural department provides many activities for all types of athletes at all skill levels. The upcoming activities include the bench press tournament on Feb. 26, badminton tournament on Feb. 28 and innertube basketball (a new event this year) beginning March 17. Other activities coming up include whiffleball, softball, track, golf and the 10k run.

Current action includes the double elimination basketball and volleyball tournaments. As soon as the weather cooperates, the broomball tournament will continue with its tremendous, high-speed action, and some cold weather would help the hockey return to action.

Additions by the intramural department for earlier this year included mud volleyball and the archery tournament. The bench press tournament and innertube basketball are new events still to come.

"The completion of the new fieldhouse will enable us to create new events, and, as always, suggestions for new events are welcome," said Rob Clem of the intramural department.

One problem the program has is a lack of officials and referees. Officiating is a difficult job and can be made worse by the players' attitudes. An official starting their career at the intramural level is in for quite a workout, but if they can handle the pressure they develop into a good official.

"It's hard to take the criticism from your peers," Clem said, "but we give everyone that wants to try a chance, and we're always looking for people with officiating experience."

For more information on upcoming events or a chance at proving yourself as an official, call x-1392 or stop in at the intramural office located in the fieldhouse. They would be glad to help you.

cond half we fell under 50 percent on possessions but still played well enough to win."

"The key late in the second half was that the kids anticipated well on defense and knocked down some passes," Mintz said.

Fiery senior point guard Brian Ellingson was credited by Mintz as giving the team "some strong spiritual leadership in the game, despite the fact he hasn't been feeling well."

"Ellingson and Tom Gomolak have both been consistent and have played very well for us," Mintz added.

Gomolak and Ellingson led the Blue Devils' attack with 14 points each, followed by Seniors Ron Hunter with 13 points and Rick Wynveen with 10.

Scott Plondke led the Pioneers with a game high 16 points while Woods had 12.

The Blue Devils were to play the UW-Eau Claire Blugolds Wednesday night in the WSUC finale for both teams. A Stout victory would cost Eau Claire a WSUC title tie and would give Stevens Point the home court advantage throughout the District 14 playoffs.

Lady cagers lost last bid for a win with one-point loss to Platteville

by Paul Emerson

As much as you might hate to say it, or, in the case of the the UW-Stout women's basketball team, see it, "some things are just not meant to be." Such was the fate of the Lady Blue Devils Saturday afternoon as they dropped a hard-fought game to the UW-Platteville ladies by the narrowest of margins — one point, 69-68.

That loss, along with Friday night's 85-48 destruction by the UW-Whitewater Lady Warhawks, ended the Lady Blue Devils' season with a deceiving 0-16 mark in the WWIAC and 0-22 overall.

Platteville 69, Stout 68

After trailing by 3 in a close first half, 42-39, Stout at one time was up by as many as 6 points in the second half but couldn't close the door on the Platteville ladies.

"It was a close game all the way, but losing that six point lead in the second half hurt us the most," said women's Head Coach Lynda Lee.

The outcome of the game was up in the air until the final buzzer went off. Stout held a 68-67 lead with 25 seconds left and, after a time-out by Lee, Renee Kasten was fouled in the backcourt.

The apparent intentional foul, which would have given Kasten two automatic free throw attempts, was ruled unintentional but still gave Kasten the bonus one-and-one opportunity.

Kasten then missed on the first attempt. Platteville grabbed the rebound, took the ball down court and scored a basket with ten ticks left on the clock to take a 69-68 lead.

Stout took the ball in, but before Lee could get a time-out, a scramble for the ball ran six more seconds off the clock. A jump ball call finally stopped play.

The Lady Blue Devils got the ball on the possession rule and immediately called time-out. Because of a set inbounds play that didn't quite work as well as it should have, point guard Lisa Blume was forced to take a bad shot.

Blume missed the shot, but with just 2 seconds left Freshman Jacki Gilbert grabbed the rebound and was hacked as the buzzer went off. No foul was called on the play, however.

Sophomore Suzi Krank led the way for Stout with 19 points, followed by Kasten with 11 (and a game high 21 rebounds) and Gilbert with 10.

Laura Finnegan took game high scoring honors with 23 points to lead Platteville, while Kris Jacobsen had 16 points.

Although Stout had two more field goals in the game than Platteville, free throws told the story as the Pioneer ladies connected on 17 of 26 from the line, while the Lady Blue Devils hit on just 12 of 24 tosses.

Whitewater 85, Stout 48

"We stayed with them early in the first half, but they are a very tough team," Lee said. Stout trailed by just 9 points at the half, 35-26, but Whitewater hit on 60 percent of their shots in the second half, while Stout went cold and shot just 26 percent in the same span.

Renee Kasten was the only Lady Blue Devil to hit for double figures with 18 points, while Lisa Blume had 8 points and Justine Becker and Patti Cook had 5 each.

Whitewater's Jolie Kreuser took game scoring honors with 19 points. Karen Vogts added 14 points for the Lady Warhawks.

Looking back on the Platteville game, Lee praised the play of several Lady Blue Devils. "Lisa Blume probably played her best game of the season. She was a little spark plug," Lee said.

"Our three wings, Patti Cook, Justine Becker, and Suzi Krank, all did a really good job when they were in there," added Lee, "and Jacki Gilbert played her best game of the year."

"This was a much better game than the last time we played them," Lee said, "and an exciting game to end the season with on Parents' Weekend."

THE STOUTONIA

Thursday, Mar. 5, 1987 | University of Wisconsin - Stout | Volume 77, Number 20

Amended budget passed by Senate

by Gretchen Eke

After much deliberation, the motion to approve amended budget allocations was passed by the Stout Student Association (SSA) senators on a roll-call vote; 18 for, six against, and one abstention.

Before the budget could be voted on at Tuesday's meeting, however, SSA President Paul Nelson said that a stipulation must be passed requiring that the constitutions of organizations' be in compliance with his interpretation of UW-System policies.

The policies referred to by Nelson state that organizations which require enrollment for academic credits could not be funded.

The budget was passed with this stipulation.

As a result, University Band will have to change its constitution to allow people to be in band without actually taking the class.

Representatives from the Stout bands, Forensics, Students Understanding Drinking Sensibly (SUDS), Cinema Commission, and Amnesty International were present to voice concern about proposed cuts in their funding requests.

A motion was made by Senator Tom Aumann to reduce Cinema Commission and SUDS funding and distribute the money to band and Forensics.

The original recommendation proposed that the band's budget be reduced over $1100 from last year, despite an enrollment increase from 65 to 100 this year.

Forensics was to be cut over $1500 from last year. According to Mike Nicolai, Forensics advisor, this money would cut into their meal allowances for tournament travel.

Aumann's motion stated that the Cinema Commission had experienced a decrease in attendance and that SUDS had shown ineffective use of funds.

> "I'm in favor of giving money to Forensics, but..."
> —Wes Stead

MaryBeth Kirby, spokesperson for Cinema, listed a succession of reductions that the organization has been given in the past few years.

"When you reduce the amount of money for movies," said Kirby, "the number of people who go to them will be reduced."

"The $800 would be taken out of our rec nights," Jeff Bayrenbruch, a SUDS representative said.

Bayrenbruch pointed out that these SUDS programs provide alternatives for those students who "can't go uptown."

The motion to take money from Cinema and SUDS to give to the band failed in a roll-call vote.

Later, a motion passed allocating $500 to the band budget from the segregated fee reserve.

A motion was moved by Angela Bias, off-campus senator, to cut all of the $500 proposed for the Rainbow organization and give it to Forensics.

"I'm in favor of giving money to Forensics," Administrative Assistant Wes Stead said, "but it should not be done at the expense of this small organization."

The motion passed and was followed by a motion, seconded by Bias, taking the $500 from the segregated fee reserve and restoring Rainbow's budget.

Henry Oboh moved to include funding for Amnesty International.

The motion was ruled out of order by the president because of a UW-system law that says that partisan organizations can not recieve funding.

According to Nelson, the Democratic and the Republican parties take opposing views in regard to the death penalty, making it a partisan issue.

Although the motion had been ruled out of order, discussion of the motion ensued.

"Just because the central office has taken a stand on it, doesn't mean Stout's chapter has," Tracy Zimdars, spokesperson for Amnesty International, said.

"Our chapter has not taken a stand on it," Zimdars added.

The final budget passed with two amendments; Stout band and Forensics were each allocated $500 more than previously recommended.

Senator Oboh and Minority Affairs Senator Adesola Adisa said after the meeting that they "totally disagree" with the final budget.

Neubauer receives six-month term plus fine for death of Stout student

by Masha Roberts

A former Menomonie man, Michael D. Neubauer, now living in Crosby, Texas, was given a six-month jail term when he was sentenced in Dunn County Circuit Court on Friday, Feb 12 for the death of a UW-Stout Nigerian student in 1982.

Neubauer, 27, was convicted of homicide by negligent use of a motor vehicle, last December. In June 1982, he ran over a Nigerian student Sani Tela, who was lying in the alley behind the Den Bar in Menomonie.

Sentencing was withheld providing Neubauer meets certain conditions imposed by Circuit Court Judge James Wendland.

He must serve six months in the Dunn County jail and serve three years probation. He must also pay $21,300.05 in fines and court costs, with interest added if it is not paid within 90 days.

"I feel extremely disappointed after hearing the outcome of the case," said Yakub L. Umoru, president of International Relations Club.

Umoru said he felt this way not only because the verdict was unjust but also because only whites were on the jury.

"I feel that the jury's decision would have probably been different in favor of Tela, if there were other nationalities present," said Umoru.

Judge Wendland stated that Neubauer could serve the first 30 days of the first three month period in an inpatient alcohol and drug abuse treatment center.

He could also have work release privileges during the second three Nearly 50,000 riot police clashed with demonstrators Tuesday in the streets of Seoul, Korea.

Similar violence was reported in six other cities during the "Grand Peace Marches for Anti-Torture and Democratization" which marked the 49th day after the death of a dissident student.

Seoul National University student Park Chong Chul, 21, died during an interrogation which included water torture.

Job protection for the contagious

Although the Reagan administration had argued that an employee could fire a worker because of fear the employee might spread disease, the Supreme Court voted 7-2 on Tuesday to protect the jobs of persons feared to have communicable diseases.

Justice William J. Brennan said, "It would be unfair to allow an employer to seize upon the distinction between the effects of a disease on others and (its) effects...on a patient and use that distinction to justify discriminatory treatment."

Abortion death investigated

Criminal charges have been recommended by Illinois State Department of Registration and Education investigators in the case of a woman who bled to death after an abortion.

Sylvia Moore, 18, died on New Year's Eve after an abortion was performed by Arnold Bickham, according to Glen D. Crick, director of enforcement.

"Any time a death results from what should be a fairly routine procedure," said Crick, "we take a very close look at the situation."

Lottery fight expected

Assembly Speaker Thomas A. Loftus said Tuesday that there will be "one hell of a fight" over who will sell lottery tickets if voters approve a state lottery in next month's election.

Speaking to the Wisconsin State Telephone Association, Loftus said that it could take two years for the Legislature to finalize implementation of the lottery if the voters authorize the idea.

Stout student excels in Pan-African Pageant

by Steven Lemire

Daphne Brown, a UW-Stout student who describes herself as having a strong and positive outlook on life with an intense commitment to improving the black persons' standing in the world community, has returned as first runner-up in the Ms. Pan-African Pageant.

Brown, a student in the Hotel and Restaurant Management program, spent the weekend of Feb. 19-21 attending the 11th Annual Pan-African Conference in Mankato, Minnesota, where she also participated in the pageant.

"When we use the word Pan-African, we mean the black race on a global basis," Brown explained.

"The purpose of the conference is to unify Pan-Africans," said Brown, "to discuss issues that affect our past, present and future."

"There is also a pageant to emphasize and acknowledge the inner beauty, variety and existence of the black man and woman on the Pan-African level," Brown said.

Brown was the first-runner up in the Mr. and Ms. Pan-African Pageant, which was part of the conference.

"We were judged on poise, talent and the results of our personal interview with the judges," Brown explained.

"I feel privileged to have taken part in such a positive and unforgettable experience," she said.

"Unfortunately, there was such a wide variety of topics to address that there was no way for one person to attend every committee discussion," said Brown.

Brown participated in the many discussions that were most relevant to her.

> "I feel privileged to have taken part in such a positive... experience
> —Daphne Brown

In two separate committees, the problem of the isolation of black men and women on predominantly white campuses was raised.

Possible causes discussed at the meetings were that blacks live a self-imposed exile from other students or that isolation of blacks from others is built into the institution itself.

What ever the cause, Brown said the committee discussions pointed at racism and ignorance as playing a major role in perpetuating the problem.

"The problem is especially hard for women because there are so few of us," said Brown. "We are like little islands, possibly with a sense of our cultural identity being lost."

"Think about it, you see black men dating white women," Brown asked, "but how many white men date black women. Or the last time you had to choose a study group in class, did you ask a black or minority student to join in?"

"White students have to take it on themselves to acknowledge the black and minority students," Brown stated. "This can be very scary because it is entering into unknown territory, but put yourself in our place."

Another panel issue that is very important to Brown is adoption or foster care of black children who are being raised in white homes.

"There are not enough black families to take these children," Brown said, "and they are being raised without knowing their own cultural history."

Other issues discussed by conference panels were chemical abuse in the black community and limited access to community services.

"Racism is alive and well today," Brown said. "We haven't come that far since the days of Dr. Martin Luther King."

Legal codes pose many restrictions on house parties

by Judy Weitzer

The busting up of house parties has produced a stir among students, who tend to share the opinion that authorities and others are against having fun, but tavern owners and non-student citizens of Menomonie say that is not the case.

Many of the non-student citizens who hold the opinion that house parties are bothersome are graduates of Stout or have children in college. They realize parties are a major part of college social life.

"To get to know people, you're going to go to parties," said Bill Josephson, owner of the Flame.

Josephson acknowledged that having a few drinks is one way of releasing some inhibitions.

The issue, as viewed by tavern owners like Josephson, is the fact that the parties exist strictly to make a profit. Many of the proceeds go toward the hosts' utility bills or rent, Josephson pointed out.

"When it comes to making money, what's good for us should be good for everybody," commented Gary P. Buckley, owner of the Log Jam.

Buckley said that house occupants who sponsor parties should be required to comply with the same legal restrictions imposed upon bar owners.

These restrictions include obtaining valid licenses, insurance and a licensed bartender. Josephson said he pays $654 a year for his tavern license plus another $100 for a "cabaret" or dancing license.

> "To get to know people, you're going to go to parties.
> —Bill Josephson

Legal restrictions also involve compliance with state and city building codes. One code included in the Menomonie ordinances regulates the maximum capacity of a structure.

Capacity is calculated by dividing the total area in square feet by 10.

In arriving at this calculation, dance areas, rest rooms, aisles, halls, stairways, game tables and rooms and areas not frequented by the public are not calculated in the total area.

Other codes deal with the appropriate number and width of exits, the minimum number of rest rooms that must be provided and other fire and sanitation regulations.

Tavern owners must also pay state sales tax on all proceeds.

"If people want to deal with that, it's fine with me," said Buckley.

Another problem tavern owners face is underage drinkers trying to get into their establishments.

"Since the drinking age was raised from eighteen to twenty-one, checking ID's and dealing with minors has been the toughest part of the bar business," Buckley added.

If authorities catch an underage drinker in a bar, the owner is subject to an automatic $500 fine and the bar is closed down for seven days, Buckley said.

At house parties, when a minor is caught drinking, a citation is issued to the minor for violating the minimum drinking age law.

The host can be given a citation for selling without a license or for adult furnishing alcohol, as either a state law violation or a violation of city codes.

"We are not against students having social parties, which may include alcohol," said John Jax, assistant dean of the Library Learning Center and long-time resident of Menomonie.

However, Jax and other citizens feel that "neighborhood taverns," are incompatible with residential living.

Jax said that he thought Stout students have been unfairly singled out as being responsible for these parties.

"These parties often cause parking problems," Jax said. He also said that on several occasions he has come home late at night to find cars parked in his driveway.

> "Most of the students are... respectful of neighbors' rights.
> —Don Dickman

One concern of authorities, according to Jax, is that at house parties, unlike bars, there is no one to tell a participant when they have had enough to drink.

Problems of intoxication leading to irrational behavior or vandalism are a common occurrence, Jax said, resulting in broken fences, broken windshields, rocks thrown through windows and the removal of shrubbery by the roots.

Jax cited an incident where his 87-year-old neighbor's garden was destroyed by a four-wheel drive truck.

"He came to me in tears," Jax said.

Noise is also a constant problem, Jax said.

Menomonie city ordinances contain a general statement that prohibits any occupant of a building to allow excessive noise which disturbs the comfort of persons in the vicinity. The first violation of this regulation is grounds for a $125 bond; the second, a $250 bond; the third, a $355 bond.

"The bottom line is to have respect for each other," said Don Dickmann, biology professor at Stout and chairman of the East Central Neighborhood Association (ECNA), a group organized to resolve neighborhood concerns.

"Many of us live next door to off-campus students," Dickmann said.

"Most of the students," Dickman added, "are hardworking, courteous, respectful of neighbor's rights but we will not tolerate the activities of the spoilers. That is why our ECNA supports the city council and the city police force."

"If a large party is desired, there are places in zoned commercial districts to rent, where a temporary license can be obtained," said Jax.

Stout students relate their experiences after graduation

by Masha Roberts

Menomonie is the hometown of several recent graduates from UW-Stout.

"Being a Stout graduate makes me proud," said Jean Feyen, December graduate from the school of industrial technology.

Feyen said that she felt that Stout ranks high in job placement, and that she was able to interact and get to know a lot of people better for having been a student at the university.

Feyen has been sending out letters of application and attending interviews since she graduated in December, 1986.

One thing Feyen did not anticipate is the amount of hours she has to put in looking for a job.

"I have submitted approximately 80 letters of application already, and with only several second interviews," Feyen said with resignation.

Rita Pitman, another December graduate from the university who recently completed a degree in early childhood education, is presently working as a graduate assistant in the Child and Family Center at Stout.

Pitman said that she feels there is no big difference in her life now that she has become a graduate of Stout because she has been living here all her life.

Pitman plans to stay in Menomonie, since small towns appeal to her more than large cities.

Unlike Pitman, Feyen said, "I am prepared to move almost anywhere in order to find the appropriate job to suit my qualifications."

Jean Feyen

Feyer believes that a certain amount of tension does exist between the Menomonie community and Stout students. She said that she feels that the only way things can be improved is if the students get to know the public better or vice versa.

Pitman, on the other hand, said that because she never interacted much with Stout students, she failed to recognize much tension between the Menomonie public and the Stout students.

Ken Olson, another December graduate in technology education, said, "Stout has good instructors, but the styles of teaching are outdated, especially with the new technology era."

He said that he felt that Stout lacked in informing him about how to become a teacher of high school students.

"Being a Stout graduate doesn't have too much of an impact on me," said Olson, "for I am a very simple person."

Olson said that he still keeps in touch with his instructors and the placement office at Stout.

Olson is working as an electrician in Menomonie, but he said that he is prepared to move elsewhere to find another job, if necessary.

"I believe that Stout tried very hard to prepare the students as much as possible for the real world," said Pitman. She is satisfied with the experience she gained in her area while at Stout.

Suicide figures released, overdose treatment outlined

by Tracy Lea Landis

There have been two suicides, eight suicide attempts and one reported suicide threat among UW-Stout students since the 1986-87 school year began, according to reports of Protective Services and the Dunn County Health Care Center Psychiatric Unit.

Seven of the suicide attempts were made by female students. The two completed suicides were committed by males using firearms.

Deliberately overdosing, mostly on non-prescription drugs, was the method used by six of those students who reportedly attempted suicide. The other two were a verbal threat and a threat to jump.

When someone who is believed to have overdosed is brought to the emergency room at Myrtle Wirth Hospital, an attempt is made to find out what drug has been taken, said Sherry Dahl, the head nurse at the emergency room.

"If they're conscious, we could give them ipecac," Dahl said. Ipecac is given to induce vomiting and cause the expulsion of the contents of the stomach, she explained.

This is followed by the ingestion of activated charcoal.

"They have to drink it," Dahl said.

If the person is unconscious, Dahl said that a nasal gastric tube would be used.

"This is a tube that is inserted through the nose into the stomach and hooked up to a direct suction to get the contents out," Dahl explained.

Dahl said that in cases where a narcotic drug has been ingested, there is a new drug available which reverses the narcotic reaction.

The officers involved with the discovery of a person believed to have overdosed deliberately transfer that person to the Dunn County Health Care Center Psychiatric Unit for a period of observation, according to Roger Uecker, program coordinator for the unit.

"If there had been a suicide attempt, the person can be detained for a period of observation up to 72 hours," Uecker said.

A psychiatrist is called in to make an assessment of patients, Uecker said, and determine whether they are still a danger to themselves.

A report is then made to the district attorney to determine whether continued hospitalization is necessary or what other services might be employed.

Tourists flock to Las Vegas - the entertainment capital of the world

by John Pelishek

Las Vegas, sin city, city of lost wages, town of tack and glitter or where fortunes are created and lost. You name it, it is the entertainment capital of the world.

Las Vegas, a desert valley between mountains, was an area originally settled in the mid-1800's by a few miners who did some gambling there, which was later legalized within the boundaries of the municipality.

These days, tourists from all over, many in the middle-aged to senior citizen rank, flock to this desert oasis, often for just a few days. They come here to see famous stars perform, and to gamble, eat and drink well in a city that is awake 24 hours a day.

Tom Anderson, a former Stout student now working at a famous restaurant in Vegas, said "One thing about Las Vegas is everyone comes here to have a good time."

Stars from all over perform in Vegas daily at the many hotel casinos, and for hefty fees.

Liberace, who just passed away was one of the main attractions in Vegas, as well as the highest paid performer, with an average of $400,000 per week in pay.

Wayne Newton, a year-round resident and main attraction in Vegas, has his own casino and hotel and averages $2.5 million for twelve weeks of work.

The casinos and hotels in Vegas lose money on performances, but make it up by gambling, which grossed roughly $240 billion last year.

The last Super Bowl alone took in an astonishing $2.4 billion in placed bets.

There were dozens of bets you could have made; for example, which quarterback throws the most passes or gets sacked first, the team that fumbles or scores first in the second half and so on.

Slot machines come in a range of sizes, from ones that take a penny to operate, to one that requires a one hundred dollar investment to try.

The slots account for over half the money taken in on gambling. They can be found everywhere in Las Vegas, including food stores, bars and restaurants.

Glen Krebs, one of last year's graduates from Stout who is working as a sales representative in Vegas, said "Living in Vegas is enjoyable, but challenging. You learn not to gamble and you avoid the strip."

The "strip" is the main drag through the casino district.

Residents in Las Vegas avoid the strip and the action unless they are visited by relatives. It is the type of town where the fun thing to do is go see a movie, otherwise.

Food and drink in the city are very reasonable. Steak dinners at the Fremont Hotel for $2, and 50 cent giant shrimp cocktails.

Shows are reasonably priced and abundant, with performances daily. For example, at the Sands you can see Jimmie Walker and other comic acts for only $10. Shows everywhere include two free drinks.

The city of Las Vegas prides itself on its number-one ranked college basketball team which features, at its pre-game introductions at home, the world's only indoor fireworks.

Great job opportunities in "Chicago Tribune"

by Karen Smith

The Chicago Tribune, one of the top five newspaper publications in the country, has many job opportunities for students attending UW-Stout.

The Tribune, which currently employs four graduates of Stout, sent three employees here last week to speak on the career opportunities they offer and the operation of their publication.

Octavia Harriston, employment and EEO manager at the Tribune, spoke highly of their company.

"The trib is very dynamic and fast growing, with many different job opportunities," Harriston said. "We are after employing the best people and keeping them with us."

Within the company, there are nine different departments, each of which holds many different job opportunities for students.

"We are a company with many departments, each one important," Harriston said. "Without one, the whole ship would sink."

One of the speakers, Gail Switalski, a recent graduate of Stout and supervisor of production operation systems, spoke on operations of the Tribune.

The Freedom Center, a two million dollar investment, is considered the world's largest offset printing facility. The Tribune circulates 775,000 copies from the building daily.

The Tribune also uses satellites, located in three areas in the Midwest, to receive information and send it to the Freedom Center to be used in the publication.

The paper is expected to continue to grow rapidly in the future, according to the speakers.

"We are dynamic and fast growing," Switalski said. "We are all a very diverse group, working in tune with getting the job done."

"We feel we are the best," Switalski continued. "Not only as a newspaper, but also as a business."

Some of the areas where students may find a career opportunity would be advertising, marketing, editorial, circulation, operations, information systems, finance, and employee relations.

Students were urged to come and tour the facilities, which the company representatives said have to be seen in order to appreciate all of the opportunities they offer and their advanced technology.

"We do not want to compete with other nationally known papers," Harriston said. "We each have our own specialty, and we are proud of ours."

"Our goal is to stay a step ahead of the times," Harriston added.

Aid Find

Letters are being mailed to college campus newspapers to inform them of a toll-free telephone number that college freshmen and sophomores can call to help them find financial aid.

The number, 1-800-AID-FIND, belongs to Student Aid Finders, a nationwide scholarship matching service, based in Boston.

This company claims to have computer-access to more than 4 billion dollars in student aid source.

"Practically all students can and do qualify for student aid, regardless of academic achievement or financial need," said Ann Hemphill, vice president of the firm.

"The real problem," added Hemphill, "is where to find it. That's why over 100 million dollars in student aid goes unclaimed every year. Most people, including good guidance counselors, just don't know where to find the thousands of grants, scholarships, awards - much of which is free — that go begging each year."

Hemphill's service, which costs $39, guarantees to find any student a minimum of five, and as many as 25, student aid sources based on information the student supplies on a data form.

The service then searches through its computers and matches the information to the specific student aid for which the student qualifies.

Within three to four weeks, the student receives a computer readout of the matching sources, complete with addresses, contacts and requirements.

"Plus," said Hemphill, "if we don't find a minimum of five sources, we refund the required fee and give the student whatever sources we do find at no charge."

Heavy load

Full-time faculty at UW-Stout carry the heaviest group course work load of all UW-System faculty, according to an analysis of teaching loads reported by system administration.

A report comparing the load carried by instructors said that ranked faculty members at Stout taught an average of 4.4 group classes in the fall semester of 1985.

Group classes include lecture courses, labs and seminar courses.

Instructors at UW-Madison were reported at that time to have the lightest load, with only 2.1 group classes being taught by ranked faculty during that semester.

A comparison of total courses taught ranks Stout faculty with a heavy load, but not the heaviest.

When independent courses, fieldwork and thesis supervision are counted, only UW-Whitewater, with 12.3 courses per teacher, and UW-Superior with 10.6, outrank Stout as the campuses with the heaviest workload for their faculty.

Library hours

The Library Learning Center will have reduced hours over Spring Break.

On Friday, the last day of classes before break, the library will close earlier than usual. The library opens on that day at its regular time of 7:45 a.m., but will close early at 5 p.m.

The facility will then be closed all day Saturday and Sunday.

From Monday through Friday, the week of March 9 through 13, the library will close six hours earlier than it usually does. The building will be open from 7:45 a.m. until 5 p.m. and then closed again all day Saturday.

On Sunday, March 15, the library will open at 7 p.m., rather than the usual 1 p.m. The building will be open for four hours that evening, from 7 p.m. to 11 p.m.

Basic hours will then resume, beginning on Monday, March 16, the first day of class.

month period for educational purposes.

Psychiatrist Dr. James P. Grigson, who examined Neubauer twice late last year and determined that he was able to stand trial, said that he was sure Neubauer felt remorseful about the accident.

Umoru believed that Tela's was the life of a human being, something that is not meant to be played around with, regardless of what nationality they are.

Grigson said that he felt Neubauer is not the criminal type and being imprisoned would not rehabilitate him.

When Neubauer was given an opportunity to speak in court on the day of his sentencing, he said that if he could undo what happened he would, for he felt terrible about the incident.

Nevertheless, Umoru said, "I feel the intention for harm was there."

According to witnesses, Umoru continued, both Tela and Neubauer were in the pub at the time, when Neubauer stuck a lit cigarette on Tela's nose.

"Just by that action alone, I think that the intention of harming Tela was evident," Umoru said.

Voters beware

There is no better time to judge the logic and vindictiveness of people who will soon be candidates for office in our student government than during the annual budget process.

Approving the budgets of funded organizations by the Stout Student Association (SSA) is the most important function of the group.

Behavior on the senate floor, revealed in the minutes of Tuesday's meeting, will cause SSA observers to wonder whether any of the participants practice logic or whether their vindictiveness has bounds.

The senators make the final SSA approval of budget amounts. Yet, at Tuesday's meeting, where the budgets for funded groups were decided for the next school year, several executive board members suggested that the senators were not free to amend the recommendations of the Financial Affairs Committee.

It is amazing how effective the claim of an executive officer seems in nearly convincing senators that they could not do what their constitution clearly mandates they do. One wonders if they reviewed the constitution before these proceedings began.

The senators allowed SSA executives to put them in a bind because although money was set aside in the segregated fee reserve, where budget amendments are usually drawn, most of that fund was declared already spent on Bash in the Grass.

One of the best questions to ask any senator running for executive office is how, exactly, that decision was made.

Only two senators were gutsy enough to challenge the seriously flawed logic of the SSA president at Tuesday's meeting, when he said that because Amnesty International (AI) is against the death penalty and the Democratic platform is against the death penalty, then AI is a partisan group.

Apparently, an obvious fallacy goes over most of the senators' heads.

In the flurry of amendments offered by senators attempting to take money from the budgets of their least favorite groups, no one suggested tapping the coffers of the cooperative programming fund. These are the same senators who approved the trial program, Cooperative Programming, as a permanent fund without analyzing if the program could be effectively applied.

Members of all funded organizations should get a copy of the minutes from last Tuesday's SSA meeting and study the actions by those who are running for executive office. Judging by this senate, it looks like anything they say to the senators next year might be believed.

Perma Soft Shampoo, or is it "sham"-poo? I had this feeling that shampoos were all exactly the same, only the name was changed to dupe the innocent.

Like most science fiction columnists, I know less about science, particularly chemistry, than I know about Samuel Beckett. For instance, I don't know what PPG-30 Cetyl Ether is, but I know it is in Finesse Shampoo, along with this substance: Methylcholroisothiazolinone. You can look that one up in your Funk & Wagnall's.

Chemically, there seems to be only a handful of unpronounceable ingredients common to most shampoos. I have no idea how the corporate chemists decide which ones to use. I have a pretty good idea how they choose the color dyes to add however.

Halsa, Swedish Botanical Formula from predominantly Danish Racine, Wisconsin and S.C. Johnson and Sons has a product for red-haired people and dogs, one for blondes, bleached or otherwise, one for dark-haired do's, and one for light brown wigs.

Except for one different ingredient in each - ginger, walnut leaves, chamomile or marigold juice - the only other difference is in the dye numbers. I think that we are "advertisedly" hypnotized into believing that the shampoos that are dye-mixed for our hair color work better.

I use the Walnut shampoo and I am convinced that it works better than the Marigold. Don't ask me why.

Dimension Shampoo has some ingredients for humor value. SD Alcohol 40, (which is named after the boozer basketball team, the San Diego Alcohols.) It also has corn syrup, which was in no other shampoo I looked at. It also has Carbomer 940, from the Lebanese shampoo used by terrorists, "Carbomber."

A good bit of the on-product advertising sets up the special benefits of the chemicals inside. Vidal Sassoon "restores hair's natural moisture balance." I have to wonder what upset the balance in the first place. Could it be shampoo?

Affinity Shampoo answered the question: "brings back the fullness time has taken away." Oh, it was just a matter of time. Right. After the Affinity dyes on the ingredient list, there is this cryptic item: "Other ingredients."

Medicated dandruff shampoos might be the biggest sham in the poo biz. Neutrogena T-Gel, which costs 88 cents per ounce, or ten times what White Rain costs, has Neutar Solubilized Coal Tar Extract, two percent "in a bland shampoo base."

Denorex has nine percent coal tar solution, and costs about 15 cents an ounce less than T-Gel. If it is the tar that costs more, how can this be? Or is the myth of supply and demand?

S.C. Johnson also makes L'Envie which is basically regular shampoo with Giorgio or Vanderbilt "inspired" perfume added. It has a disclaimer about not being in any way connected to Vanderbilt or Giorgio. It comes in a nice plastic bottle.

I finally found what I set out to discover or disprove. Some shampoos are exactly the same chemically and merely rely on advertising hypnosis to create a difference.

The best, (or worst) example is Proctor and Gambles' Ivory Shampoo. (P & G has the world's largest advertising budget). Ivory Shampoo for Oily, Normal and Fine Hair lists exactly the same ingredients.

Maybe the quantities are different? Somehow I doubt it, but it you care to, (and I sincerely hope you do), you can call their Toll-Free info. line and ask them yourselves. 1-800-543-7270.

On every shampoo bottle, I found direction for using the product: Wet hair, lather, rinse, repeat if necessary. Does anyone old enough to read, need directions like that?

Subject: Programs dealing with drug and alcohol problems

by Tracy Lea Landis

People involved in helping with drug problems on the UW-Stout campus are attempting to develop programs that would help identify and solve the problems of students and employees that prevent them from performing at their best.

Allen Ebel, coordinator of the Alcohol and Other Drug Abuse Education Program, has been dealing with abuse issues at Stout since the beginning of the school year. Ebel's job includes designing programs, doing intake and referral and also teaching graduate level courses.

Two programs, one titled the Student Assistance Program (SAP) and another focused on university employees, have been proposed, in a report authored by Ebel, as a way of dealing with such problems pro-actively.

A task force to design these programs at Stout has been called for by Ebel, whose office is located in the basement of Bowman Hall.

The Stoutonia: What would the Student Assistance Program's purpose be?

Ebel: SAP is primarily humanitarian in nature.

We see so many students, 275 per semester, that are academically disqualified and, as I said in my report, it could be that, in many of those cases, an alcohol or other drug problem is involved. As a matter of fact, I suspect that it is.

Allen Ebel

But there's also a functional aspect, because the university as a whole functions much less effectively as a result of people's abusive alcohol and drug behavior.

We have an increase in the need for Protective Services personnel. Also, hall directors say their primary behavioral problem is related to alcohol, late night stuff. If we could reduce it, their jobs would be a lot easier.

So I guess we're talking about safety, disruptions, the environment that we live in, and the fact that we want to help students get the most out of their educational experience.

The Stoutonia: The details of how this program would be run are what the task force is going to work out?

Please see SPOTLIGHT, page 9

Letters

What problem?

To Linda Christopherson, the critic of my recent letter (to the editor) on drug testing. You have criticized my use of the language in your letter, but you haven't even read the journal article that I cited. I suggest that you study the article for its terminology.

You mentioned "the heart of the problem," what is it? Please share your insight with us.

Mark J. Hottel.

Which direction?

Now let's ignore the fact that we all do not understand the use of signs for the purpose of direction. Should we use it?

Take for example, if you were visiting this campus the first time on Saturday, February 20, 1987 for the basketball game played that day, you would have thought the game was to be played in a magnificent building as you approach the Memorial Student Center from the northwest end.

Of course, you would have later discovered that the illuminated sign placed at the entrance to the Student Center points at the library.

This is not the first time that the sign has been placed there for the same purpose. But each time, it's always pointing to the computerized house of learning as the venue of the advertised game.

I may not understand the rationale (if any) behind the repeated act of misdirection.

But, I am going to suggest a couple of ideas that might be useful.

1. Turn the sign around 180 degrees to face the proper direction (Johnson Fieldhouse).
2. Detach the pointer from the illuminated sign and let interested visitors inquire of the direction.
3. Totally cease the use of the sign until somebody who is sure of the location is available.

In that way we can help conceal the fact that we are ignorant of the use of signs for directional purposes.

Oh! This way please!!

Henry Oboh

Rather upset

While reading the February 26th issue of The Stoutonia, something quite shocking caught my attention.

Our paper is generous enough to dedicate one whole page to the opinions of the students of this fine campus, which is extremely commendable. What worries me is how one student's opinion can take up two-thirds of the page, while the opinions of two others must share the remaining space.

Are we, as concerned students, failing to use our given right to freedom of speech? Or, for some reason, is the opinion of that one person so significant that the opinions of others must be sacrificed?

It is fine to voice your religious beliefs, we all have them, either for or against. But for someone whom I have yet to see as qualified to preach continuously tries to force his beliefs upon others by stating how terrible and unholy all poeple are, I begin to worry why no one replies.

I consider myself a religious person. I attend church, and strongly believe in what the Bible says. I am basically a good person who, at this point, is rather upset.

Should more space be provided for letters? Should some columns be shortened to make room? Or, my worst fear, are Linda and Rita the only two who wrote in? I don't have the answer. Do you??

I will be working in the Twin Cities. I think that the spring break is a little early this year. In my opinion the break should be after the third quarter is over.

Tom Starck,

Sophomore,

I am going to London. I did not feel like going to Daytona again this year because I was in Florida last semester. I figured that the air fares were cheap so I would cruise on over there. I will be over there for ten days. I really need the break, I am really getting sick of this place.

Opinions

Seeds of Change

Christianity Vs. Religion

Gene Emahiser

There seem to be some people on this campus who have a problem with me not doing unbiased, fair, and unprejudiced reporting. To be blunt, that's not my job. If you'll look at the top of the page you are reading, it says "Opinions". That's what this column is and always will be; my perspective or "opinion".

As for representing all the views of God and religion, I hear no one suggesting that we have a wider representation of music, drinking, art, politics, etc. We have columnists who freely present their opinions on these subjects. There is never much consideration by an opinionated columnist as to the popularity of his comments.

To be true to his convictions, he must write what he sees. If he has something that he feels strong enough about to run against the mainstream, he won't be able to live with himself if he fails to express it.

In a recent Gallup Poll, 65 million people said they were "Born Again" Christians.

If all these people were truly following the teachings of Christ, Christianity would have an impact so great in America that everyone left of Jesse Jackson would either get their life straightened out or leave the country.

What we have in America is a lot of religious pseudo-Christians. These modern day Pharisees have a comfortable imitation of Christianity. I call it comfortable because it allows you to pick and choose the teachings of Christ that you will apply to your life.

What we need is a lot more of God in our churches and a lot less religion. You see, religion is a system of rituals and deeds that is used to get to God.

Christianity, on the other hand, is humbly accepting what God has already done to bring you into His presence.

If there were any way to get to God by works or good deeds, Jesus would never have had to die on the cross, and his resurrection would be insignificant. But, since we are incapable of ever pleasing God with our works, we are in need of a Savior -- Jesus Christ, The Sacrificial Lamb of God.

Anyone who calls him or herself a Christian should be open to the instruction of God in their life. This means they should know His word, the Bible, and be willing to follow what it says. Any Christian who has ideas or conceptions of God that are not consistent with the Bible, is on very thin ice.

Not only should a Christian be familiar with the Bible, but he or she should submit themselves to the teachings of the leadership in their church home. This is a foundational element in being a Biblical Christian and not just a "casual" Christian.

Being committed to live your life according to God's plan, not your plan, is inherent in making Jesus the lord of your life. Without this commitment, an individual is still in control. God's hands are tied until we give Him that control.

There are many so-called Christians who have asked Jesus to save them, but have never asked Jesus to lead them. These people are just as lost, just as confused, just as damned as someone who has never heard the good news of Jesus Christ.

To be so bold as to suggest that you can be a Christian and still get drunk, engage in premarital sex, pray to Mary, be a homosexual, etc. is a scary event. These things are heresy. The Bible is very explicit on these matters and many others. No one who has given their life completely over to the leading and direction of God could habitually participate in these things.

For there is one God and one mediator between God and Man, the Man Christ Jesus.

I Timothy 2:5.

"The acts of the sinful nature are obvious: sexual immorality, impurity and debauchery; idolatry and witchcraft; hatred, discord, jealousy, fits of rage, selfish ambition, dissensions, factions and envy; drunkenness, orgies, and the like I warn you, as I did before, that those who live like this will not inherit the Kingdom of God."

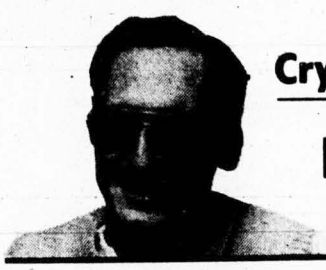
Galations 5:19.

"But the cowards who turn back from following me, and those who are unfaithful to me, and the corrupt, and murderers, and the immoral, and those conversing with demons, and idol worshippers and all liars -their doom is on the Lake that burns with fire and sulpher."

Revelation 21:8.

If anyone chooses to be a Christian, he or she should be aware of the costs of following Jesus. The cost of knowing God and the power of His resurrection is your life. No one should ever be deceived into thinking that they are born again or saved if they are unwilling to give up their sin and live totally unto God.

Either Jesus is lord of all or not at all.



Cryptic Notes

Insanity Proof

Tim Hopkins

I recently experienced some astounding insights good and bad on the meaning of existence.

I cannot be concerned if we are all evil. If we all are equally evil, then harmony ought to result. Unfortunately, I do not believe that man is evil per se and that is where the confusion comes in.

I am confident that man is universally crazy. This is no quick judgement on my part, but rather a happy conclusion following a dozen years of seriously insane studies.

While enrolled at the University of Iowa (U of I), I worked with a psychology professor who administered lysergic acid to rabbits in order to learn the drug's effects on their visual perception.

The tests were intricate because, unlike human subjects, we could not ask the rabbits to describe their response to the drug. So we worked in a lab full of photographic equipment focused on the test creature's eyes.

The professor and I vehemently disagreed on the possible pros and cons of using human subjects for the tests. Of the more than 20,000 students at Iowa, I knew a remarkable number of selfless individuals willing to sacrifice their time to further medical research. I failed to convince the professor to take advantage of the many good students who would have gladly volunteered for the LSD tests.

I left that unholy alliance after being initiated into this hairy cult which believed that God was (is) a rabbit. I joined the cult because it provided believable meaning to the tradition of hunting for Easter eggs.

Meanwhile, I could not cope with the concept of God tripping out on acid. Furthermore, I did not think that God enjoyed being force fed LSD by a U of I psychology prof.

The U of I acid rabbits solidified my belief of man's craziness, but these ideas cropped up in me even before humans began ripping down goal posts at football games.

Insanity takes many forms which includes losing sight of where you have been in the course of getting to your current position.

UW-Stout has served well in my study of mutually shared craziness, but Iowa still holds the record of possessing the most notable cases of insanity. To further the credibility of my theory on man's craziness, consider this addendum involving a U of I doctor.

Dr. Needleman was referred to me as being one of the best at the U of I Hospitals. Needleman was horrified at learning that I threw caution to the winds and ate eggs for breakfast as often as every other day.

Following his pompous diatribe against eggs, I turned the tables on him by going into a lengthy explanation of how eggs prevented me from suffering mid-morning food cravings.

With the flick of his wrist he tossed off my disrespect for his egg antipathy saying, "It is clear you are a creature of habit, so despite the harmful effects you will suffer from eating eggs you will continue to do so."

At the conclusion of this uncomfortable dialogue, the doctor added twisted emphasis to his rotten egg logic by pulling out a pack of Marlboro's while saying to me, "Would you like a cigarette?"

Ebel: The task force would identify those areas where we would like to write policy for interventions.

The Stoutonia: So the student who appears to have a problem would be referred by an SAP access point. What would those access points be?

Ebel: First thing we do is identify access points who could observe behavior that might be irresponsible or unacceptable and would, from that, make referrals.

We would identify those people and write the policy on what we want as a baseline intervention guideline for several different behaviors.

Access points might be the Student Health Center, the residence hall directors, the professors, Protective Services.

We would need to educate those people about our baseline information and how to make an intervention and a referral.

We also need to educate students about what our expectations are. There need to be several places where that happens; orientation, student handbooks and such.

The Stoutonia: So if someone gets repeated violations up to a certain baseline, that would supposedly alert the people at the access points that the student was having some kind of a problem. But then they would just be given a referral?

Ebel: They would then be referred to this office.

Action taken after that would depend upon the nature of the behavior and on whether it breaks university rules.

Whether it's loud noises in the hall, disruptive behavior or verbally abusing someone else, we then have an opportunity to set up a choice and we'd have a discipline choice or some sort of evaluation and immediate action choice.

Someone might then be referred to this office for an evaluation and I might sit down with them and we'd talk about what they've experienced related to their drinking.

I could make several choices available to the person.

We might require somebody get some more in-depth assessment or treatment.

I would perhaps utilize graduate students in the alcohol and other drug abuse master's degree program to provide some of the services for these students.

The Stoutonia: Do you plan to have student representation on this task force?

Ebel: Oh, yes. Absolutely.

I've invited the people from Students Understanding Drinking Sensibly, the presidents of all the fraternal organizations and the student senate.

I probably will call the first meeting within the two weeks after Spring Break, depending on when I can call all those people back. I sent out fifty letters.

Teenagers participate in Stout art course

by Jennifer Tooley

"I think I'm going to be who I should be without people telling me what to be." — Steve Uhrigh

That may sound like a lot to have gained from a 14-week art class, but Steve Uhrigh, a 16-year old sophomore at Colby High School, believes he's discovered just that.

Steve, along with other students ages 11-17 from nine other school districts, recently completed an experimental art class which culminated this past weekend with an exhibition in Gallery 306, Applied Arts.

> "I like designing things... especially with color."
> —Amy Fedie

Although Saturday morning art classes are not new at Stout, this session was different in that the instructor, Shirley Schulman, "pounded the pavement" to obtain money to provide scholarships for some students. Nineteen students participated in the classes, and many believed that they gained much from the experience.

Amy Fedie, an eighth-grader from Durand Junior High, was, as many of her fellow students were, selected by her art teacher to participate in the program. Amy found her art classes at school lacking in variety and liked the new opportunities the classes provided.

"I like designing things... I especially like working with colors. I work better in colors," Amy said. She is thinking ahead to a career in graphic or interior design and hopes to have the chance to be in a similar type of course again soon.

The works exhibited in this show concentrated on chalk, charcoal and pencil drawings, though one painting and a few watercolors added diversity.

The young man responsible for the painting, a colorful piece of medieval fantasy with dragons and knights, felt that he could "see more, more detail and more reality" after completing the course. Jeff Saiko, an eighth-grader from Boyceville Junior High, draws every day and likes to draw things from his imagination, like his painting. He saw the class as a chance "to see what other kids were doing."

The opening brought in about 40 people, all of whom were excited about the show and the opportunities it provided for the students. In addition to the studio time, the students were able to visit a gallery and listen to the stories of a guest artist.

Renee Paulsen, a sophomore from Elk Mound High School, said she discovered "a little bit of [her] talent." Her personal favorite of her works was a still life of fruit. "We were studying values and a picture popped up — there it was!" The class gave her a "new prospective" and she plans to continue her education in art.

Steve Uhirgh's enthusiasm for the class was unbounded. His first piece, a pencil drawing of a pair of shoes, "just sort of happened, and from then on things turned out."

"We concentrated on negative spaces. We looked at things besides what we were drawing," Steve said. "Ms. Schulman told us you have to finish a piece and go on. You have to be happy with it." Steve was very happy with his work. He has plans to become an architect and recommends that anyone interested in art should "go for it !"

The exhibition will continue through March 6 and is free and open to the public.

This drawing by Angela Yost, sophomore at Menomonie High School, was one of many pieces of artwork done by the students who participated in Shirley Schulman's Saturday art classes. The work was done by students aged 11 -17. The exhibition can be seen through March 6. at Applied Arts room 306.

Saturday February 28 an opening reception was held at the gallery where several gifted young artists displayed their work. Attending is Bill Norton art instructor at Menomonie High School, and daughters Becky and Abby. Many of Norton's students have work in the show.

"Hello Dolly" rewards audience with entertaining trip back in time

by Ruth Verstegen

To journey back in time is the dream of many. Although it is yet impossible to do so physically, we can actually "time travel" through our imagination, books, movies, and theater.

This weekend Menomonie has a great opportunity for theatrical time travel. The Mabel Tainter's production of "Hello, Dolly!" is your vehicle.

The directors, cast, orchestra, and crew brought to life a lighthearted, entertaining musical that is full of humor, romance and surprises.

This musical takes place at the turn of the century in New York. It was a happy time in history when horses pulled streetcars, women wore long, beautiful gowns and marriages were arranged by a matchmaker.

Mrs. Dolly Gallagher Levi, played by Sallie Ward, is the matchmaker for the quaint town of Yonkers, New York. Dolly is a widower who is bound and determined to love life and to make sure everyone else does, too.

She seems to get into everyone's business and makes sure that cupid aims his arrow correctly. The couple that is helped willingly by this redheaded cupid is Ambrose Kemper, played by Thomas Knudten, and a teary-eyed Ermengarde, played by Maree Holmstrom.

Dolly's scheming ways to happy matchmaking with surprises at every turn or a hat shop table as the case may be. And, as in any musical, there is a happy ending.

The pure entertainment that the actors offer the audience is not everything. The theatre, band, and community children make wonderful contributions to this production, as well.

If you are ready to "time travel" this weekend the Mabel Tainter's production of "Hello, Dolly!" is a good place to explore.

Excellent performance makes Air Jam a grand success

by Rhonda Olson

Those who didn't attend Air Jam VI missed an unbelievable impression of Mick Jagger's lips, the brightest and tightest spandex pants on campus, and good effort presented by six bands.

Air Jam VI was sponsored by the Circle K Club, a campus service organization. The Air Jam took place in the Great Hall on Thursday, February 26.

> "It felt great to be up there! —Bryll Creme Boys"

The master of ceremonies was "Hi Fi Kenny", a business owner from Eau Claire. Hi Fi Kenny stated that he was right for the job because he was, "as much of an air head as could be found."

The five categories which the bands were judged on were: stage presentation, dress, creativity, audience reaction, and the judge's overall impression of the bands.

Arsenic performed first. The lead singer leaned over the edge of the stage and cooed, "talk dirty to me," which seemed to delight the audience. Arsenic was an energetic and colorful band.

TNT had the audience rocking to, "you really got me!!..." Good choreography was presented by this band. An outstanding stunt was the lead singer's split legged jump over another member of the band.

Mick Jagger had strong competition in the lips category as the Rolling Pebbles strummed their tennis rackets. The enthused audience clapped along to "Hang Fire".

Organized Chaos boasted some of the tightest spandex pants and the wildest hair known to the Stout campus. They had good guitar techniques and choreography. The female participant gave new meaning to "shake me" as she sauntered through sporting a very short and fitting black dress.

Hi Fi Kenny responded to her rehearsed moves by simpering, "I think I'm in love."

The Bryll Creme Boys were the performers who gave blue jeans and jackets new life at the Air Jam. They had excellent stage presence and choreography. They appeared to be having a great time singing, "oooh, bamp, badooo...", as the lead singer wearing a black suit and red shirt sang the lyrics.

The Bryll Creme Boys followed up by performing, "It's Hip to be Square." Their instruments included an inconspicuous keyboard, invisible drums, pink plastic flamingo saxaphones, and a dart board with a hockey stick handle as the guitar. The crowd responded excitedly to the innovative band.

The Barnacles had fantastic, although skimpy, costumes. The back up singers and the drummer were mermaids, the keyboard player was a walking clam, and the lead singer was an octopus. They sang "Touch Me", as they danced and splashed on stage.

The three bands chosen for the finals were TNT, Organized Chaos, and the Bryll Creme Boys. The three bands performed again for the final judging.

TNT was awarded second place and the Bryll Creme Boys became the Air Jam VI champions.

TNT's members included Robert Kitten, Zack Adams, Greg Meisinger, and Jeff "Doc Jam" Brown. The second place winners were very generous with their thanks, "We'd like to thank all our loyal fans and the Circle K Club for their sponsorship of Air Jam VI. Thanks also to the back stage crew, Todd Buchan, Randy Bowers, and Earl Jerome." TNT also said that they would return next year to rock Stout again!

The Bryll Creme Boys were all students from Eau Claire. Included in this group were Chris Kelly, Pete Hoyer, Rick Berta, Steve Schuler, Chris Winkler, and John "the man, the myth, the boss!" Ross. The Air Jam VI Champions said, "Thanks for welcoming us to Stout. The facilities were great and the backstage crews were very cooperative.

It felt great to be up there and have the fans respond so well!"

Sandra Stark, a member of the Circle K Club said, "Be looking forward to Air Jam VII next year. Anyone is welcome to perform and cash prizes are awarded."

The Bryll Creme Boys consisting of six students from Eau Claire, Chris Kelly, Pete Hoyer, Rick Berta, Steve Schuler, Chris Winker, and John Ross, relied on plastic flamingos, a dartboard, a hockey stick, blue jeans, and a sense of fun to become Air Jam VI Champions.

Organized chaos entered the judges of Air Jam VI with the wildest hair on the stout campus in additon to some of the tightest spandex pants. The Air Jam VI proved to be highly successful.

Hurricane Alice brews up a storm of rock 'n' roll at Stout

Hurricane Alice rocked those who attended their concert on Monday night. Hurricane Alice is a four member band who are all serious musicians. The band has been approached by a major record label for a recording contract and possible tour.

by Steve Voll

The scene is backstage. It's the scene. It's where it's happening. Rock and roll headquarters.

A man with long black hair and braids approaches me. What kind of questions do you ask to a man that is dressed in such attire? I'm thinking I'd be more comfortable with the man if he was adorned in a suit and tie. Well, at least a sweater and some boat shoes. After a few moments of discussion with Leni, who by the way is the lead guitarist of Hurricane Alice, I realize that this guy is a damn serious musician.

The band consists of four members, all of which, by the way, were in similar attire. Rusty Miller plays drums, Scott Werner on bass and lead vocals by Bruce Naumann. All are from the St. Paul area and all proved to be damn serious about their music.

Discussion led its way around to the future of the band, which seems quite promising as they have only been together six months and have already been approached by a major record label for a recording contract and a possible tour.

When asked why they didn't wears suits, sweaters, boat shoes and ties on stage, Leni responded, "Do what you like and be happy with what you are doing." And about the attire, "At least we've got the attention of other people."

> "Do what you like and be happy with what you are doing
> —Leni"

It seemed one of Leni's activities was to go to the deli and turn heads and that people are seemingly amazed when they find out your a real person.

Going beyond all the garb and hair that the band members wore, there were four serious artists working for what they believed in and that was their music.

Leni said, "Do whatever it takes. If you have to, go to extremes to do it and never lose sight of your first goal."

Okay, okay, I'll admit it. When I was going in to interview this band, I had a big stereotyped image of four sex- and drug-crazed lunatics. Well, just look at the posters, huh? Why, they look like four sex- and drug-crazed lunatics. Turns out they aren't any more sex- and drug-crazed than a table of four business majors sitting in the student union. In fact, I found four inspired artists that were doing everything that it takes to make it.

The band Axis also proved to be a fine unit, consisting of four members — one of which, by the way, is a Stout graduate of a few years ago. The band has been together about four years and plays in the Cities (it's happening) and the Milwaukee area.

The Stout graduate majored in business. So much for that stereotype. Please put that one to rest. Put away the four-foot-wide paint brush. And in the words of some great philosopher guy, the name of which I cannot remember, "To generalize is to be an idiot."

Hurricane Alice, you seem to have your heart in the right place. Take it to the top.

Metal classes taught by involved faculty

by J. Dauplaise

Every building on campus houses its own little secrets. Applied Arts is no exception. On the building's first floor, in room 101, is the Art Metals lab. Humphrey Gilbert and Ron Verdon preside over the lab.

> "we're not locked into that 8 to 5 thing.
> —Humphrey Gilbert"

It is in this room that the vast mysteries of the metalurgical world are unfolded to curious students. Throughout the semester the use of the odd machines decorating the periphery of the room are demonstrated, acquiring new meaning and purpose.

Mr. Gilbert, also and better known as Humphrey began working in the lab as a graduate T.A. in 1967. After acquiring his degree in 1970 he continued teaching Art Metals.

Ron Verdon, who also teaches Art Metals was a student in the first class Gilbert taught. Verdon joined the staff in 1976.

Gilbert, having been teaching here for sixteen years has gained a good deal of insignt not only in the Metals area, but in the Art Department itself.

Gilbert explained why the Art Department at Stout has maintained such growth and vitality despite relatively little influx of new staff members.

The reason for the vitality says Gilbert is that " the pressure is never off."

Elaborating on this point he explains, " We're not locked into that 8 to 5 thing. It goes back to Fumagalli. He wanted a staff of artists, not just teachers. A 40 hour work week doesn't make for a good teacher."

The instructors of Stout's Art Department are encouraged to function and work as nationally recognized competitive artists. Non-contact hours, or hours not spent with students, are spent producing work, entering shows, and dealing with galleries. This means sometimes getting rejected.

" It's something you wrestle with every day." says Gilbert.

About the time he does spend with students gilbert is very clear.

" I expect them to be here and to do a good job."

Gilbert is committed to his students and sometimes goes to extraordinary lengths to help them if they need it. It is not unusual for student phone calls to interupt Gilbert at his home in Elk Mound. He doesn't seem to mind.

He is constantly sharing his knowledge of metal and metal design with his students. His office is frequently full of inquisitive students, and a line waiting outside the door to talk to him is not an unusual sight.

Over the years Gilbert has noted a change in the pursuit of studio degrees in the Metals area.

" 15 years ago there was an expected progression of good students going on to grad school after finishing here."

The program has adapted to a more vocational approach. Nonetheless the emphasis on quality design and perfection of technique have not changed.

Humphrey Gilbert, metals instructor at Stout's art department believes, "A 40 hour work week doesn't make for a good teacher." Gilbert means that the sucessful art faculty are all practicing artists as well as teachers. Gilbert is eager to share his knowledge of metals with his students.

One Point Perspective

Reading a book by its cover

J. Dauplaise

With the preponderance of work left to finish before leaving for Spring Break I was driven to the Library Learning Center in search of knowledge and solitude. Unfortunately, it was difficult to find either.

My earliest library experiences herald back to my grade school encounters with Sister Edna, a Franciscan nun with bad breath. When I first came to Stout I experienced the same feeling of dread towards the library that Sister Edna had instilled in me years ago.

My rationale for such trepidation is the result of my suspicions towards the addition of the words "Learning Center" to "Library." My fear lay in the nightmare that students actually attending the university NEEDED the addition of explanatory suffixes to explain to them the general purpose of a library.

Overcoming my fears, I armed myself with a bag of cashews, a package of Twinkies, a pen, and lots of paper. As I approached the Library Learning Center, I could have sworn I heard a scream from inside the building, "ALIS, you bitch!" Whatever happened to the good old days of card catalogues?

The first problem I encountered once safely inside the carefully monitered building was "lack of resources." Only one of the twelve magazines I needed could be located in the stacks. One was located on the microfiche. Personally, I do not enjoy scanning miniature celluloid compilations of out of date magazines. I aborted that mission.

My next learning experience came about upon discovering that the "LLC" does not house an English version of Ovid's "Metamorphoses". They do have a leather bound edition of the work which is kept behind the front desk. It is printed in a language thoroughly unintelligable to me.

I did not check to see if the had an English version of "Tom Sawyer", but I have my doubts. I wonder what the reaction would be if all the cook books were pulled from the shelves and replaced with leather bound Sanskrit versions.

In addition to nonexistence of needed material, I am frequently dissapointed to find that the book I most need has been checked out and is not due until a week after my paper.

Despite my dissapointment, I armed myself with alternate volumes and found a desk. I felt no guilt as I ate my cashews in plain sight while skimming a volume of 19th century painters. The guy listening to his Walkman at the next table seemed unconcerned with my violation of the LLC's food and drink policy.

Looking over my shoulder, I tore into the Twinkies, very aware of the cellophane disturbance I was creating. I then realized my noise was probably unheard over the boisterous conversation being carried on by the window. "No kidding! Was he drunk? HAHAHAHAHAH..." "No, not at the Tap!" "You're kidding!"

I was amazed at the intellectual environment in which I was immersed. I decided I would simply ignore everyone and get to work. While diligently taking notes, my peripheral vision interfered with my set task. Suddenly I was very aware of a girl weaving through the rows of books.

She was wearing more lace on her entire body than all my female relatives, living and dead, had worn on their wedding days. Suppressing an urge to regurgitate, I cursed Madonna and tried to ignore her.

Then, to my horror, she crossed the room and joined the window group. "Oh for cute! Is it Guess?" (Onslaught of giggles.)

I couldn't take it. I began gathering my things, slyly disposing of my Twinkie evidence. I gathered my books and headed for the door. While checking out my two metric tons of books, a tall muscular guy approached the main desk. He nonchalantly tossed and amazingly thin paperback onto the desk. He obviously hadn't built his biceps hauling around reading material.

I decided to return to the noisy Metals Lab where I could at least get some work done.

Campus Cuisine

Dudleyville horror

Denise Cain

I have recently discovered the epitome of filth. It towers on 12th avenue as the Dudleyville house. I have never entered a college home quite as disarranged; the kitchen itself was enough to make me gag (on a spoon, fur sure). The kitchen cuisine focused on foods prepared Fall semester. The dishes remained molten together beside the sink, on the floor, across the hall into the living room, and down the steps into the front yard.

The food on the plates was indescribable. It centered somewhere between organic and chemical. (I believe the half-life of Spaghettios is two years.) The fumes generated from the dishes acted as a fuel source to power their kitchen lights.

As I was meandering through Dudleyville, memories of microbiology filled my mind. Staphylococcus aureas, escherichia coli and some of my other favorite bacteria were thriving. If I would have had my Gram staining kit, I could have made some wild slides.

The sight of this kitchen filled my mind with questions (and tears). What types of mothers supposably raised these fine boys from Barron? Do these boys even have mothers? Do their mothers do dishes? Are they waiting for their mothers to come and wash their dishes?

After spending some time in the kitchen, I decided that these boys have not been making the delicious recipes I feature every week in Campus Cuisine. Maybe if these boys would cook some decent Cuisine food, they would not have piles of it left over decaying on their plates.

I dedicate this week's Campus Cuisine to the great guys who live at Dudleyville. May their stomachs and their mothers rest easy tonight. The first recipe is from sport's hero Joe Schmit. It is the perfect meal for you and that someone special. "Bon Appetit".

Beans Gourmet

1 can pork & beans
2 chicken franks

Take one can of pork & beans and slice the franks into one-inch segments (for appropriate width, use -5 slicing disk on your food processor) and place in a saucepan. Saute over medium heat and stir when liquid begins to burn at the bottom of the pan. Serve with all natural chips, pickles and a six pack.

The next recipe comes to use from Dave Andrews of Channel 5 News. Now that the dorms have microwaves, I am sure guys all over campus will be preparing this dish all of the time.

Chicken a la Microwave
(Bachelor Style)

2 chicken breasts
3 Tbsp. spicy mustard
3 Tbsp. barbecue sauce
1 clove garlic

Remove skin from chicken. Mix mustard, barbecue sauce and garlic. Baste chicken with the mixture. Pop chicken in the microwave for 7-8 minutes.

While chicken is cooking, open a bottle of beer and a bottle of olives. Drink beer and eat a few olives. Take chicken out of microwave when cooked. Grab another beer from the refrigerator and put a few olives on the plate with the chicken. Take meal to living room.

Stout's Dave)Sandstrom (40) attempts a shot over Eau Claire's Mike Blair (20). The Blue Devils lost ot the Blugolds 59-49, in th regular season finale for both teams.

Cagers bow to Blugolds, then upset by Indians

by Paul Emerson

There has always been a belief that two good halves will win you the game. The UW-Stout mens basketball team played two good halves in action last week, unfortunately though, the halves were split between two games.

The Blue Devils led 29-28 at the half in the rematch with UW-Eau Claire, but then watched the Blugolds run their offense to perfection in the second half, and lost the game 59-49.

Stout then hosted UW-La Crosse in the first round of the Ditrict 14 play-offs. The Blue Devils used a scrappy defense that enabled them to take a 30-23 at the half, but let a 12 point lead in the second half slip away, and lost the game by a 68-64 score.

With the loss to Eau Claire, Stout finshed their WSUC slate with a 9-7 third place final mark. And with the loss to La Crosse, the season abruptly ended for the Blue Devils, and gave them an 18-8 overall mark.

Eau Claire 59 Stout 49

"We played tight the whole game," said head coach Dewey Mintz, "Eau Claire played much looser."

In a close first half that saw the lead exchange hands several times, the Blugolds took the biggest lead for either team in the half at 28-23 with 1:32 to go.

From there the Blue Devils scrambled and scored the next six points to take a 29-28 lead into the lockerroom.

The Blue Devils took thier final lead of the game at 31-30 with 16:33 to go on a lay-up by Tom Gomolak. But from there the Blugolds went on a 9-2 scoring spurt, to take a 39-33 lead with 13:45 to go.

> "We played tight the whole game, Eau Clair played much looser.
> —Coach Mintz

Ron Hunter led the Devils in scoring with 11 points. Brian Ellingson scored 10 and Tom Gomolak 9. Gomolak and Mark Stevens both grabbed a game high 8 rebounds.

Chuckie Graves led the Blugolds attack with 20 points, while Mike Blair had 16 points, and John Bowen 15. No other Blugold player scored more than 4 points.

La Crosse 68 Stout 64

"We played very well in the first half," said head coach Dewey Mintz. "A super defense shut them down, they shot only 30 percent in the first half," added Mintz.

The Blue Devils took their biggest lead of the half at 15-4 with 14:33 to go in the half. The Indians cut the deficit to four points with 2:14 to go, 25-21, but a 3-point shot by Ron Hunter put the Devils back up by eight.

In the second half Stout opened up a 12 point lead with 10:42 to go in the game, 47-35. But La Crosse then went on a 14-2 spurt to tie the game in just over three minutes. And with 7:34 to go it was anyone's ballgame.

A 3-point shot by Hunter tied the game at 61 with 1:30 to go. La Crosse then went up by four before another 3-point shot, this one by Luther Forrest with just 10 seconds left on the clock, brought the Devils to within one at 65-64.

Two freethrows by the Indians' Bob Zenz put La Crosse back up by three. Stout then hurried a 3-point shot to tie, and La Crosse got the rebound.

Eric Chudzik hit one of two freethrows with :04 seconds left to ice the upset win for the Indians.

"We played like we were wore out in the second half," said Mintz, "and after we lost the 12 point lead, we tightened up and just didn't play good."

Ron Hunter again led the Blue Devils attack with 21 points. Luther Forrest was the only other Stout player to score in double figures with 12 points.

La Crosse' Bob Zenz tied Hunter for game high scoring honors with 21 points. Everson chipped in 16 points, while Chudzik had 11.

Despite winless season, lady cagers made progress

by Paul Emerson

Since most people judge a team's success or failure solely on its won-lost record, at first glance one would label the UW-Stout women's basketball team's past season as dismal at best.

However, despite the fact that the Lady Blue Devils failed to experience the thrill of a single victory while struggling to an 0-22 overall mark (0-16 in the WWIAC), the season was not as dismal as one would first think.

After last season's 2-21 overall mark (0-16 in the WWIAC), women's Head Coach Lynda Lee and the team set some modest goals when the season began.

And although the team's goal of two wins in the WWIAC was not achieved, Lee stated, "We reached some goals we're proud of."

The Lady Blue Devils nearly beat UW-Eau Claire and UW-Platteville but suffered heartbreaking losses in both, losing 76-72 to Eau Claire in two overtimes and 69-68 to Platteville in the season finale.

"To some people these games shouldn't have even been close, but with a few calls the other way, we could've won both of them," Lee said.

According to Lee, "The Eau Claire game was our best game of the season. It was a close game all the way."

"The Platteville game was sort of a sweet and sour day. We wanted to win badly, and it was such a close game. Losing that one was the biggest disappointment of the year," Lee said.

Junior Renee Kasten was the Lady Blue Devils' main offensive threat all season long. Kasten led the team in scoring with a 13.1 points per game average and in rebounding with an average of 14.2 rebounds per game.

Kasten led the WWIAC in rebounding and field goal percentage (14.2 and 55.8 percent, respectively). The 14.2 rebounding average places her fourth nationally in the NCAA Division III.

Senior Patti Cook was the team's second leading scorer, averaging 6.8 points per game, while Junior Suzi Krank averaged 5.8, Freshman Jacki Gilbert 5.4 and Junior Justine Becker 5.0 points per game.

Sophomore Sara Zoll led the team in free throw percentage, hitting for 71.4 percent from the line (5 of 7), while sophomore point guard Lisa Blume was the team's assist leader, averaging 2.4 assists per game.

The Lady Blue Devils averaged 50.0 points per game as a team, while giving up an average of 76.3 points per game. The team shot 38.3 percent from the floor and 52.3 percent from the line for the season.

One statistic that plagued the team all season long was a high number of turnovers. For the season the Lady Devils averaged 26 turnovers per game.

Summarizing the season as a whole, Lee said, "We developed a real high level of team unity. If the attitudes wouldn't have been so good, the season would have seemed a lot longer."

As far as loss of players are concerned, Lee says the team will probably lose four players. Senior Patti Cook has one year of eligibility left but isn't expected to use it.

Junior Mary Britts will not be returning to the team next year, while Suzi Krank and Kris Knutsen may be transferring out.

Lee said everyone else is expected to be back next year, and also stated, "Recruiting is going well. There are many area athletes interested in Stout."

"I feel we got a lot accomplished this year, even though the scores didn't show it," added Lee, "and next year hopefully the things we've accomplished will start to surface."

Right time for break

Cosmas A. Whitten

It is about this time that students are taking midterms and trying to finish up various projects. Quarter classes are ending, which means finals for some. I believe that spring break has come at the right time. Many students are burned out.

There are many symptoms of student burnout. If you have any of the following, then you are a burned out student. The cure for the symptom is followed.

1. Lack of sleep — Students burn themselves out by staying up all night to finish projects or last-minute studying. The cure is to sleep in late over spring break.

2. Very shaky hands — Burned-out students have so much caffeine in their system that their whole bodies are shaking. It is extremely hard to type accuratyl. Over break have a few non-caffeine drinks to get your system back to stable operating conditions.

3. Unkempt appearance — Burned-out students do not care what they look like. They are usually dressed in grubby sweats. Some burned-out students go to sleep in the sweats that they plan to go to class in. That way a student can just wake up, throw on their shoes and head to class. The cure is to go shopping over break and buy new clothes.

4. Messy room — A burned-out student doesn't have time to clean his room. It is usually impossible to see the floor. Dirty clothes are usually thrown on the floor because the laundry basket still has the clean clothes in it that were never put away. The cure — check into a clean hotel room.

5. Rapid weight loss — A burned-out student usually keeps himself very busy, therefore having no time to eat. Over break just pig out and gain that weight back.

6. Empty gas tank — There is usually no time to make it to the gas station, but the car is constantly in use. On Friday just fill that tank up and take off.

7. Lack of social life — A burned-out student has no time to do anything with his or her friends except study. Usually he forgets what uptown even looks like. Over spring break, you know what to do to cure that.

8. Sore eyes — It is very hard to read five major textbooks in one night. Eyes can get very sore trying to cram all those words into them. Over break just sit back, relax and wear your shades.

9. Frostbite — Walking all over campus in the cold can become very irritating. The cure is to go south, even if it is only to Illinois.

10. Lack of ideas — It's hard to think up ideas especially if you have to write a column every week. The cure — I don't know but I hope I find one soon.

Wrestlers compete in regional meet; qualify one for nationals in Buffalo

by Tim Nichols

The UW-Stout wrestling team competed in the Division III Regional Tournament last Friday in Oshkosh and will send one grappler to nationals.

Wayne Hendrickson earned a spot in the Division III National Tournament by taking first place honors in the 167-lb. class. Hendrickson edged his opponent from UW-Whitewater by a score of 8-7 to seal his berth in the national tourney.

Blue Devil Coach Michael Early said Hendrickson was "under the weather" all of last week and even missed some practice time. Early commended Hendrickson for earning his first place finish while battling his sickness.

"I didn't think I wrestled very well. I just hung on to win," Hendrickson commented. "But it was good that I could win even though I was sick."

Hendrickson will take his 25-10 individual record to the national tournament to be held in Buffalo, New York on March 5-7. Grapplers competing in the tournament consist of a select group of 16 to 20 competitors in each weight class taken from nearly 200 Division III schools.

"I didn't think I wrestled very well. I just hung on to win."
—Senior Wayne Hendrickson

Blue Devil Senior Keith Rusch captured second place in his last intercollegiate performance. Rusch lost by a score of 11-2 to Ciha of UW-Platteville in the finals and finishes the year with an 11-8-1 overall record.

Placing third for the Blue Devils was 134-pounder Kevin Burbach, 142-pounder Anthony Brown, 177-pounder Steve Smith, 190-pounder Larry Grein and Heavyweight Rich Rupp.

Smith, a freshman, competed in a senior-dominated 177-lb. class. Both the first and second place finishers, who are seniors, were awarded trips to the nationals. Smith tallied a 21-17 individual mark for the season.

Heavyweight Rupp lost his first round match to an opponent which he had already beaten earlier this season. However, Coach Early was pleased with Rupp's improvement over the season and said, "I thought he had a tremendous year." Rupp finishes the year with a 12-14 record.

Also placing for the Blue Devils was 150-pounder Jim Miotke, who finished fourth.

by Darron Vanman

Name: Wendy Heineke
Sport: Women's Swimming
Year: Sophomore
Major: Hotel and Restaurant Management
Coach: John Miller
Latest Accomplishment:
1986: All-Conference second team
All-American honorable mention

Events: 100-yard backstroke, 100-yard butterfly and relays.
Stout's most valualble woman swimmer

Athlete's statistics: At the WSUC swim meet Feb. 19-21, Heineke took a first in the 100-yard butterfly with a new conference record of 59.1 seconds. Heineke also tied for first in the 100-yard freestyle with another conference best of 54.2.

In addition, Heineke placed third and fourth places in the 100-yard backstroke and 200 individual medley, respectively. Wendy Heineke's superb performance at the WSUC swim meet earned her The Stoutonia's athlete of the week.

Coach's comments: According to Coach Miller, "She gave a tremendous performance on her way to setting records in the 100 fly and 100 freestyle."

"Wendy is a very talented swimmer — a team leader who leads by her performances at meets as well as during workouts. She really cares about the team," Coach Miller said.

Coach Miller speculated on Heineke's chances at Nationals, saying, "I think she has an excellent chance of becoming an All-American, if she performs up to her abilities."

Enthusiastic Wendy Heineke has set her sites high for Nationals. She wants to be an All-American in all of her events, and particularly first or second in the 100-yard freestyle.

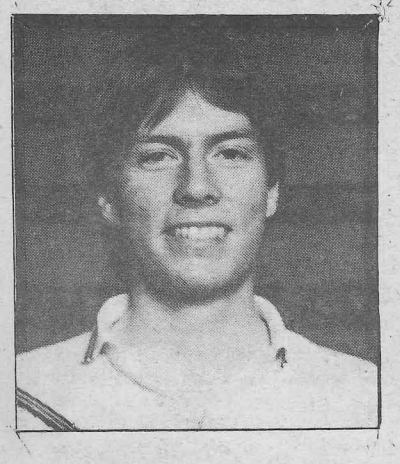
Returning lettermen to lead netters' quest

by John Pelishek

Stout's tennis team, which has been dominating the WSUC, winning its fourth consecutive WSUC team championship and its fifth consecutive NAIA District 14 team championship last season, is looking forward to another banner year.

Returning lettermen are number two singles and doubles John Leehy, a senior from Sparta, Wis. John was ranked number 42 in singles and number 32 in doubles, was selected Academic All-American and was also named the WSUC Scholar Athlete.



John Leehy

Another returning senior is number 3 doubles player Tony Pheifer from Burlington, Wis., from whom Coach Bob Smith expects a good year.

The rest of the returning lettermen are juniors, starting with doubles All-American Mike Friedman. Friedman, from Highland Park, Ill., was the number 5 singles and number 1 doubles player.

Mike and All-American Rob Oertel were quarterfinalists in the NCAA Division III tournament last year.

Friedman said that it's a great honor to be an All-American but, "when you're on the court it's you against your opponent and you have to prove yourself again. However, I look forward to another good year."

Still others returning are number 4 singles and number 2 doubles player Mark Paine from Hartford, Wis. and number 7 singles player Bill Johnson from Coon Rapids, Minn. Coach Smith expects major contributions from them this year.

Rounding off the list are players Eric Tidquist from Burnsville, Minn., Todd Trabant from Apple Valley, Minn. and Troy Kelly from Cumberland, Wis., all juniors. All are good athletes according to Smith and could really come on this year.

Coach Smith's outstanding new prospect is Tony Snoeyenbos, a senior from Wausau, Wis. who transferred from a college in Florida. Tony was selected outstanding sportsman at the Milwaukee Classic this year.

John Leehy, one of the top players, said, "Although tennis is fun, its gruelling physically and mentally and while going to school it can be tough. I cope by praying a lot and knowing God is with me every step of the way."

Stars lost from last year will be number 1 singles All-American Rob Oertel, whose ranking was 20th in the nation by ITCA last year. A co-captain, he was also a doubles All-American and voted the Most Valuable Player the last two years.

Also missing will be number 3 singles co-captain Joel Vogler. Both players, according to Coach Smith, were major contributors to Stout's four consecutive WSUC team championships.

Smith attributes his team's success for the past several years to having good players and lots of hard work that includes a year-round program.

The team had its first Early Bird Tournament last weekend and got off on the right foot by winning all three matches against three outstanding teams.

The Blue Devils beat NCAA Division I Bradley 5-4 in their opening match and then came right back and beat Division III power Carlton, 5-1. The doubles matches were cancelled that day. On Sunday they had an easy time with Luther College, winning 8-1.

Some of the great performances were by John Leehy over 16th-ranked Tom James in a close 3-set match 6-4, 3-6, 7-6 and Tony Snoeyenbos, who crunched ninth-ranked singles player David Trechel 6-0, 6-1.

"Painer won a big match against Bradley," exclaimed Smith. Paine beat Chris Custlid of Bradley 6-4, 6-4.

On Feb. 20-22 Stout played in the 1987 UNLV Michelob Lite Tournament in Las Vegas, Nevada. The tourney was comprised mostly of Division I schools.

Although the team didn't win a single match, Coach Smith believes the team benefited a great deal from the experience and said, "It's a tremendous honor just to be invited to play in a tournament with so many great Division I teams."

Stout got into the tourney after the University of Tennessee cancelled out.

"It seems like each year our schedule gets tougher and tougher. This year is no exception," Smith said.

"UW-Whitewater lost the nucleus of its team, but has some fine players. UW-Eau Claire will be improved and could surprise some people," added Smith.

Smith mentions UW-Stevens Point as being their toughest competition in the WSUC with UW-La Crosse and UW-Oshkosh being right up there.

"Platteville and River Falls have improved this year I hear. It should be a very interesting WSUC again this year," Smith said.

This year the team's goals are to win its 5th straight WSUC and 6th straight NAIA District 14 titles. They would like to make the NCAA tournament and have a number 1 ranking in the Midwest.

Stout's men's tennis currently is ranked 10th nationally and 2nd in the Midwest.

Bowling at Rec. Center is fun, and inexpensive too.

by John Pelishek

Looking for something to do but don't have a lot of money? Well then bowling at the Recreation Center on first floor of the student center, open bowling and tournaments may be the answer.

Every semester within the first couple of weeks bowling leagues are formed. Leagues offer different types of teams to join during every day of the week.

If you are a competitive bowler, the All-Star League bowls between 7 and 9 p.m. All-Star Leagues are comprised of four people.

There are several coed teams you can join if you want to meet somebody of the opposite sex in a casual, non-threatening atmosphere on Wednesday nights from 7 to 9 p.m., Mondays from 5 to 7 p.m. and on Fridays from 12 noon to 1 p.m.

Other activities include combinations of bowling and pool games on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings as well as men's and women's teams only.

Brad Mersereau, a student who bowls in Monday's men's doubles bowling league from 7 to 9 p.m., says, "It gets you into activities besides watching television, eating popcorn or drinking beer."

"It takes your mind off of girls," says Brian Statz, who also bowls in the same league.

Tim Spolar, a student who bowls in Monday's evening league, says "I bowl because Monday Night Football isn't on and I wanted to bowl for the competition and fun of it."

But if you can not join a league there is open bowling every day and many tournaments you can enter.

> "It get you into activites besides watching television, eating popcorn, and drinking beer
> —Brad Mersereau

Open bowling is usually open every other hour during the day and after 9 p.m. during the evenings. The cost is reasonable at 65 cents per game and 25 cents for shoes.

Special rates for open bowling are every Friday from 4 to 6 p.m. at 2 for 1 prices and on Sunday from 1 to 3 p.m. where you can rent a lane at $2 per hour.

There's bowling classes you can join fourth quarter if you want to improve your game or you can learn how on Mondays and Thursdays during third and fourth hour and seventh and eighth hour on Wednesday.

The Rec Center is sponsoring two upcoming tournaments after spring break. On Friday, March 20, there will be a team tournament with 5 players per team. Each team member will bowl 3 games individually, and the team will bowl three under the baker system where each of the 5 players bowls 2 frames each for a total team score.

Over Parents' Weekend there will be a Scotch-doubles tournament. Teams will have students matched up with one of their parents. One rolls the first ball and the other rolls the second ball. Scoring is the same as in a normal game.

Anne Buttke, Recreation Center Supervisor, reminds everyone that "Strike it Rich" is still held the second and fourth Saturdays of each month. The cost is $3.25 for 3 games of bowling, plus shoe rental. A minimum of 24 bowlers is needed for each session, noted Buttke.

"You have to strike to win, but almost everyone is guaranteed of winning something," Buttke said. "Those who don't have a good average, usually end up having the best time."

Treatment center aids injured athletes

by Chris Riba

College athletics are very exciting for both the fan and the athletes themselves, but along with excitement comes injuries. Athletic injuries at Stout are treated by Mike Ramaeker and his fine staff of athletic trainers.

Mike Ramaeker, the head of the athletic treatment center here at Stout, is originally from Tucson, Arizona. In 1982 he graduated from the UW-La Crosse with a bachelor's degree in athletic training. He completed his master's in athletic training in 1983 at the University of Arizona, Tuscon.

After being the head trainer at the California Institute of Technology, he was the athletic trainer for the 1984 United States men's and women's olympic volleyball teams. Then in the summer of 1984 he became the director of Stout's athletic treatment center.

"I got started in athletic training because of interest in health care. I'm a former athlete myself and I wanted to be able to make a difference for athletes," Ramaeker said.

"Athletic training borrows from the field of kinesthesia, physiology of exercise, anatomy, motor learning and other sport sciences to provide emergency care, prevention of, evaluation, treatment and rehabilitation of athletic injuries," Ramaeker said.

Injuries that the treatment center handles range from "anything life-threatening to basic wound care," Ramaeker said.

When an injured athlete is brought in they are checked in, evaluated, treated from the evaluation, rehabilitation programs and goals are set, the athlete is reevaluated and whatever treatment is left is then completed.

Rehabilitation takes anywhere from nine months to a year to be completed. The hard thing about this is that athletes are very hard to keep down.

According to Ramaeker, "Just because they feel better doesn't mean they are ready."

The success rate of the athletic treatment center is impressive. "Every athlete that has had major surgery and has started a rehabilitation program here has come back the next year," Ramaeker said.

Sarah Thompson, a volunteer staff member at the center, says she is involved at the center because, "I've grown up around sports." She adds, "I like to work."

Ramaeker says of his staff, "When they take this job they have to realize they are committed to the athletes and the time."

With the building of the new fieldhouse, which will include a treatment center that will be double the size of the current one, more help will be needed. The staff currently has state payroll and volunteer student workers. Anyone interested should contact Mike Ramaeker at the athletic treatment center or at x-1189.

Quadrangular meet helps tracksters prepare for conference indoor meet

by Denise Cain

The UW-Stout men's track team competed with three of Minnesota's top Division III track teams at the St. John's Quadrangular in Collegeville, Minn. this past weekend. Stout placed third, finishing behind St. Thomas College and St. John's University and ahead of Hamline University.

The St. John's Quadrangular was a preparation meet for the indoor conference meet this weekend. It was geared more for individual performances than team placings.

"Our goal was not to score high as a team but to get individual seed times so we can get into good heats at the conference meet," Head Coach Steve Terry commented.

Individually, junior transfer student John Zastrow led the Stout men as he qualified for both the Indoor and Outdoor National Championships by reaching a distance of 15 feet, 1 inch in the pole vault. It was a personal best for Zastrow in his first season competing as a Blue Devil.

When asked about his performance at St. John's meet, Zastrow replied, "I was very pleased with my performance. I felt confident in my warm-ups and I knew if I could make 14-feet, which would be a personal best, I would have a great day."

Coach Terry seemed pleased with Zastrow's performance, adding, "John has all the potential to be one of the top vaulters in the country. The last two months John has worked very hard without a great deal of improvement. That is why it is great to see him reaching his potential in time for the conference meet."

Coach Terry noted that the Blue Devil hurdle crew, led by Zack Adams and Brian Kohls, had a good day at St. John's meet. Four of eight finalists in the 60-yard hurdles were Stout tracksters.

The long distance runners were led by Co-captain Matt Christenson who placed second in the 1500-meter run in a time of 4 minutes, 2.1 seconds. It was a personal record for Christenson, who cut his time by four seconds.

Christenson stated, "We looked good on Saturday. We look ready physically and mentally for conference this weekend. We are setting a goal of second place and with a little luck and a lot of good performances, we can achieve this goal."

Out in the field, Dan Doucette led the long jump crew by taking first place with the distance of 21 feet, 6 3/4 inches.

Missing from action at the Saturday meet was Paul Bons. Bons was competing in the mile run at the NAIA meet in Kansas City. He completed the race in a time of 4 minutes, 16 seconds. It was a personal best for Bons who finished eighth in the nation amongst scholarship schools.

The Blue Devil women participated in the St. Olaf Invite Friday afternoon in Northfield, Minn. Standouts for the women included Kristin Mauk who had a fourth place finish in the 400-meter run in a time of 1:30.8. and Debbie Board who earned herself sixth place honors for a time of 11:04 in the 3,000-meter run.

With the conference meet this weekend, Coach Terry mentioned, "The women are very young, but they have potential to grow as a team, especially in the middle distances."

Coach Terry sighted strong competitors for the conference meet including Kristin Mauk in the 400-meter, Sue Schaffegen and Renee Leffel in the shot put, Debbie Board in the 5000-meter, Barb Peterson in the high jump and the 200-meter relay of Tammy Schaller, Maureen O'Neill, Kristin Mauk and Beth Claas.

The goals for the men's team at conference as mentioned by Coach Terry are, "To finish in the top two places." Terry went on to say, "All the hard work of the past two months boils down to what happens this weekend."

Opening of new facilities celebrated

by Brian Kraimer

The new Communications Technologies Building was dedicated on Tuesday afternoon, with much fanfare and a ribbon cutting ceremony.

The event began at 1 p.m. with the presentation of colors by the UW-Stout Veterans' Club and a performance of the national anthem by the Stout Band.

A ribbon cutting ceremony was also part of the grand opening of the new facility, a $3.1 million renovation of the former student center which was replaced by the new Memorial Student Center in 1985.

An open house offered student-hosted tours of the new photography, graphic arts, and communication labs. There were also lab activities and demonstrations.

Tours were followed by a question and answer session with Wisconsin printers and publishers involved in Government Printing Office (GPO) contracts.

Participants enjoyed a dinner featuring keynote speaker Ralph E. Kennickell, Jr., the public printer, who heads the GPO.

As one of the largest printing shops in the world, the GPO employs more than 5000 people.

Chancellor Robert Swanson expressed excitment about the opening of the new facility.

"All of this is going to be the finest graphic arts building in the world," Swanson said.

Regional Olympics of the Mind to be held at Stout on March 21

by Stout News Bureau

25 schools in northwest Wisconsin will compete in a regional Olympics of the Mind tournament to be held at UW-Stout Saturday, March 21.

Activities will take place from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Memorial St udent Center.

Participants will have worked on long-range problems in teams of five to seven people before presenting their solutions at the tournament.

About 800 students, coaches, parents and teachers are expected at Stout's regional tournament.

Winners will go on to state competition at UW-Stevens Point on April 4.

A New Jersey-based organization, Olympics of the Mind was organized about nine years ago to encourage creative problem solving. It combines the competitiveness of an athletic event with mental gymnastics for youngsters who solve complex problems with simple materials.

Participation nationally involves 200,000 students from 4,400 schools.

Events at various levels of competition are designed to challenge the students' creativity, team work and flair for the theatrical.

This year's competition will be divided into five areas:

•"Over to the Rescue" will challenge the team to create three live characters and to design and construct a vehicle which will fit into one or two suitcases. The team is to assemble its vehicle, drive, turn, stop and perform specified tasks and then disassemble the vehicle.

•In "Chain Reaction," students use standard mousetraps to case a chain reaction setting off other mousetraps which will accomplish specified tasks such as breaking a balloon, ringing a bell, raising a flag and causing music to begin playing.

•For "Poetic License," students will create a parody, satire or allegory of a poem and present the creation in a live performance.

•"Decision Structure" will challenge the students to design and build a structure using 1/8 inch strips of balsa wood between 9 and 11 1/2 inches high to support as much weight as possible.

•For "Cro-Magnon," the students will create and perform a presenation which takes place during the prehistoric past. The team must also create a tool or untensil of stone or wood and an intrument or tool of bone, as well as a musical instrument.

Bus ambushed

13 people were killed, and more than 25 injured, by five bandits in an ambush on a bus in eastern Kenya last Friday. The vehicle was carrying more than 60 people, mostly traders on their way to a local market.

Nation

Ten sea lions shot

Environmentalists in California wonder whether the killings of ten sea lions is the work of a "lunatic" or a group of frustrated fishermen.

Mary Jane Schramm of the California Marine Mammal Center thinks the shootings, which began in January, could have been done by anyone.

"It could just be some yahoo out there with a gun," Schram said.

Satellite on shuttle

It is planned that the next space shuttle mission, scheduled for February, 1988, will deploy a communications satellite necessary for communicating with the shuttles and other satellites, according to Air Force Lt. Col. Richard Covey.

Covey, who will be the pilot for the flight, claims that NASA is back on track, having recovered from last year's tragic Challenger explosion.

Greenhouse busted

A Minneapolis man was recently arrested and charged with the manufacturing and possession of marijuana with intent to distribute in what authorities claim is the largest and most sophisticated marijuana-growing operation they have ever seen.

An underground greenhouse, which some are referring to as a factory was discovered during the arrest. 549 marijuana plants were confiscated, having a street value estimated at $2.5 million.

Children suspected

Three young boys, ages 7, 8, and 10, are suspected of beating a two-year-old girl to death because they had to change her diaper, authorities in Milwaukee said.

The girl, Erica Whitelaw, who had recently been removed from her 20-year-old mother's custody, died Thursday.

Murdered Heiress . . .

Living Witness

by Dr. Petti Wagner

Murdered Heiress . . . Living Witness is the story of Dr. Petti Wagner, one of the world's most remarkable women.

Dr. Wagner — an heiress to a large fortune — was kidnapped, tortured and murdered for her wealth. Yet, through a miracle of God, she lives today.

The victim of a sinister murder plot, she was beaten, bruised and tortured during a wave of terror that lasted for 10 terrible days. Her jaw was smashed, her left eye knocked out of its socket and pieces of torn flesh hung from her fingers.

Then she was electrocuted and died. A doctor signed a death certificate.

During the after-death experience she spent six wonderful hours with the Lord in heaven. He gave her the choice to remain there or return to earth. With mixed emotions, she chose to return because her work was not finished. The Lord miraculously gave her life back to her.

Dr. Wagner — well known throughout the world — was the inventor of the world's first cold wave permanent and the developer of hydroponics. She holds two Ph.D. degrees, one in psychology and the other in medical research.

Today Houston is number 15 in the nation.

SSA to hold elections, petitions available

by James Falkofske

Elections for the Stout Student Association (SSA) will be held April 6th and 7th. Petitions are now available in the SSA office for persons who wish to have their names appear on the ballot.

The student body at large elects for the four executive and two affirmative action positions.

Executive positions include President, Vice President of Academic Affairs, Vice President of Financial Affairs, and Vice President of Legislative Affairs.

Minority Affairs Senator, and Women's Affairs Senator for the Student Senate are the two affirmative action positions available.

> "...any full time student with a grade point average of at least 2.0"

The President of the SSA chairs the meetings and is responsible for overseeing the workings of the Senate. The president also serves as a liaison between students, faculty and academic staff, administration, and the Menomonie community.

The Vice President of Academic Affairs chairs the committee that works to represent student interests on issues concerning the academic side of student life.

The Vice President of Financial Affairs chairs the Finance committee, which is responsible for the allocation of segregated student activity fees, a sum of over $200,000.

The committee chaired by the Vice President of Legislative Affairs is responsible for keeping students informed on issues that concern them in the legislature on the local, state, and federal levels. In order to better represent the student body, these elected officers are also required to hold office hours in which they meet with students to hear their concerns. The president and vice presidents also receive a salary.

Off-campus students elect 11 representatives- at-large to represent the concerns of off-campus students. These candidates must not live in the residence halls, and they must be attending the university full-time.

During the same election, on-campus students elect the Executive Board of the Inter-Residence Hall Association (IRHA). These positions include president, vice president /treasurer, secretary, National Communication coordinator, and IRHA/SSA Representative.

IRHA Board Members are also paid, receiving half of their room expense.

This year the senate is asking that all applicants for SSA positions fill out an application form which would give interested students information on the qualifications of each candidate. The application asks questions pertaining to the candidate's qualifications, past experience, and employment in relation to the position they seek.

Petitions to run for office are available to any full time student with a grade point average of at least 2.0. Any student wishing to appear on the ballot must receive 100 student signatures on their petitions. Petitions and applications are due by March 24th in the SSA office. PLO official will speak at Stout on "Middle East: War or Peace"

by Tracy Lea Landis

The highest ranking United States based official for the Palestine Liberation Organization will be speaking at the UW-Stout campus on Wednesday, March 25.

Dr. Hatem Hussaini will make a presentation titled "Middle East: War or Peace" in the Great Hall on the Memorial Student Center at 8 p.m. that evening.

Having served at the United Nations and Washington D.C. for the Palestinian Delegation and the League of Arab States, Hussaini lectures extensively on the Arab and Israeli conflict in the Middle East.

He received his doctorate in political science from the University of Massachusetts and has been an instructor of governments and politics of the Middle East, Islamic history and American politics.

Hussaini is presently a professor at the International Studies Center at Shaw University.

The presentation by Hussaini is being sponsored by the University Speakers Series, which is funded through segregated student activities fees.

This event is free to the public and a reception will follow Hussaini's speech.

Advisory Committee encourages student input to improve programs

by Judy Weitzer

In the School of Home Economics, students take an active part in revising, updating and introducing new, innovative ideas into their respective programs through an advisory committee.

The committee, called the Dean's Student Advisory Committee, meets regularly with Dr. Samenfink, Dean of the School of Home Economics.

A major portion of each meeting deals with student opinions and program updates.

"But," said Mary Raymond, committee chairperson, "we cover a wide variety of topics."

In the fall, members of the committee participate in a program called "Reaching Out."

Each representative receives a list of students enrolled in his or her respective program, then goes door-to-door, handing out informational brochures and answering general questions about the program.

"It's a good way for us to get some visibility," said Raymond.

Throughout the year, Raymond said, students are encouraged to talk to their representatives about problems, ideas, or suggestions regarding their programs.

"If students give us feedback, it goes directly to the Dean," Raymond commented.

> "...students should have some input in the way they are taught > —Mary Raymond"

One example of the effect of student input is in fashion merchandising, where a mandatory computer class, suggested through the Dean's Advisory Committee, has been added to the program.

An interest survey developed by the committee concerning student preferences of teaching methods is due to be out in late March.

"We feel students should have some input in the way they are taught," remarked Raymond. Suggestions will be made to the Dean after analyzing the results, Raymond said.

The committee also sponsors an all campus "Spring Fling" the last week of April or the first week in May.

Last year's "Beauty and the Beat" lured people to go outside and be entertained by several bands. The year before, the "World's Largest People Picture" received national recognition. They are still in need of a theme for this year's event.

Committee positions become available when a current member graduates or steps down for some reason. Open positions are listed in Cross Currents, the news publication of the School of Home Economics.

Positions are open to self-nomination. After a primary election by peers, the top three candidates go through an interviewing process, after which the committee makes the final selections.

No formal training is required of committee members.

"We are not program advisors," Raymond stressed. "We can only make recommendations."

Students who would like to voice an opinion can contact Mary Raymond for the name and phone number of their program representative.

Inaction outrages SSA President

by Gretchen Eke

President Paul Nelson of the Stout Student Association (SSA) expressed outrage at the actions of the UW-Stout Faculty Senate during his report to the student governance meeting on Tuesday.

Nelson was reporting on actions taken by the Faculty Senate during its meeting, held earlier in the same day. Nelson told the senators that he had expected the shared governance body of the faculty to act on the matter of student representation on the University Policies Positive Action Committee.

The Positive Action Committee reviews student-initiated complaints against faculty members, conducts hearings and recommends solutions to the Chancellor.

According to Nelson, the SSA brought this issue to Faculty Senate five months ago, and, he said, they have refused to deal with it.

On February 4, Nelson told the senators, a letter was written to Chancellor Swanson, forwarding the request directly to his office.

Nelson said that Swanson then urged the Faculty Senate to vote on whether to include students on the Positive Action Committee at its Tuesday, March 17 meeting.

Nelson said that he was outraged that, though the subject of student representation was on the meeting agenda, Faculty Senate adjourned before it was brought up.

Julie Weiss, vice-president of academic affairs of SSA, said of the Faculty Senate meeting, "When Sedgewick finished his report for the personal policies committee, he was asked if he had anything else to add, and he said, 'No, I have more entertainment later to come.'"

"Contrary to what Larry Sedgewick or the Faculty Senate may think," said Weiss, "I don't see our request as entertainment."

"The leadership of the faculty senate doesn't have the guts to make a decision on this after five months," Nelson said. "I'm personally sick of them jerking us around."

"The faculty and administration are concerned with the split that is apparent between students and faculty," Weiss added. "I think that their unprofessional behavior at the Faculty Senate meeting just made that split even deeper."

In response to this, Nelson said, he had sent a letter to Chancellor Swanson requesting an appeal of the Faculty Senate's refusal to deal with the issue.

"After receiving our letter," Nelson told the senators, "he will have 20 working days to render a decision on this."

In other business, a motion passed unanimously requesting that the Chancellor redefine committee membership of the Student Conduct Hearing Committee.

The motion asks that the Chancellor designate the president of the SSA or their appointee as the chair of the Student Conduct Hearing Committee.

This committee deals with academic and non-academic misconduct. Discussion centered on the issue of the Student Conduct Hearing Committee structure being unfair because it is not chaired by a student.

Opening

"I think we can say that its been a long time in coming, but it brings together all of our work in graphic arts and photography," he added.

Looking back over the changes that have occurred in the graphics department at Stout, the chancellor said, "we've been in this business for probably 75 or 80 years, and we've been in a lot of different facilities, but this is the nicest one imaginable."

The grand opening week festivities continued with Gravure Day on Wednesday.

Grand tour at opening—

Dr. James Herr of the graphics communications department conducts a tour for visitors to the new Communications Technology Building on Tuesday afternoon. Herr shows the tentative position for a new paper cutter during the grand opening day tours.

Research on learning styles shows interesting results

by Stout News Bureau

Dorothy Jensen, professor of apparel, textiles and design at UW-Stout, has two kinds of students in her apparel construction classes. One group puts clothing together by reading the pattern directions and the other studies the picture and resorts to trial and error.

Neither group is smarter than the other. According to the findings of Jensen's research, they simply have different learning styles.

"It's like the kid who can put the train together better than the father," she said. "The kid figures it out practically while the father tries to master the directions."

Jensen's research is based on David Kolb's "Learning Style Inventory," a self-descriptive test that categorizes learning styles into four different areas: concrete experience, reflective observation, abstract conceptualization and active experimentation. Her goal was to see how the learning styles of her students correlated with the learning styles identified by Kolb.

"I wanted to find out in a class that uses both skills and theory if I could identify who does better in skill than in theory," she said.

Jensen explained that in apparel construction classes, students must learn to read complex pattern directions, but they also use their skills in making clothing.

Students of the concrete experience and active experimentation areas are skill-oriented, and Jensen said they are typically women. Since the majority of apparel construction students are women, most of the students Jensen tested were of these two categories.

Students of the reflective observation and abstract conceptualization areas are theory-oriented, and they are typically men.

Jensen said most classes from grade school on up are taught according to the theory-oriented styles, which is unfair to skill-oriented students. For example, she said students who have difficulty following written directions or comprehending textbook material are often wrongly labeled slow or even dumb.

"Teachers put them in this category without realizing that they have learning ability, but not the same learning style," she said.

Jensen tests her students in the beginning and at the end of the course, and when she first began her research, she said she tried to change their learning style and make her students more theory-oriented.

"I found that I had some changes within the students, but they weren't major changes," she said. "It's silly to try to change them. They can't change. Instead, I try to teach to meet the needs of the students' learning styles."

Once she began to concentrate on conforming her teaching style to the students' learning styles, Jensen said her teaching became more effective and her students started performing better.

"I became more aware of the course and the potential of using different methods of teaching, different units within the course that help the students strengthen their learning styles," she said.

Her teaching is a combination of exercises with visual aids and self-production for those who best relate to skills and images, textbook assignments and self-instruction for those who best relate to theory and lecture demonstrations for both.

> ...to meet the needs of the students' learning styles
> —Dorothy Jensen

"That way, you're meeting all of the students' needs all of the time," she said.

Jensen's research is also based on "Your Style of Learning and Thinking: Right, Left or Whole Brain Dominance" by Paul Torrence. She tests her students to see whether they have left brain, right brain or whole brain dominance, which she said affects learning styles.

She explained that the left brain is the location of verbal learning and logical thought and the right brain is the location of creative and intuitive thinking. Most women, and therefore most of Jensen's students, are whole brain, favoring the right.

As with the learning styles, Jensen said that at first she tried to change her students' brain dominance pattern to include more of the left brain's functions, but instead any changes were more toward whole brain. However, upon further research, she determined that they were positive changes.

"It's healthier to be whole brain than to be far left or far right," Jensen said. "Whole brain encompasses more."

Jensen said more teachers are recognizing that students do learn differently and are adjusting their teaching styles to reach more students.

Jensen said she became interested in learning styles and brain dominance after attending a workshop on the topic in 1982. She said she wanted to pursue the issue but at first thought she couldn't because she did not teach a theory-related class.

However, later that year she read an article by Senta Mead in "Homesewing Trade News" that claimed sewing to be a good area for this type of research because sewing is a whole brain activity, requiring both logical and creative thought.

Jensen is continuing her research with a "Learning Style Inventory" computer program which she is using in her Computer Applications in Home Economics course.

Depression women

As part of Women's History Month activities in March, the Women's Studies program at Stout will offer a panel discussion featuring local makers of women's history on the last Thursday of the month.

Community people and the public are especially invited and a tea will be served.

The program will focus on the 50th anniversary of the decade of the Great Depression. Organizers plan to explore ways of remembering and celebrating strength and continuity of women of that time. The program will include presentations by Doris Cronk, Christine Klatt, Olive Jess and Joy Jocelyn.

Rita Van Amber will be autographing copies of her collection of Depression recipes, and there will be displays of Depression Era kitchen artifacts, photos and memorabilia.

The symposium will be held on Thursday, March 26, from 3-5 p.m., in the central exhibit area on the second floor of the Home Economics building.

Student withdraws

Stout student Franz Kniesz has announced his withdrawal from the race for City Council position.

Kniesz said that medical and personal reasons prompted his decision to withdraw.

"My name will still be on the ballot," said Kniesz, "because of procedures and technicalities."

Kniesz wished his previous opponent in the race for votes from Ward IV, Jan O'Neill, "luck and best wishes."

Funds needed

The daughter of an employee of the Advisement and School Relations office at Stout has been afflicted with Guillain-Barre Syndrome, sometimes known as "French polio." The family has incurred medical expenses far above their insurance coverage and efforts to raise funds to help the family are being organized.

Lutheran Brotherhood Dunn County Branch 8648 has been conducting fund-raising activities to assist Brooke Miller, daughter of Robert and Judy Miller. The Lutheran Brotherhood has offered to provide two for one matching funds these projects.

Ideas or contributions can be forwarded to Jack Sampson, Tech Wing Room 115 or Marv Kufahl, Applied Arts Room 114.

Local man charged

A man charged with first degree sexual assault of a UW-Stout student on Friday, March 6, was released from the Menomonie City Jail on bond on Monday, March 16.

Joseph M. Wang, 27, of Chippewa Falls, is charged with the alleged assault of a 20-year-old female student.

The student reported that Wang choked her with his hands and forced her to have sexual intercourse in the Menomonie Farmers Credit Union parking lot.

She also reported that she had met Wang in a bar earlier in the evening.

The bond originally set for Wang was reduced from $5,000 to $2,500 by the Dunn County Circuit Court.

A preliminary hearing in the case has been set for April 27 at 1:45 p.m.

Career planning offers rewards for students

Spring break usually is the time for recreation and a moment or two of reflection on the progress made during the semester.

Break came sooner than usual this year as the first quarter was reduced to seven and a half weeks. Now approximately nine weeks remain to the spring semester.

The disparate lengths of the two spring quarters has been questioned by students and faculty wondering if the second quarter classes offered an unfair advantage over first quarter classes.

Whichever length of quarter you prefer, the reality is that the second quarter offers a little more time than last year for students to get their act together.

If you have yet to start your search for a summer co-op, internship or an entry level job that will assist you toward developing a career, time is running out to avail yourself of the best opportunities.

The career planning and placement office, on the first floor of the administration building, offers a wide range of services to help you make that transition from college to a career which suits your talents and skills.

That first trip to the placement office may seem intimidating. It is indeed a fearful time as you venture out to market yourself among the thousands of students and college graduates trying to earn their way into a career. You need to know what employers are looking for and how to showcase the skills you have which few others can offer.

If you groan about that tuition fee due no later than March 23, you have the motivation to visit the career planning and placement office as the best method to be paid back for the investment you have made in time and money to gain a quality education.

Seeds of Change

Judge ye Not

Gene Emahiser

Looking back over my travels and discussions, the number one response that I have received from convicted souls has to be a half quote from the Bible.

Judge not, lest ye be judged yourselves.

I call it a half quote because the true essence of what Jesus was saying is lost when you remove it from its context.

Do not judge, or you too will be judged. For in the same way you judge others, you will be judged, and in the same measure you use, it will be measured to you.

Matthew 7:1-3

Jesus was speaking here to the Pharisees, a group of self-righteous Jews. They failed to see the sin that was in their own lives and yet still felt that they were qualified to point out sin in others' lives.

Jesus looked upon their hearts and saw that they were in love with themselves rather than God. This was the sin or "log" in their own lives that prevented them from effectively removing the sin or speck from their brothers' life.

Jesus wanted the Pharisees to get right with God so that they could effectively minister to the needs of His people.

God wants us to use the measure or standard that comes from Him. His standard is laid out in the Bible. As long as we are using the Bible as our standard of discernment, we can be assured that we are on solid ground. But, as soon as we put additional burdens or rules and laws on someone, we bring a judgement upon ourself.

As Christians, we should not shrink back from the task of upholding God's standards of holiness, purity, and honesty. This means our own lives first then the rest of the world. God did not save us from our sins just so that we could play church for fifty years and then go to our eternal resting place.

God saved us because:
1) He loves us and
2) He wants the whole earth to filled with His glory and we are the vehicles that he has chosen to use. We are to seek His Kingdom first. His Kingdom are the people that have bowed their knee to Him. We are to continually seek to advance this kingdom and destroy the kingdom of the devil. If you tolerate sin around you, then it only follows that you tolerate sin in your own life, and vice versa. For this reason, most Christians fail to speak out against the sea of sin that has flooded our world.

It is time for the Christians on this campus to rise up. We need to declare war on sin, both in our own lives and in the society around us.

God is looking for a people that will hold their love for God above all else. These people will share God's view of sin; intolerance. They will war against it to the death. In no way will they allow satan to take any more ground in society.

"Shout it aloud, do not hold back! Raise your voice like a trumpet. Declare to my people their rebellion and to the house of Jacob their sins."

Isaiah 58:1

As you can see from this passage, God wants his people to let the world know what His standard is. We must follow some simple guidelines before we proclaim these things to others, however.

1) Make sure your own life is clean. Repent of any area that God has shown you.

2) Use God's standard, not yours.

3) Speak it in love. Remember, the Bible says that it is the kindness of God that brings someone to repentance. The Bible also says that the kingdom of God is not advanced in man's wrath.

4) Always be open to the leading of God. Let Him say and do what ever He wants to through you.

5) Remember above all that Christians are not Gods. We are no better than anyone else. Try to keep the attitude of being a beggar who has found food. All that you want to do is lead other beggars to the same food that you found.

"Do not say I am only a child.' You must go to everyone I send you to and say whatever I command you. Do not be afraid of them for I am with you and will rescue you," declares the Lord.

Jeremiah 1: 7-8

Spotlight/ Natalie Bothwell

Subject: King Arthur, Guenevere, Lancelot, and Theatre at Stout

by Karen M. Heagle

Natalie Bothwell is the director of the University Theatre here at Stout. She has held this position for ten years. The first year she served as assistant to the director, and the second year she took over assuming full responsibility for all aspects of the production. This was extremely demanding on Bothwell. Recognizing this, the department hired a technical director.

A native of western Kansas, Bothwell received her B.S. in theatre education at Kansas State University after attending a community college for two years studying home economics. Bothwell also got her masters degree at Kansas State. She spent her summers with two professional theatre companies.

She has always had a love for the teaching profession. "Ever since I was a young student I've loved the interaction between students and teachers."

Bothwell teaches speech, introduction to theatre, play production, contemporary theatre and a new course - creative dramatics. After receiving a grant from the Academic Staff for Professional Development she took a creative dramatics course in Madison. The speech department allowed her to teach the course as a part of the speech program at Stout. She is very pleased to be teaching it.

Natalie Bothwell

Bothwell is currently directing Camelot, which will open parents' weekend. (The box office will open March 23).

STOUTONIA: HOW ARE TICKET SALES GOING?

BOTHWELL: So far they're going pretty well. Do you want to see? (She has a box full of unopened letters.)

STOUTONIA: WHAT IS CAMELOT ABOUT?

BOTHWELL: Camelot is about King Arthur and the knights of the round table. A love triangle between Arthur, Guenevere, his wife, and Lancelot --if there is any man he'd pick to represent himself as the shining knight of the round table it would be Lancelot. Arthur really loves both of them. To find them together is really tough on him (Arthur). It is also tough on Successfully squashed

The heroic actions of SSA President Paul D. Nelson and his supporters deserve recognition. With cunning and keen political maneuvering, President Nelson successfully squashed those activists from Amnesty International.

I concur with President Nelson, these partisans do not deserve funding. Who the hell do they think they are?

They claim to be pacifists working for the release of prisoners who had the audacity to question governmental policies, and they advocate fair and prompt trials for all political prisoners and an end to torture and inhuman treatment. But, in reality, they are subversives trying to undermine our government's foreign policies.

Long has our government supported the regimes in Chile, El Salvador, Guatemala and formerly Marcos' Philippines. So these governments use terroristic tactics to control their people while amassing considerable wealth for themselves and their friends. These governments are (were) our allies. We must support them or else their countrymen may develop policies which question or confront American views. Just imagine freedom of choice and the anarchy that would create.

Amnesty International's activities interfere not only with the aforesaid governments' abilities to rule, but also our country's policies that economically and militarily support these regimes. Such activity by this organization can only be considered treasonist.

Thank god the Stout student body had the wisdom to elect Paul D. Nelson, we need more representatives like him. Without such leadership, who knows, maybe Amnesty International would have received funding. As a Stout alumnus, I know I would rather have my donations spent on yuppie training (Forensics) than on an organization that works to save lives and promote human rights.

I urge the student body to immediately convey their sentiments to Paul D. Nelson and the student senate members regarding this administration's support of terrorism and inhuman treatment.

Remember Malcom X's immortal words: If you're not part of the solution, then you're part of the problem.

Joel T. Kirchner

Getting the facts?

We're writing this letter in an attempt to inform the Stout community of what we believe to be discrimination on the part of President Paul Nelson and the SSA in their denying of funds to Amnesty International. Twice AI has requested and been denied funds from the SSA. Each time for obscure reasons.

Last fall, AI was denied funds by Nelson and the SSA on the grounds that AI's by-laws do not allow them funding from student governments. According to AI's 1984 campus report, one third of all AI campus groups received the majority of their funding (from their student government).

A few weeks ago, AI again approached the SSA for funding and, once again, was denied. This time, President Paul Nelson claimed that, because of AI's position of opposing the death penalty, it is a partisan group and therefore nonfundable.

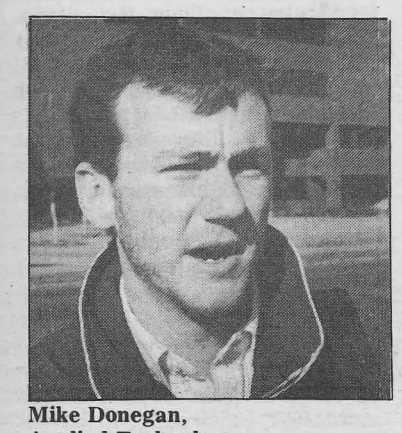
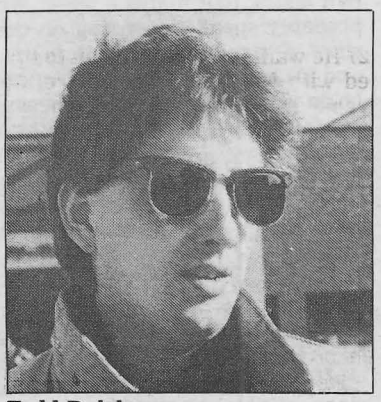
CAMPUS SLANT/ What do you think of the recent crackdown on college parties?

By Brian Kraimer
Photos by Dan Banach



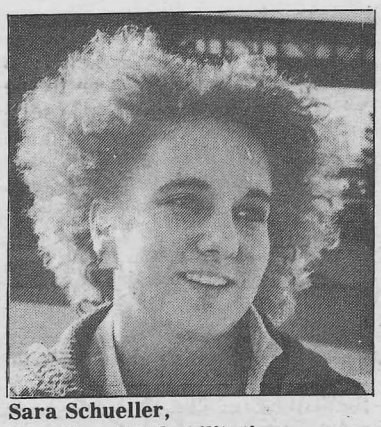
Mike Donegan,
Applied Technology,
Junior,

I do not think it is the greatest but I can see the problem with under age drinking. Parties are great social events. They are better than the bars. So I can see where they want to do it for minors but not really for the party itself.



Todd Dalebroux,
Graphic Design,
Senior,

I think it sucks. I do not think they are doing it the right way. I really do not think that there are enough things to do here in Menomonie. There should be a lot more for the under age drinker to do. I think that Wisconsin is going to go back to the beer bars, like there was in the past.



Sara Schueller,
Vocational Rehabilitation,
Junior,

I went to a lot more house parties last year than this year. I think that is something that they have to do. House parties are a lot of fun and I always enjoyed them. I really do not think the penalty should have to be so great and I think that the people having the party should be warned before they do get busted by the police.

Curtis Carter,
Business,
Freshman,

I see both sides of it and it is kind of a drag. People's parties get busted that I know and they pay for their school with the money they make. On the other hand I see the legal side of it, they are illegal and minors should not be able to drink.

Carla Ahmann,
Early childhood Education,
Senior,

I do not think it is fair. We are at school and we should be able to party. The people who can legally drink should be left alone. The people who have the parties should be responsible for keeping the underage drinkers out of the parties, instead of the police coming in and taking everything.

Bottom Line

Into the Midnight Blue

Rich Brueckner

"You might think that it's much too soon for us to go this far."--Lou Gramm

The vacation on South Padre Island was carefully recorded.

If there was an overall theme to this excursion, it would probably be the words "Sex Bound" which were written on the back window of our RV.

Before I get into the specifics, I guess the highlight for me was meeting a girl who says that she is not concerned about the modern woman's search for orgasm; she just wants to go through the motions.

And to quote Mr. Spock, "That much is certain."

Here are some of the entries from our journal:

"Friday: We're in Oklahoma. It looks like the place they filmed The Day After."

"Can you get AIDS from a mosquito? Yes, God is back and He is NOT happy. Fetus reacts to this idea by mooning a church bus and two women in a red T-Bird."

"There's a busted spring in this cushion that pokes you in the ass."

"The day has been eventful; we squirted and mooned half the rush hour cars in Austin. (Then our fire extinguisher broke.)"

"I can't quite read the speedometer, but if it were a clock, we'd be doing 3:30."

"Friday: We arrive at midnight and are immediately busted by the State Liquor Guys (Texas Liquor Authority). They hauled away two of the three underage drinkers we provided alcohol to and decided to let us go."

"Saturday: We're on the beach. The sun is blinding without my reality screens."

"Sunday: Last night, we met two girls from Arizona who almost got busted for smoking pot in the bathroom of a 727. The smoke set off an alarm."

"Either the beer or these polarized glasses are wrecking my cleavage-vision."

"I think that the disk jockey just announced that the Undertoad is treacherous today. The Undertoad is a nasty sea creature, I guess."

"It just occurred to me that the most intellectual date I've met so far has just been weaned off the Weekly Reader."

"Monday: After a huge Stout party last night, the room still held together. The most debated argument of the day is "Stout girls don't count."

"Tuesday: There's a girl here who philosophizes that life is a phrase you can't decipher without enough money to buy a vowel."

"The Hispanic cleaning ladies had no idea what to make of our beer bong."

"A Stout girl scrawled in our journal last night that she needs a steel cage over her chest. (I'm afraid she might have to wait for the invention of transparent aluminum.)" .

"Yesterday's tumble in the sack has convinced me to stay in the shade; I'm starting to like the pain."

"I was in a car accident yesterday. No one was hurt but you can bet that the Undertoad was lurking near."

"Technology has added new dimensions of possibilities for us Maggots who subscribe to the Chemical Assistance Program."

"Fetus showed us the power-puker. Team bulimia could be America's newest eating disorder. The Heimlich maneuver may never be the same."

"I was having such a good time with my date on the dance floor that two girls came up to us and told us to get a room."

"The face is what keeps it hard."

"Wednesday: Fetus took runner-up in the Mr. Spring Break Contest. Our school pride was saved when Orca took the Laser Tag championship."

"Thursday: Try to imagine a highly anticipated Eddie Money concert on a beach inhabited with 10,000 drunken 16-year-old Mexicans. The highlight of the show was a kite that resembled six sperm cells flying in formation."

A Stout girl with red hair asked not to be mentioned in my article. I can only imagine the anxiety this causes people; Charlie Brown's fascination with the little red-haired girl meets the scourge of yellow journalism.

"Friday: I fear that the rumbling in the distance is either a vice helicopter or Maria's cleaning cart coming up behind us."

"We attended a bikini calendar competition. In between fits of laughter, I feel a certain empathy for these women. The runway to stardom had to face drunks holding signs up for each contestant: "Squid", "Eat more salad" and "Power Tits". "Saturday: We take inventory of the week's encounters as well as the various articles we misplaced. Our group has messed with everything it set out to.

EPILOGUE

This experience seems like it happened in another life. Though the memories may someday fade, this journal will always carry the specters of our journey into the midnight blue.

Lancelot and Guenevere because they love Arthur.

For a long time, they struggle within themselves. When they are caught together Guenevere is sentenced to the flame--she is about to be burned unless Lancelot saves her. It is a beautiful love story.

A lot of the play has to do with trust and loyalty--the honor of being a knight of the round table.

STOUTONIA: WHAT IS THE MUSIC LIKE?

BOTHWELL: The music is very melodic and beautiful. A lot of love songs. You may have heard of, "How to Handle a Woman", "If Ever I would Leave You", "Camelot", " What the Simple Folk Do," and "The Lusty Month of May".

STOUTONIA: HOW MANY HOURS A WEEK DO YOU AND YOUR STUDENTS PUT INTO WORKING ON THE SHOW?

BOTHWELL: We spend a minimum of three to three and a half hours, four nights a week. We probably spend--depending on the show--a straight show 140 hours, and 160 hours in a musical. Not only do you spend the time rehearsing for six weeks, but you're also putting in week ends, and the time it takes to put on make up. It's a time-consuming process; that's why people feel a closeness in theatre.

A director is a person who has to organize everything. Everything flows through the director. You're involved with actors, the musicians, all the head people, and the technical director. It is a lot of coordination.

STOUTONIA: ARE YOU STILL IN NEED OF PEOPLE TO HELP WITH THE SHOW?

BOTHWELL: We can always use more help backstage! We are looking for musicians,(trumpet, clarinet, and percussion), we are also in need of technical help. This weekend we will be working from 9 a.m. to 11p.m. You can get a credit for theatre practicum if you help. We need help.

STOUTONIA: WHAT DO YOU SEE IN THE FUTURE FOR THE THEATRE PROGRAM?

BOTHWELL: My biggest goal right now is to develop a theatre minor. (Separate from the speech minor.) I think we should --there is interest. We are the only campus in the UW system that doesn't have at least a theatre minor.

Theatre, to me, helps each one of the fields. We seem to get people for costumes from clothing textiles and design, construction help from technical areas, and our posters and programs are done by graphic arts majors. So we rely on all these parts of the university to put on a production.

Acting can help anyone. You have poise and confidence you develop on stage that you can carry out in your everyday life and work. Theatre helps students and that is what education is all about.

One of the basic tenets of AI holds that the group not align itself with any political party. It is an absurd notion to think that opposing or proposing the death penalty automatically labels you a Democrat, Republican or any other politic.

We feel that Nelson and the SSA based their decisions on misinformation and at best this makes them an inadequate and inept group of decision makers. If, on the other hand, they made these decisions in spite of the facts, this certainly points to a case of discrimination. For our part, we hope the ACLU takes up AI's case so that once and for all the truth is known.

Lisa McCulloch David Reda

Posturing nitwits

The week before spring break the SSA decided to deny segregated fee funds to the UW-Stout chapter of Amnesty International (AI). In my opinion, they played petty politics with human rights and in so doing have discredited themselves and our university.

As the faculty advisor to AI, I would like to share my personal view of how this situation evolved. It would take a Tower Commission to accurately report the whole story. What follows are those features which seem especially relevant to understanding the controversy.

For the past several years AI has had a small but active chapter on campus, and last semester when the group grew substantially it decided to ask SSA for funds so it could expand its work.

The trouble began when the SSA Finance Committee voted to give us $1,000 rather than the amount we requested, which was something over $2,000. At this point, AI's charismatic president, Ali Vazirabadi, rather unceremoniously admonished the SSA for not being more generous, whereupon they reversed themselves completely and recommended no funding at all. By now, egos were involved and things were being said privately and publicly. It has been a downhill road ever since.

At about this same time, the president of SSA, Paul Nelson, and some others, began spreading false information about AI. The student senators were falsely told that AI's by-laws did not permit it to receive any funds from the SSA. They were falsely told about non-existent AI groups on other UW campuses that did not get funding. They were falsely told that AI was a single purpose organization, whatever that means, and that its international affiliation was somehow a "Pandora's box", etc.

That was last semester; this semester the specious reasoning continued unabated. SSA leaders were now saying that AI's focus did not effect enough Stout students, and that our opposition to the death penalty made us a partisan organization. Needless to say, these notions were all hatched without benefit of input from AI. Only the Shadow knows how much of this baloney was due to ignorance and how much was deliberate.

Not once did I hear of a senator simply admitting that he/she was not interested in human rights, or felt some animus toward an AI member, or maybe had philosophical reservations about the principles of AI. I would have disagreed with these reasons but at least I could have respected the candor of the individual. There was an exception, one sweet young senator wondered if I didn't work for the release of Nazi war criminals!

I appreciate that not all senators were part of the problem and want to thank those who had the courage to resist being swept along. Certainly the majority of SSA senators are decent people who want to do what is right, but they need to wake up and take a hard look at themselves and their leaders. Frankly, in their dealings with AI they came across as arrogant, posturing nitwits who lacked both the integrity and determination to do the job that was entrusted to them. It was not their finest hour.

For our part, I think we learned that AI's mission is not always self-explanatory. We also learned that when asking for money it is okay to be a bit deferential.

Fabricated facts

Your editorial entitled "Voters Beware" (Thur. March 5, 1987) contained several humorous fallacies and would have been much more appropriately placed in your satirical April 1st issue.

Starting at the top, you stated that the most important job of SSA is to approve budgets. This statement would greatly belittle the lobbying efforts through United Council, Local, State, Federal legislators, as well as failing to recongnize programs such as "Bash on the Grass" and the Jill Weber Benefit.

the SSA is also strongly involved in University Standing Committees and is directly responsible for creating policies and procedures for the University. Through efforts of this year's Landlord Tenant representative the city of Menomonie has new ordinances protecting student security deposits. This is only one example of our year-round efforts. How soon we forget?

Your editorial goes on to say that senate behavior was revealed in "Tuesday's minutes." It is wonderful to see that you have several staff members with E.S.P. since the editorial was written 12 days prior to the minutes being typed. Or, perish the thought, were you fabricating what you assumed happened?

I am also curious as to which executive board members told the senators they were not free to amend the recommendations? I sat through the entire meeting and never once heard any references to this. Where you watching reruns of Star Trek while the rest of us were sitting in Senate?

You go on to mention that only two senators were "gutsy" enough to challenge the Amnesty International recommendation. As many well informed senators already know, this ruling on Policy Paper 20 only follows several difficulties we have in funding the Amnesty International organization at this time.

These two gutsy senators were not interested enough to attend budget hearings, speak with the Financial Affairs Committee, or even bring their concerns to the Senators Caucus. Although they had ample opportunity to question these recommendations before hand, they failed to do so. In actively seeking assistance, they could have developed a more appripriate case in support of their interests in th group.

Your attack against Cooperative Programming is also ill-founded. Several groups have made special efforts to convince the Finance Committee of they usefulness of this program. All groups were questioned on the usefulness of Cooperative Programming at Budget Hearings, and no group spoke against the program. The effectiveness of the program has already been evaluated under much scrunity by the Financial Affairs Committee, otherwise the recommendation would have never appeared in the Senate floor.

Finally, and most humorous of all is stating that the senators next year should already be accused of blindly following whatever leadership develops for next year. Since the students of this university elect these representatives, then they have only themselves to blame if such a catastrophe should occur. Yes, it is important to be informed; however, I hope that students will not rely on the information you provide in your editorial.

Some days

Jef Maynard

March Seventeenth is St. Patrick's Day. It is a famous holiday to commemorate the invention of green food coloring. It also serves as another preposterous excuse for pseudo-Irish to get stewed.

March Seventeenth is also Campfire Girls Founders Day, World Maritime Day, and Evacution Day in Massachusetts. I don't think I have ever met a woman who admitted to having been a Campfire Girl. As for Evacution Day, every day should be Evacution Day, maybe two or three times a day for good health. I don't think I could wait a whole year.

On this day in 1845, Stephen Perry, great-grandfather of Aerosmith singer, Joe Perry, patented the rubber band. He thought he had invented the eraser, which could be worn conveniently on the wrist. Many clerks lost circulation in their hands, or got lead poisoning so this use was discontinued. Rubber bands were then only used for their original purpose: to keep condoms in place, which alleviated the more common practice of using thumb tacks.

Another historic event occurred on March Seventeenth. John J. Montgomery of Otay, California, made the first successful glider flight. Later, he combined tobacco and wheat grains in an attempt to create an edible cigarette butt. This became known as Otay Buttwheat.

The first Bowling Tournament for Women was held in St. Louis in 1917. Almost one hundred women registered. Most withdrew, however, when they found out they were to be given away as prizes to the men who won the tournament. The 1918 tournament returned to the more traditional trophies.

This was a great day in Poland, in 1921, when the Polish Parliament, the Kitshin Kabinett, adopted their first constitution. Unfortunately, they adopted the Turkish Constitution and no one could read it so they had to give it back..

Since this is the information age, you may need some facts for later in the week. Today, March Nineteenth:

Traditionally, the swallows return to the Mission at San Juan Capistrano. It does seem a little unnecessary for the birds to migrate from Southern California in the first place but they do. Don't ask me why.

I found this fact: on March Nineteenth, 29,637 B.C. ancestors of the American Indians arrive in Alaska. (They were very disappointed in the lack of hotel accomodations and so continued on to Vancouver.)

Also today, the first American bank robbery was pulled by Edward Smith at City Bank in New York. Why is it that someone "pulls" a bank job? (If you answered "because they need the money," you win a fabulous prize, or an all-expense-paid weekend with Rich Brueckner, which is not a fabulous prize unless you like that sort of thing.)

In 1949, the American Museum of Atomic Energy opened in Oak Ridge, Tennessee on March Nineteenth. It closed on March Twentieth because all the opening day visitors were hospitalized due to the free samples.

On this day in 1956, M. Salazar was reported by the Venezuelan Times to have caught a 283 pound tarpon fish off the coast. (The correction was printed the next day stating that M. Salazar caught a 283 pound tarpaulin, which was part of a large canvas circus tent that had fallen from a ship the week before.

On March Twenty-first, the Sun enters the house of Aries. (Ares moves out complaining about the heat.)

On this day in 1791, in a large ceremony, Captain Hopley Yeaton became the first commissioned Naval officer. The sober moment is disrupted by uncontrollable laughter from audience when they hear the name Hopley Yeaton. They can't believe anyone would name their kid Hopley Yeaton.

One last fact: On March 21, 1843, preacher William Miller, of Pittsfield, Mass. had the population of the US in mass hysterics because it was the day he had predicted for the end of the world. The next morning, jubilation broke out across the country as the prediction turned out to be false. Miller, however was killed when he was run down by a Budweiser wagon. Remember the past, and watch where you are going.

Murals give new look to commons

by Steve Voll

Do you know any jokes (Maynard)?

"Yes, I want to be a comedy writer for David Letterman or Jack Parr. Blah, blah, blah... (I wasn't really paying attention to the beginning. As you thought I was intently listening)...waiter on the menu there was a needle in the soup. Oh no that's supposed to be noodle."

Boy, that's a knee slapper!!!! So, what do you think about Kurt Vonnegut?

(nod, nod, nod) "Most important writer in America."

It's great.

"Great is a big word. It is like the pyramids and the American transportation system."

What do you think about the murals?

"Oh, they are great. All four of them. The spoon with the split pea soup and the ham. You see (Stevie) I'm using you to lie to the public."

Were you a rebel in high school?

(nod, nod) "Yes. I got a D' in typing. Ask me about Harry?"

What about the guy?

"He's great. Real accomodating guy. Nice guy to work for." (Harry hired Maynard for the mural job)(by the way did you ever notice those murals around town?)(Jef is famous)

Yeah. Yeah. We're doing great. What about the paintings in the Commons?

"They are about starving people in Africa and the sewage trough that rivers the stuff to some unkown place. No. They're not about Africa, but the pork chops look like Africa."

> "Great is a big word. It is like the pryamids
> —Jef Maynard"

(Did you ever wonder about the starving people in Africa when you are dumping your tray of food in that river?) How did you get the mural?

"Harry (Aubert, Dir of the Dining Services) sent something over to the ART DEPARTMENT about a mural design. Chris Mount was fabulous help! Make it Arts. A lot more interesting than grizzly bears and graphic design."

(Somehow, Jef got the job) What about the color?

"Warm on one side and cold on the other. Isolated. You know? Putting a painting in there is as good a place as any. Most people don't want to spend time contemplating paintings. Painting has to compete with the rest of the world. Painting is hard to hold up against television. Most people would rather watch TV than watch a painting. I think the attention span of a painting is about 30 seconds."

(TV is for passing time)(If you like to pass your time) Do you like the paintings?

"Yeah. Do you think they are great?"

Yeah.

"Things that come out of Cheerios boxes can't be great."

What do you think about being famous?

"It's great."

Get the notes from somebody else.

Jef Maynard, senior art student, painted these murals in the Merle Price Commons with the help of Chris Mount, another art student.

Maynard's murals can be found throughout the city of Menomonie. Harry Aubert, director of Dining Services chose Maynard to do these murals.

The Lake Street Station has an alternative to "loud jukeboxes and beer spilled all over." Thursday night from 7 p.m. to 10 a.m. the restaurant will present a blues performer. Pictured here is Tom McCausland. McCausland presented several folk songs before an audience of diners a few weeks ago.

Sway to the live folk and blues band at Lake Street Station

by Stephanie Weiss

"We wanted to provide an alternative to loud jukeboxes and getting beer spilled all over," said Jim Buchanon, partner with Lee Shambeau of Lake Street Station.

Buchanon and Shambeau decided to offer more than the regular restaurant fare. Along with a "more ethnic" menu that features creole and mexican dishes, buffalo wings and hamburgers, Lake Street Station has added a live music program.

The program, called Lake Street Blues, will offer people in the area the opportunity to enjoy live folk and blues on Thursday nights from 7:00-10:00. Buchanon said they also hope to have an open-mike night once a month.

There were a couple main reasons Buchanon and Shambeau started Lake Street Blues.

When the drinking age changed from 19 to 21, Buchanon saw the opportunity to increase business and offer people a choice in entertainment.

"Lake Street Blues offers a low-key, relaxing atmosphere where everyone is welcome to enjoy the entertainment without the beer-hassles," said Buchanon.

> "We wanted to provide an alternative to loud jukeboxes...
> —Jim Buchanon"

"We knew the freshman were sort of disenfranchised with the 19-year-old drinking age and even more when it changed to 21," explained Buchanon.

Buchanon and Shambeau also began Lake Street Blues to offer live entertainment to Menomonie residents.

"A lot of people here are bored out of their skulls," said Buchanon, "with Lake Street Blues they don't always have to leave town for entertainment.

The groups and individuals who perform at Lake Street Station do so at no charge and play only for tips.

"I'm left over from the 60s," said Buchanon, "so if we have a good night we'll toss a good chunk into the bowl."

There have been three performances at Lake Street Station so far. The most recent performers were Tim Haub and Chuck LeMonds on March 12.

"The show went really well considering Menomonie is a ghost-town during break," exclaimed Buchanon.

Although Buchanon presents Lake Street Blues as an alternative to the bars, they do serve some domestic and imported beers as well as other beverages.

Tom McGlaskin and Darcy Haughian will be performing folk and blues at Lake Street Station tonight (Thursday, March 19) from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Anyone interested in performing at Lake Street Station is welcome to call Jim Buchanon at 235-7724.

ATTENTION SENIORS
A SPECIAL NOTE FROM THE GRADUATE OFFICE

A HEAD START ON YOUR GRADUATE WORK:
Graduating seniors who need from 1 to 15 hours to complete their bachelor's degree work and who apply for one of UW-Stout's graduate degree programs have an opportunity to get a head start on graduate work at Stout. It is possible to enter the Graduate College on a dual level basis. This means that those students otherwise eligible for graduate work may take courses at the graduate level to bring their total load to a maximum of 16 credit hours during the semester in which graduation will take place. Dual level students are eligible only as program students.

Tuition for the senior semester remains the same as for other senior undergraduates. Start early by calling at the Graduate College, phone 715/232-2211, for information and various forms. These must be filled out to permit processing of your application. Upon completion of processing (about 30 days), you may obtain your Graduate Permit to Register and advice from the appropriate Graduate Program Director to select courses that will lead toward your graduate program.

Legislation requires a non-refundable application fee of $20.00 of all applicants for admission to graduate study in UW-System universities.

Applications for admission will not be processed until the application fee and all forms have been received by the Graduate College. Check or money order should be made out to UW-Stout and remitted to the Graduate College, University of Wisconsin-Stout, Menomonie, WI.

REGISTRATION INFORMATION FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS

FIRST: Permits to Register for eligible students will be available from their graduate program directors starting March 16. See your graduate advisor (program director) to obtain your Permit to Register and class cards and receive assistance in completing your schedule. This advisement may take place any time after the class schedules are announced. (Class schedule books will be available on March 16 in your residence hall or at the Information Desk of the Student Center). Graduate students may register for a maximum of 16 credits per semester.

Students for whom the program directors do not have a Permit to Register should stop at the Graduate College Office between 9 a.m. - 11:30 a.m. beginning March 26.

International students whose program directors do not have their Permits to Register must call at the Graduate College Office between 9:00 - 11:30 a.m. to see the Admissions Examiner.

(Issuance of Permits and registration dates do not necessarily coincide).

Be sure to review your degree progress according to the Student Progress Sheet which is on the inside cover of your Graduate Bulletin. Don't hesitate to call at the Graduate College if you need additional information and instructions.

Some graduate students are now at the point at which they should be applying for admission to candidacy. If you have completed 6 hours of graduate work, call at the Graduate College Office to obtain the information and forms needed to apply for candidacy. This should take place before applying for a Permit to Register.

THEN: Take your PERMIT TO REGISTER and SIGNED PROGRAM CARD to the Registration and Records Office according to their schedule. (Your advisor will keep one of the program cards).

Pick up a copy of your schedule in lobby of Bowman Hall. Students who found conflicts or closed sections in their schedules may make changes on the above dates.

Printmaking Instructor Paul Delong recently exhibited a show of his work entitled, "Past Investigations and Present Inquires". The show at Henri Gallery in Washington D.C. was held from January 10 to February 4, 1987.

Delong's recent works shown in Washington, D.C. gallery

by J. Dauplaise

Assistant art professor, Paul Delong, had an exhibition of recent work displayed at the Henri Gallery of Washington, D.C. The exhibition was held from January 10th to February 4th, 1987. The exhibit, titled "Past Investigations and Present Inquiries", selected work completed since 1984.

The pieces included works on paper done in mixed print media of and on handmade paper and a series collages. Describing these works Delong stated that "All are structured around diaphanous and atmosphere fields where more solid, rectilinear forms are stationed and scattered, lyrical bits of delineation move in and out of space."

The gallery owner in Washington D.C. was introduced to Delong's work through a collector who had formerly lived in Madison. Reacting positively towards the pieces and slides which were shown, the gallery then invited Delong to show his work there and to be represented by that gallery in the Washington area.

> "I strive to have each image possess its own confidence beyond me
> —Paul Delong"

Delong teaches printmaking classes in the areas of silkscreening and lithography. He also instructs students in Studio Art and Art Education in his Practice of Art and Senior Seminar classes.

Delong had this to say about his work; " I like to think of my work as being Romantic, while also functioning on a more minimalistic and formal basis. I try to have this balance between the more formally abstract and the inferred representation work. Above all, I strive to have each image possess its own confidence beyond me- that each image might stand alone as an archetype to itself."

A Woman's Life and Love—

Stout music professor, Dennis Siebenaler, presented a recital entitled, "A Woman's Life and Love," with vocalist Juliana Schmidt of Menomonie. The recital was presented to the community March 16 in the Great Hall.

Robert Schuler of Stout's English department provided a commentary to the program which included three musical cycles, "Frauenliebe and Leben" (Woman's Life and Love) by Robert Schuman, "Fiancailles Pour Rire" (Whimsical Bethothal), by Francis Poulenc, and songs and poems by Emily Dickenson arranged by Aaron Copland.

"Ghost Story" brings style to movie screen

by Mark Graham

In "Ghost Story", director John Irvin (his second time directing a major motion picture) brought Peter Straub's best selling novel "Ghost Story" to the screen with style. This good novel was transferred to just a very simple ghost tale by screenwriter Lawrence D. Cohen. Cohen left out most of the horrifying and shocking parts from the novel, but this was overcome by four veteran actors.

The casting is supreme, and the movie's glory is in the performances of Fred Astaire, Douglas Fairbanks Jr., and the late Melbyn Douglas (whose last film this was.)

The story involves four old New England codgers who have formed a club, they call the Chowder Society, to tell each other some of the most spine-tingling ghost stories ever told. The four old men are sharing the guilt of an unholy affair that happens with a mysterious woman in their youth. She comes back to haunt the four old men and their families.

Craig Wasson, who has a dual role as Fairbank's twin sons, is going through a similar ordeal. The two affairs are connected.

The setting of the "Ghost Story" helps separate it from the gruesome horror film of today. The beautiful New England village and old, haunted Victorian house gives the film the touch of the old horror stories told with all sorts of skeletons leaping out of closets. The last six minutes of "Ghost Story" are the scariest scenes in the whole film.

The movie "Ghost Story" will be shown in the Student Center on March 18, 1987 at 7 and 9:30 p.m. The film is sponsored University Cinema.

One Point Perspective

Bread and Oysters

Jean-Marie Dauplaise

While eating leftover tuna casserole this evening, my thoughts returned to the culinary delights I enjoyed during spring break. During my brief sabatical from the rigors of academic life, I was free to indulge in one of my best loved creative activities, cooking.

Instead of frantically sprinting to The Pawn for a tasty sandwich individually and hermetically sealed in its own plastic container, I could shop with premeditation, hand selecting the very ingredients with which I would create my culinary masterpieces. I also freely accepted parental donations, which, at mom's disbursement consisted of a huge cardboard box heavily laden with a wondrous variety of food.

Like my mother, I tend to cook for at least five times as many people than will actually be consuming what I prepare. Last Monday evening I served a dinner for two which consisted of grilled trout, grilled onions in butter and herbs, grilled potatoes served with mushroom sauce, beef tortellini in a tomato basil sauce smothered in melted mozzarella, garlic bread and a spinach salad. Mom donated the salad.

The leftovers from this feast traveled from Brule to Superior, WI, crossed the Minnesota border to Edina, then safely landed in Menomonie and are currently settled in the refrigerator. I intend to dispose of them soon.

In my estimation, it is necessary to love food before one can cultivate a love for cooking. My sibling's love for chocolate chip cookies drove him, at the tender age of 10, to master the art of cookie making and baking. I am also humble enough to concede that in that category he defeats me. I dare him, however, to top my curried pork stir fry or my most guarded secret recipe for shrimp in champagne sauce.

I have yet to see bologna devotees scrambling to their Cuisinarts. In fact, I feel safe in assuming those content with bologna on Wonder Bread and macaroni and cheese on a daily basis will never own or care to own a Cuisinart. For the time being I make do with a blender and a variety of utensils I've either pilfered or purchased through the years.

I often wonder if I love food too much, however, when the makings for one meal soars into triple digits. I believe I do get my money's worth from my shopping expeditions though. I doubt if few others have prodded, squeezed and smelled virtually the entire produce department at Don's.

My cooking endeavor's in Menomonie have, on occasion, nearly driven me to tears. Does fresh coriander exist anywhere in this town? Thankfully, the Menomonie Food Co-Op sells saffron or I may have transferred to another university more accessable to the ingredients I crave.

Although I do love food and love to cook, I cannot honestly say I love all food. I hate ketchup, pickled herring, pickle relish, lutefisk and beets. I avoid eating Cheetos because they are of a color not found in nature, and refuse to sample even the tiniest portions of pickled pig's feet or head cheese for obvious reasons. I do not eat eggs because I once got food poisoning from an omelette in a restaraunt and have unpleasant memories regarding that experience.

I will eat squid, oysters, snails, asparagus, artichokes, broccoli, zucchini, morels, kiwi fruit, lamb, veal, swordfish, eggplant, and sushi, all of which I have seen friends and relatives balk at.

Regardless of my zealous love of food and preparing it, I occasionally experience inexplicable cravings for fast food. I secretly suspect these foods are laced with time released chemicals which induce severe withdrawal symptoms and lead the victim to drive to any length to obtain a fix.

On the way back from Iowa City, we experienced a McDonald's craving. We searched for over an hour in three different towns before we found one. I was amazed at how many McDonald's restaurants you see while driving until you actually want to find one.

Shortly before we crossed the Iowa-Minnesota border, I noticed a billboard extolling "Borderline Pizza, -the best pizza in Iowa". Frankly, regardless of how hungry I was, I doubt I could bring myself to dine at any eating establishment with "borderline" in its name.

Twist and Shout

Oh No Another Record Review

Bill Krueger

You're probably saying to yourself "Oh No another record review". Well I hate record reviews probably more than you do. All you ever get is a one sided opinion from somebody that has their mind made up before they even listen to the record.

I'm gonna tell you what the record sounds like and not just say if I like it or not because what do you care what I think. I'll also try to get a variety of albums reviewed. I don't know to much about writing but I do know a lot about music so trust me.

BOSTON
Third Stage

How can a group take six years to record one album? I don't know, but, Boston did it. The album is an all-analog album which didn't use any orchestral instruments or synthesizers but you would think so when you listen to it. In one song "The Launch" it sounds like an airplane taking off. But, these guys used a busted amplifier to produce the sound instead of a synthesizer.

Boston uses just straight ahead rock-n-roll equipment and a rockman, which is a amplifier the size of a cablebox and puts out 100 watts of power.

They also use about five different pianos and organs along with their basic guitar, bass and drums.

Brad Delp, lead voclist, shows that his voice hasn't lost anything over the years. Tom Scholtz, who is guitarist and backbone behind the band, wrote most of the songs. Each song has a story behind it and they all have message Scholtz is trying to say.

The guitars have a lot of tracking to them and come out sounding pretty good. All of the reviews I read about the album put it down but, after listening to the album it shows that all the work these guys put in to it payed off. The album sounds like the first two albums but with a newer feel to it. If you liked the first two albums your going to like this one even more.

CINDERELLA Night Songs

After being named runners up for the best new american band and the worst new american band by Rolling Stone Magazine Cinderella just released their third single from their debut album.

The first two singles "Shake Me" and "Nobody's Fool" did pretty good on the charts and the third one "Somebody Save Me" is starting to climb. These three singles all have videos on MTV that portray the famous Cinderella story.

The rest of the album sounds like the first two singles but with different words.

Tom Keifer, lead vocalist, has a cross between Brian Johnson of AC/DC and a Steven Tyler of Aerosmith voice. Jeff LaBar, lead guitarist, plays your basic heavy metal cords and has some good original leads. The bass playing adds a good feel to the song but with little variation. The drumming is pretty basic. It has your basic hard driving heavy metal feel to it.

Andy Johns, producer and engineer, mixed the album well. The tracking is done with extreme precision like that of early Boston albums.

For a heavy metal album its not to bad. Its probably one of the better albums done by a new metal band. If your used to listening to groups like Scorpions, AC/DC and Motley Crue theres a good chance that you'll like this album.

"Salty Dog Surfers"??

Denise Cain

Before Spring Break every female at UW-Stout was on a diet. A diet that would make them into that Wisconsin Bathing Beauty that men from around the world yearn for 51 lonely weeks out of the year.

In anticipation of the Padres, Stout women were frantically running to Dick's and Lammer's for rice cakes and low-calorie Hi-Life ice cream. There was a sudden surplus of peanut butter on the shelves.

All of the Wisconsin television stations featured Gut Buster commercials continuously. Females were tramping over one another in K-Mart trying to get to the Dexitrim special. Alma's tanning featured Happy Hour from 3 to 5:00 a.m.

Menomonie was not a pretty sight. I was happy to leave the high pressure community for a more relaxing Melbourne Beach, Daytona Beach and Orlando. In Florida I focused my attention off meals and on men.

I had heard of the Salty Dog Surfers down South, their bodies, and their parties. I waited for them in anxious anticipation. I waited and waited and waited. Perhaps the stories of the Salty Dogs were fested by lonely Stout woman.
To say the least, I was very disappointed. The only day I got to meet any surfers was Saturday, two hours before I left for the airport. They so much as guessed I was from Minnesota, my California tan gave me away.

I tried to create some interest by indicating my enrollment at a Wisconsin university. It just did not go over. As long as I was not a native Wisconsin woman, they just were not interested. So I came back to Wisconsin alone, land of farmer's tans and canoers.

This week's articles are for those women (and men) who want to get back in shape and off rice cakes. The first recipe is the easiest and best spinach salad I have ever tried. Other greens may be used if spinach is not available.

Spinach Salad (two servings)

16 spinach leaves, dried and torn into bite size pieces
4 stalks celery, diced
2 tomatoes, cut in wedges
8 broken slices bacon, fried and broken into small pieces
2 oz. cheddar cheese, cubed.

Toss ingredients with mayonnaise and place in a salad bowl. Serve with French bread or crackers.

Pasta and Pepper Salad

1 lb. small shell macaroni water
1 cup olive oil
2/3 cup white wine vinegar
2 Tbsp. dry basil
2 cloves garlic, pressed or minced
2/3 cup grated parmesan cheese
1/4 to 1/2 Tbsp. pepper
1/4 cup chopped parsley
2 large red and green bell peppers, diced salt to taste

Cook pasta in 4 quarts boiling water, 10 minutes, drain. In large bowl, stir together olive oil, vinegar, garlic, cheese and peppper. Mix in pasta and add salt to taste. Cover and chill at least four hours. Shortly before serving, stir in parsley and diced peppers. Makes 3 quarts or 12 servings.

Of course no diet is complete without cheating so here is my favorite recipe for cookies.

Oatmeal Chocolate Chip Cookies

1 cup margarine
1 cup brown sugar
1 cup white sugar
2 eggs, beaten
2 Tbsp. water
1 tsp. vanilla
1 tsp. soda
1 tsp. salt
2 cups flour
3 cups oatmeal
2 cups chocolate chips

Cream together margarine, and sugars. Add eggs, water and vanilla. Add dry ingredients, sifter together. Add oatmeal and chocolate chips. Bake in a 350-degree oven until golden brown, 10-12 minutes.

Gymnasts ranked 10th at national meet

by Cosmas Whitten

Gymnasts traveled to Hays, Kansas to compete in the NAIA national meet held on March 6. Gymnasts were ranked eleventh going to the meet but came out tenth with their season's highest score of 126.50.

Winona State won the meet with 139.30 followed by Georgia's, Centenary college with 138.75. UW-Oshkosh took third with 136.75.

The host team, Fort Hays State took forth with 135.65. Fifth place went to Minot State located in North Dakota, 135.50. Sixth to Georgia College, 134.90.

UW-Lacrosse took seventh with 130.55. Southern Utah followed with 129.65. Adams State placed ninth with 128.90.

Stout placed above Valley City, North Dakota, 125.60 and UW-Superior, 118.00. UW-Eau Claire and UW-River Falls were both eligible to attend the meet but chose not to.

Stout started the meet out on the uneven parallel bars. First up for Stout was freshman Kelly Kramer, hitting her routine she scored a 5.80. Senior Cosmas Whitten was up next scoring a 6.20.

Sophomore Kim Nelson went third scoring a 7.60. Senior Tammy Dennis performed next scoring Stout's high of the day 7.95 ranking number 41 in the meet. Sophomore Patti Roenitz was the final performer for Stout with a score of 7.90.

"Beam was a good event for us. Everyone did a good job. This event has saved us many times this year," commented Head Coach John Zuerlein.

Kelly Kramer was up first scoring a 7.00. Cosmas Whitten followed scoring a 7.65. Sophomore Carolyn Bjerke had a no fall routine scoring a 7.60. Freshman Jodi Schaefer performed fourth scoring a 6.65.

Freshman Michelle Scott had the high score on beam for Stout with a 8.25 to place number 19. Scott missed finals by only one tenth of a point.

The final performer for Stout was Patti Roenitz who performed the second no fall routine for Stout. Roenitz was underscored with only a 7.90.

"Patti Roenitz had a cold and sore throat which greatly affected her performances. She may have peaked at Conference which was ok but too early in terms of nationals," said Zuerlein.

"Floor was also very strong in spite of some gross errors in judging. This event has also been a lifesaver for us," said Zuerlein.

Kim Nelson started the team off right scoring her personal best of 8.00. Nelson has improved by almost two points this season on floor.

Carolyn Bjerke was pleased with the 8.10 that she received on floor. Michelle Scott on the otherhand was not pleased with her score. Scott usually scores in the 8's, at this meet she hit what she felt was her best routine and was underscored with a 7.85.

Kelly Kramer performed well scoring an 8.45. Cosmas Whitten scored Stout's highest with an 8.65 missed finals by five one hundredths of a point. Last up for Stout was Roenitz who was again underscored with an 8.10.

The final event for Stout was the vault. "Vault was scored a bit lower than in past meets, but consistent with what we usually do," commented Zuerlein.

Kim Nelson has not been vaulting in the past couple of meets. She did at nationals and scored a 7.55. Michelle Scott followed with a 7.60. Kelly Kramer went third scoring a 7.95. Cosmas Whitten performed fourth scoring an 8.00.

Carolyn Bjerke scored a disappointing 7.85. Bjerke had been scoring high 8's during the entire season. Patti Roenitz lead Stout on vault scoring an 8.35 to place number 35.

Gymnasts walked away from their final meet with something to proud of. According to their Coach, John Zuerlein, "This has been one of the most enjoyable and determined teams I have ever coached."

Men's track team places second at WSUC track & field indoor meet

by Denise Cain

The UW-Stout Men's Track Team proved to be Stout's best as they placed second out of nine teams in the WSUC Track & Field Indoor Meet March 13 and 14 at La Crosse. It was the highest finish in the conference for any Stout athletic team this season.

The Blue Devil Men scored 105 points landing them a second place finish behind UW-La Crosse. The 105 points scored by the Men's team set a school record at Stout for the most points earned at any indoor meet. The second place finish achieved at the conference meet tied the highest finish of any indoor or outdoor track team from Stout.

The second place finish was not an easy feat accomplished by the tracksters. Disappointments occurred Friday when hopefuls Scott Romenesko, a pentathlon and pole vault standout, pulled a hamstring; and Brian Kohls, a 60 yard high hurdler, false started. The Men's Track team was seated in fourth place at the end of the first day of events.

The Blue Devils pulled together as a team Saturday in an attempt to pick up Friday's slack. "Everybody was competing, the kids realized they could finish second," said Head Coach Steve Terry.

Paul Bons finished strong for Stout as he took home a first place finish in the 1000 yard run in a time of 2 minutes, 17 seconds. Bons continued to prove his strength as he ran the two mile run in 9 minutes, 9 seconds, earning him a second place finish. Bons received third place for his 15:00.90 time in the 5000 meter run.

Junior Dan Doucette broke a Stout school record in the 220 yard intermediate hurdles at the conference meet. Doucette's 25.2 second finish landed him a first place finish in the WSUC. Brian Kohls followed Doucette to the finish line in the 220 hurdles as he placed second in the conference with a time of 25.9 seconds.

Doucette seemed excited about the team's performance as he stated, "I am very happy and excited about our conference finish. There was a real sense of team togetherness at the meet. We could feel the energy as everyone was pumped up to do their events."

Steve Hoeschele also accomplished a first place finish as he coasted through the 600 yard run in a time of 1 minute, 14.49 seconds. Not far behind Hoeschele in the 600 was Stout's Jeff Fimreite as he ran the event in 1 minute, 16.51 seconds, earning him a fourth place finish.

In view of the conference meet, Hoeschele said, "Everybody came together as a team at the right time. During every race the team members were encouraging and supporting each other. We knew we had the talent to achieve our goal of second place."

Mike Todey surprised the conference as he popped in a second place finish in the 880 yard run in 1 minute, 58.90 seconds. Todey was seated ninth in the conference prior to Saturday's competition.

When asked about the team's strong finish in the conference, Head Coach Steve Terry commented, "The athletes had to do alot of self-coaching on their own this season because of a severe lack of coaches. In this respect, it was really THEIR team. They took pride in that fact and came through to be the best in the history of Stout Track."

The WSUC Indoor Conference meet marks the end of the indoor track season, however it does not end the goals of the Men's track team. With the outdoor season underway the team is focusing on their first outdoor meet March 28 at Oshkosh.

When asked about the goals for the outdoor season, team leader Dan Doucette commented, "Our conference finish has given us a real good outlook for the outdoor season. We are placing our goals higher."

Senior Steve Hoeschele added his views for outdoor, stating, "Our goal for outdoor track is to do no worse than second place. We want to prove to people that our indoor finish at conference was not a fluke; that we are worthy of second place."

Junior Dan Doucette runs the 220 yard intermediate hurdles finishing first with a time of 25.2 seconds, a new Stout record.

Retirement in the Twilight Zone

Cosmas A. Whitten

I was running late for class, as usual. I walked past the same old bush that I always walked past. This time it was different. I stopped and looked around then suddenly I was gone.

It was all a vague memory to me. I was standing on a balance beam, just standing there. What is going on. I felt a presence, someone I believed I should know but did not. Then it hit me, could it be. I was an actress in someone's mind. I was reliving their past. I had no control over anything. I had to act out what had already happened. I could not change history.

Above me I heard a voice. It was the person whose mind I was in. They were thinking and I could hear their thoughts...

"Was it worth it? I was physically and mentally scarred. To this day my elbow does not straighten. And look at me there, just standing on the beam afraid to try something new. I was overcome with fear, allowing fear to defeat my own purpose. There were rewarding times too."

Suddenly I was spinning through the air. Tumbling in a gymnastics meet. I knew the move well, I myself once did it. Upside down, I looked to my right. I saw a team watching with smiles. I couldn't pick out individual faces. I wish I could then maybe I could have understood where I was.

I finished a twist and felt my body descending downward. My feet touched the earth for a brief moment and I was back in motion. Then I heard the voice...

"Yes, it was worth it. The good memories always will overshadow the bad ones. I met so many wonderful people I otherwise would have never even known existed, and they knew me. I conquered my dreams. I made the things I only imagined become a reality."

The floor routine was finally done. I saluted the judge for what I thought was maybe the last time. I walked off the mat and toward the team. I felt a sense of accomplishment. The faces were beginning to look familiar but suddenly I was gone.

I was thrown out of the mind and onto a wooden floor. I looked up and saw an old women sitting in a chair.

"You are in a retirement home," she said. I looked around, there was nothing in the room, nothing on the walls.

The old lady spoke, "I have nothing to show for my accomplishments but I have my memories. I can hardly walk now but in my mind I can relive the days when I could fly.

I thought to myself, what is she talking about. "The day come for all athletes, the final performance. All thing must end. Life goes on though with new dreams to conquer," the old lady said.

Suddenly I saw it. Four holes were in the old woman's knee. I strained to see her face, look into her eyes. Who is she?

There was a sudden clap of thunder and I was lying under a bush in Menomomie, the one I walked by. Many people were standing around me. "Who is she?", they said.

I looked at my watch. I missed class. My teacher will never believe this one.

Blue Devil baseball team 3-10 after southern springbreak swing

by Chris Riba

Eventhough the 3-10 record isn't very impressive, the Blue Devil baseball team had many good things come out of the spring break southern swing to Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama.

Many key players were lost from last years 23-16 Blue Devils squad. "We went down south not knowing how good our pitching staff was or who was going to play shortstop, second base or right field", said coach Terry Petrie, "I was happy with the pitching", he continued.

The other positions that were questionable are now filled with freshmen. In their first game of the northern season, which is Monday at the Metrodome with St. Thomas, Mark Crandell from White Bear Lake, Minn. will be starting at shortstop, Dave Niehoff, from Park Falls, Wis. will be starting at second, and Jay Thompson from Cazenovia, Wis. will be holding down the spot in right.

"We learned a lot, we learned from our mistakes", said Petrie. The young middle infielders, Niehoff and Crandell, were "talked to just about every inning", said the Blue Devil skipper.

The Devil's hurlers also gave Petrie a pleasent surprise. Junior Dave Crabtree, sophomore Gary Busch and junior college transfer Lionel Gaston picking up a win each.

The offensive attack was lead, not surprisingly, by co-captain and starting catcher Jeff Kloes who had a team leading batting average of .395 (15 for 38) including 2 doubles, 3 homers, 4 RBI's, 7 walks and only 1 strike out while playing in all 13 games.

Robert Effinger, the designated hitter, lead the team in homers with 4 and in RBI's with 12 while only playing in 9 games due to illness the last 2 days of the trip.

Third baseman Karl Drezek hit .389, second highest on the squad, and led the team in walks by collecting 11 free passes.

As a whole the team hit .275, scored 56 runs and hit an impressive 15 home runs. "15 homers is not the school record, but when you play against the level of pitching we did and in their large parks it is a very good amount", said Petrie. On last years trip the Devil's smashed 12 roundtrippers.

If the 3-10 record, which could have been bettered if 6 games had not been rained out, is deceiving due to the extremely high quality of play in the south. "They do a lot of things that teams up here don't", said Petrie, "they really like to run."

Of the 13 games 7 were played against NCAA division 1 schools and the other 6 were against NCAA division 2 schools both of which can offer athletic scholarships. "They've got the money to offer, so they get the players", said Petrie of the recruiting.

The only game Stout was shut out on was played on the last day of the trip. "We were tired", said Petrie, and rightly so after all of the hours spent on the bus traveling to games.

The Devil's next game is Monday March 23, against St. Thomas at the Metrodome with a 2:30 game time. Mike Charbonneau is the scheduled starter, but a lot of people will be seeing time on the mound.

The home opener for this eager club, is Saturday April 4 against conference foe Eau Claire with a 1:00 game time.

So get on out and catch some great weather and great Stout Blue Devil baseball.

Athlete of the week: Patti Roenitz

by Darron Vanman

Name: Patti Roenitz

Sport: Women's Gymnastics

Year: Sophomore

Major: Business

Latest Accomplishments: All-conference and All-district teams

Coach: John Zuerlien

Athlete's Statistics:

Patti Roenitz earned first place on the balance beam on her way to a second place finish in the all around competition at the WWIAC conference meet. Patti then traveled to Pennsylvania on Feb 26-28 to compete in the NCGA National meet where she placed eighth in the all-around. Patti performed well at the NAIA National meet despite a cold as she earned the Stoutonia's athlete of the week.

Coach's comments:

Roenitz finished the season with the team high of 303 points. Senior Cosmas Whitten was close behind with 281.

Coach Zuerlien related that Patti severed her interior knee ligament as she dismounted from the balance beam at last year's NAIA National meet. Patti started this year's season gradually, but at the third meet Patti tied the school record with a 33.85 point total in the all-around.

Coach Zuerlien said, "Patti did extensive strength building for her quads and hamstrings last summer. We had to change her routines and skills to eliminate twisting moves. The additional strength building to compensate for the lost interior ligament."

He added, "Patti had a really significant season considering her injury. It showed that she is capable as a high level gymnast (Division II and III). She made the comeback this year, and should have a pretty good year next year."

Athlete's History:

As Coach Zuerlien said, "Patti is an athlete from the word go."

Patti has been a part of gymnastics since she started classes when she was 11. From there she competed with a club in high school. Asked if being on a team at Stout makes difference, Roenitz replied, "It gives me something to work for."

Roenitz has stayed in gymnastics because of the discipline and experiences it provides. Roenitz said, "It helps me deal with things like stress, and gymnastics is fun."

Patti Roenitz wants to make it through the next two years with her missing ligament and possibly make All-American next year.

Men's tennis team finish 7-3 in Orlando, Florida

by John Pelishek

Continuing to prove they're for real, Stout's men's tennis team went an impressive 7-3 against competitive Division I and II schools while enjoying sunny Orlando, Florida over spring break.

The tennis team stayed at a world class tennis resort called Orange Lake in Orlando that also housed the schools they played against. According to Tennis coach Bob Smith, it made it convenient to play their opponents and the facilities were excellent.

> "They sure help put Stout on the map —Coach Smith"

The tennis team opened their weeklong series of matches by going an impressive 6-3 over the University of Central Florida. Men's tennis coach Bob Smith said, "The Central Florida matches were very close and considering we just got off the plane and played, I was real happy with the results."

The following day the netters played Belmont Abbey and won 7-2 where four of the matches won went to a close three sets. Number 2 doubles Tony Snoeyenbos and Mike Friedman, who went 7-2 as a doubles team, outdid their opponents Tom Mitchel and Jim Greco of Belmont Abbey, 2-6, 6-4, 6-3.

"Having the players play as well as they did against such fierce competition as they did is outstanding," said Smith. "It made you feel great. They sure help put Stout on the map."

Indeed they did, by winning 7 of 10 matches against teams that offer scholarships unlike non-scholarship Division III schools like Stout.

Stout's tennis players, who develop their games through hard work under the guidance of Coach Smith, pay for their own travel expenses, tennis equipment, apparel and so on.

The trip was all business as the players rose early and played two matches each day with an average of three hours per gruelling match.

Several players had a productive week like Tony Pheipher who had an exceptional 8-3 record in singles and 4-0 in Doubles play. Tony, mentioning that the trip was all business said, "The courts were the best I ever played on and the week there was fantastic."

Other players playing well were Todd Trabant with a 6-1 singles record and Mark Paine at 8-3.

This weekend the netters will be playing against Duluth, North Dakota and Michigan Tech at the University of Duluth in Minnesota.

"We'll see what will happen this weekend against those schools after a not too shabby performance in Florida," said an encouraged Coach Smith.

Centaurs rugby club prepares for this year's spring season

by Slash La Freniere

If baseball is a sport for the summer, and football is a sport for the fall, then rugby must be a sport for all seasons. The UW-Stout Centaurs rugby club is currently preparing to play a seven game spring season. Previously, the rugby club competed in an eight game fall season and they were also in two winter tournaments.

The spring season for the Centaurs begins March 28th when they will travel to Dubuque, Iowa. On April 4th of parents weekend, the Centaurs will face Carlton College of Minnesota here at Stout.

The remainder of the spring schedule will feature home games vs. Northern Michigan University, UW-La Crosse, and UW-Eau Claire. Road games will be against Ripon College and the Black and Blues city side of Milwaukee on May 9th to close out the season.

Rugby matches are 80 minutes long, consisting of two 40 minute halves and a five minute half time. The action is non-stop and during a game a player is likely to run six miles and sustain many hits to the body. Centaur player and captain P.J. McDonnell said, "Rugby is a sport for anyone wiyh the guts enough to play."

Players only protection during a game is their jersey, shorts, spikes, and muscle. Rugby is similar to football in that players try to advance the ball by running with the ball or by kicking it forward. Passes, however, must be backwards. When a player is tackled, he must release the ball and roll away. This allows for the play to continue.

Centaur player Billy Reis said, "I enjoy rugby because you can hit people and vent your frustrations. Then, afterwards, you can party with the other team."

In most other sports, when the game is over the teams go their separate ways. Rugby teams join forces after a game and have a party and sing songs. Just minutes before these same players were battling each other on the feild and at the party they are singing and dancing with each other.

The Stout rugby club was formed in the fall of 1979 with only 15 members. Today the club is at it's high of over 40 members. All members play in games regardless of experience. Only 15 players are on the feild at a time and no substitutions are allowed so usually two matches are neccessary.

Rugby is different from other sports to learn. Most players have no experience when they first join the team. Players learn the game by doing, and from other players instruction. There is no blocking or forward passes as in football.

Instead there are scrumdowns, penalties, and line outs. Scrumdowns are used to restart play after minor infractions and they look like a great mass of humanity pushing each other. Penalty plays are awarded after major infractions and are set plays as in football. Line outs are used to return the ball to play from out of bounds.

As player John Wangen said, "We are always looking for new players and fans at our matches."

Swimmers conclude a successful season

by Paul Emerson

Boasting an 11th place finish by the women, and a 23rd place finish by the men, the UW-Stout swimming & diving teams concluded a very successful season by hosting the NAIA national meet on March 4-7 in Milwaukee, Wis.

Dual conference champion UW-Eau Claire (WSUC & WWIAC) won the womens NAIA National Championship, while the Blugold men took 3rd overall.

Head mens and womens swim teams coach John Miller, was quick to note that the 11th place finish by the women was their best ever, and was very pleased with both team as well as individual performances at the meet.

"This was a tremendous effort by both teams, they swam extremely well," exclaimed Coach Miller.

The women swimmers were led by sophomore Wendy Heineke who used a 2nd, 3rd, and a 4th place finish to take 9th place overall in the womens individual competition.

"Wendy had an excellant meet, she placed in all three events she swam in, and set three school records," said Miller.

Heineke finished second in the 100 yd. freestyle with a time of 0:53.43, just .14 of a second off the pace. She took third in the 100 yd. backstroke with a time of 1:01.47, while also placing fourth in the 100 yd. butterfly in 0:58.98.

In addition to her individual performances, Heineke also swam on the three medley and two freestyle relay teams which Stout had entered in the meet.

Stouts' medley relay team of Heineke, senior Cheryl DeBaker, and freshmen Lara Perkins and Jacki Gilbert, placed 9th and 10th in their two races.

The foursome took 9th in the 400 yd. medley relay with a time of 4:13.14, and 10th in the 200 medley in 3:42.78.

In the freestyle relays, Heineke teamed with Perkins, Gilbert, and junior Laurie Potter, to place 9th in the 200 yd. freestyle relay in a time of 1:41.79. They also twice placed 10th in both the 400 and 800 yd. freestyle relays with times of 3:42.78, and 8:08.58 respectively.

"All the relay teams finished in the top 10, they all set school records and personal bests," said Miller," This was really a stellar performance for the women."

Freshman Natalie Wicks was Stouts' lone representative in the diving competition, but fared quite well with a 9th place finish on the 1 meter diving board, while accumulating 48.0 points.

Steve Kostrova led Stouts men team in the meet with a 15th place finish in the 200 yd. butterfly with a time of 1:58.11. And also swam a leg on the 400 yd. medley and freestyle relay teams.

"Steve's was kind of a gutsy performance, on Friday he popped his shoulder out and basically had to wim with one arm," noted Miller.

Kostrova was joined on the relay team by Mark Kukuzke, Stuart Boese, and Kurt Siebert. They combined to place 12th in the mens 400 yd. freestyle witha time of 3:13.75, and also placed 15th in the 400 medley relay in 3:40.34.

Stout sent 12 swimmers (including diver Wicks) to the national meet. 10 of these individuals earned All-American honorable mention honors. Coach Miller noted that to make honorable mention honors, you have to finish in the top 16 places, either individually or in the relays.

Two swimmers who also competed for the mens team were Mike Carlson and Robert O'Reily. O'Reily along with Siebert, Boese, and Cheryl DeBaker, all earned Academic All-American honors.

"3.47 is the lowest G.P.A. of those four people, and I'm very proud of that fact," said Miller. Who also noted that the swim team has had more all-americans than any other team at Stout.

Looking back on the season Miller summed up his feelings this way, "the past three or four years (since the program began) we've had good, quality swimmers, and that's a plus for our program."

"Four years ago we started with no one," Miller said, "but we've made long strides in a short amount of time. If we can keep improving, we can get some good athletes coming in."

The womens team will lose only one member, while the mens will graduate two swimmers. This has coach Miller very optimistic about next years teams chances.

"If we get everyone back we should do even better next year, and that goes for both teams," said Miller, "I'm looking forward to next year already."

Miller himself was honored this year with two distinguishing awards. He was voted Co-coach of the Year for the womens team (WWIAC). And this year was nominated and voted to the Executive Board of the NAIA Swimming Coaches Association.

A modest Miller had this to say, "that's nice because it shows our program is being recognized by other coaches in the NAIA."

"Which again goes back to the quality swimmers which we have. The kids are the ones who really deserve the credit," added Miller.

Wrestler to NCAA division III Nationals

by Tim Nichols

Blue Devil grappler Wayne Hendrickson nearly gained All-American honors while competing in the NCAA Division III National Tournament held in Buffalo, New York on March 5-7. Hendrickson came up one match short of the honors, losing a consolation bout which would have placed him in the top six for the tournament and qualified him for All-American status.

Blue Devil Head Coach Michael Early was pleased with Hendrickson's showing and commented, "I was very pleased with his overall performance." Early also noted that Hendrickson proved that he could compete against many of the placewinners for the tourney.

Wrestling in the 167-lb. class, Hendrickson received a bye in the first round before losing his second round match to Jay Heines of Mount Union College in Ohio. The score was close throughout the match before Heines recorded a fall at 5:56 of the third period. Heines won his next match, which allowed Hendrickson to compete in the wrestlebacks, and eventually captured All-American honors.

In the wrestlebacks, Hendrickson defeated Mark Kozoil of Elmhurst College by a score of 4-2 before eventually losing his final match to Todd Slade of Brockport, New York by a fall at 3:42. Slade, who was originally ranked second in the weight class for the tourney, went on to capture third place.

This was Hendrickson's first appearance in a national tournament. The Blue Devil Junior finishes the season with a robust 25-12 individual record.

Representatives seek support

by Steven Lemire

With just two weeks before the campus wide elections for student representatives, the candidates are scrambling for support and the campaigns are heating up.

In this article, some of the candidates are spotlighted with their views on what they feel are the important issues of this election.

More can be learned about the SSA President and Vice President of Financial Affairs candidates at the SSA Candidate Debate, sponsored by The Stoutonia on Monday, March 30 from 5-7 p.m. in the Grandview Terrace.

President of the Stout Student Association

James Falkofske

"I would like to see more student involvement in the allocation of segregated fee money," said Falkofske. "We paid our student service fee and we have the right to more input as to how it is spent."

Falkofske is also running for Fifth Ward Alderman in the city of Menomonie.

"In that way, I can help open lines of communication between the City Council and the student body of UW-Stout," he said. "We at least need a volunteer from the SSA to represent student issues to the City Council."

Falkofske listed student safety and a unified calendar of activities and events among his goals if elected as SSA President.

Mark Nickels

"I am mainly interested in building a foundation of trust and respect between the members of the executive board, the SSA Senators and myself,"said Nickels. "I am a team builder, and even though I don't agree with someone, I respect their right to an opinion."

Funding of student organizations has become a volatile issue in this election.

"With more students joining organizations and less money being available, we must help these groups to find alternate sources of funds," said Nickels.

Nickels said he would also focus on centering more activities in the Student Center, improving lighting and safety on campus and finding solutions to the university's growing parking problem.

Damon Smith

"The most important job of the SSA President is to promote student involvement in campus groups and on committees," said Smith.

"For instance, the Senate doesn't want to deal with Amnesty International's funding request, so let the student body decide, in a general election referendum, how they want their money to be spent," Smith said.

"Consider the big event of last fall, Bash In The Grass," Smith said. "It is possible that they didn't use the money in the most efficient manner. If this is to be an annual event, it should be under the control of the University Programing Board," he suggested.

Other issues that Smith said he would address as president are promotion of awareness of minority students, re-evaluation of the Women's Affairs and Minority Affairs Senator positions, and establishment and maintenance of communication channels between students, faculty and the SSA.

Vice-President of Financial Affairs

Jonathan Graham

"The reason I am running is not to stoke up my ego," stated Graham, "I am here because I believe that the financial affairs could be managed more effectively."

"The present budget finance committee seems to make many determinations based on personal bias," Graham said.

"The basic ideas of Cooperative Programming and Bash In The Grass are good," Graham added, "but the SSA's handling of these issues raise questions about the handling of segregated fee money."

"Being a minority student, I am not saying that I am totally unaffected by biases," said Graham, "but I know that I can manage my own feelings and work toward logical solutions to budgetary problems."

Stout band must change constitution

by Jill Huppert

The 1987-88 Stout Student Association (SSA) budget was passed three weeks ago with a stipulation that the University Band must change its constitution to be in compliance with the SSA interpretation of UW-System policies, in order to receive its funding from SSA next year.

The amount of funding allocated for the band by SSA for next year represented a cut of over $600 from what they were given for this year.

The dispute centers around whether you have to be an enrolled band student to go on tour or to be involved in the band, according to Dr. Dougherty, Dean of Liberal Studies.

"We will make some change in the constitution," Dougherty said, but she said that she is not sure yet what that change will be.

The SSA and the School of Liberal Studies both provide funding for the band.

"The School of Liberal Studies pays for faculty, instruments, music, and the place they rehearse," Dougherty said.

In order to get that funding, Dougherty added, band must be a credit bearing activity.

"SSA approves student activities fee funds to support the part of the band's activities that is extra-curricular, Dougherty said.

This includes all the performances done for the benefit of students," she added.

These performances, according to Dougherty, include "the more than 55 performances a year that have nothing to do with the time they practise."

"There may be various ways of changing the constitution so that the band may still receive funding from both sources," Dougherty said.

The band's budget from the SSA was cut to $4839 from last year's amount of $5500.

Because enrollment in the band has increased dramatically, Band Director Erv Schlick is concerned the band will not be able to operate at its present quality, without this funding.

At this time, Dean Dougherty is unsure if the School of Liberal Studies will be able to provide the extra funding for the band because, as Dougherty explains, "it is a very difficult year for budgets."

"I want to be as supportive as I can to the band," Dougherty said. "Mr. Schlick is a fantastic director, and the students have been very generous with their time."

"It is a very difficult situation, where the SSA is trying to do the 'right thing,' and Mr. Schlick has be very generous," Dougherty said.

"It's hard for people involved in band who have worked very hard to swallow the SSA budget decision," Dougherty said.

Dougherty said that she thinks there is an "honest misunderstanding in the middle of this that I hope can be cleared up."

A.I. unhappy with SSA's funding policy

by Karen Smith

Members of the UW-Stout student chapter of Amnesty International (AI) think that they have been discriminated against and have not received fair judgement from the Stout Student Association (SSA) in the matter of funding for their organization.

Ali Vazirabadi, president of AI, claims that there has been a clear case of discrimination, specifically naming SSA President Paul D. Nelson and the Financial Affairs Committee of SSA as responsible for the discrimination.

"This started last semester when we asked SSA for a little over $2,000 for funding," Vazirabadi said. "At first, by a unanimous vote, they said they would give us half of what we asked for."

"When I asked for an appeal, they decided not to give us any funding at all," Vazirabadi said.

Vazirabadi speculated that punishment or the SSA members' dislike of the organization may have been the reason.

"Each time we appealed, we were given a different reason for not being able to receive funding from SSA and they never gave anything in writing explaining their reasoning," Vazirabadi said.

The first time AI appealed, Vazirabadi said, Nelson, found that the organization went against the by-laws of SSA.

"Once we proved that this was not so and appealed again," said Vazirabadi, "they said that if they funded us, they would later have to fund other organizations which do not exist now."

"The third time we appealed," Vazirabadi went on, "SSA claimed that we do not cover the whole scope of the university, but originally the Finance Committee had said we were the only organization on campus who did cover the entire scope."

The fourth, and most recent appeal to SSA, the group was refused funding because the national organization had taken a stand against the death penalty.

According to SSA president Nelson, the policy papers regarding segregated fee funds state that "activities which focus purely on social, religious, or are of a politically partisan nature cannot receive SUF support."

Nelson told the SSA senators that his interpretation of the AI stand against the death penalty was that it classified the group as politically partisan, and therefore ineligible for segregated fee funding.

According to Vazirabadi, AI is currently investigating the situation, and has referred the matter to the American Civil Liberties Union.

> When I asked for an appeal, they decided not to give us any funding at all.
> —Ali Vazirabadi

"We are looking at the legalities of the case to review, and possibly take necessary action against SSA, Paul D. Nelson, and the people involved in this case of discrimination," Vazirabadi said.

"Student government should be a task oriented government and should look at objectives of an organization and not base judgements on personal views," Vazirabadi said. " They need to respect by-laws and constitutions of not only SSA government, but also by-laws of state government and the constitution of the United States." "I am sorry that Paul D. Nelson could bring that much bad reputation of this student organization to our student government," Vazirabadi added, "because it makes all of the students at the university look bad."

"Hopefully," Vazirabadi said, "with a new student government, these biases can be eliminated."

SSA members have been instructed to refer all questions on the AI issue to Nelson. Nelson is unwilling to comment, he said, since the matter is being investigated.

Nelson said they are referring questions to the State Attorney General, through Dean of Students Samuel Wood.

According to Dean Wood , he has not received any information from SSA, with the exception of a copy of a request from AI for SSA records regarding the organization, which was denied.

Referring to SSA, Wood said, "They have not chosen to bring the matter to us, yet."

When asked who to talk to at the State Attorney General's office about the matter, Nelson replied, "All I know is we have people who handle this for us."

Course on sexuality increases awareness

by Jill Huppert

Current Topics in Sexuality, a course offered at UW-Stout, is designed to enhance knowledge and make students more comfortable communicating about sex.

Dr. John Williams, who teaches the course said it focuses on sex research, sexuality issues, psychological and sociological aspects of sex, and exploration around love in a relationship.

> Intimacy is very important for people leaving home an getting out on their own.
> —Dr. John Williams

"College students are at a very important point," Williams said, "as most will be married in seven or eight years."

"It's important for them to get to know themselves as human persons who are sexual beings," he said.

In the class, students can become more concerned with development of intimacy, which is an important part of life, Williams said. "Intimacy is very important for people leaving home and getting out on their own. Getting close to people is their own responsibility," he said.

One student, who wishes to remain anonymous, recommended the course to other students. "The class makes you aware of the different issues surrounding sex, and different hang-ups people have with it," she said.

"When you try to talk to people about sex, they're very uncomfortable," the student said. She added that the class makes discussion about sex more comfortable because it is a comfortable environment, she said.

The changing role of women is important when discussing sexual identity. According to Williams, women are becoming more aggressive in the working world, but no one writes a job description when it comes to sex."

Men's roles have not necessarily changed, but it is important for men to get in touch with their feelings, Williams said.

About 30 to 35 students enroll the course each quarter. The women generally outnumber the men by two to one in William's classes.

Williams felt the reason for the lower enrollment of male students may be that "the ideas of nurturing and being intimate are seen as being feminine qualities."

"If the men outnumbered the women it would be a major revolution," Williams said. "It takes the courageous male to take this course. Only the strong will survive," he challenged.

Some students said they felt more women take the course because they are traditionally taught to take more responsibility when it comes to safe sex.

Brian Belski, Sophomore, felt many students are not aware the class exists. He said, Early Childhood Education majors (mostly female) hear about the class through their program.

Belski thought the class was valuable and would recommend it to others. Because his class was mostly female, he said he learned a lot of interesting viewpoints from women.

Karen Zurakowski, a Junior, took the class from a different instructor. "I was disappointed in the class," she said. "I expected it to be more of a self growth class." She said her instructor put little emphasis on the emotional aspect of sex and did not allow for much discussion.

"I didn't like the class," said Kathy Krenz, Sophomore. Krenz felt much of the class was about things she already knew or didn't need to know. She also felt the films used in class were somewhat offensive.

The films used for the course "are quite blatant," Williams said. But their purpose is not to be pornographic. The films need to be viewed with a level of maturity, he said.

Current Topics in Sexuality began at Stout in the early 1970's when interest in sex research was becoming very high. The curriculum has remained the same, however, Williams like to keep the topics current.

The class is a 660 level course and Williams recommends it to Juniors and some Sophomores. Individual and Family Relations is a prerequisite for this one credit quarter class.

Women in Management discuss sexual harassment concerns

by Paul Emerson

Sexual harassment, a hot topic for many women (and some men) who are victimized daily on the job by co-workers who are "just doing a little innocent flirting."

On Monday, March 23, the UW-Stout Women in Management (WIM) club addressed the issue of sexual harassment in an effort to increase people's awareness of what it is, and what the victims of these attacks can do to fight back.

Mary Ellen Schindler, a WIM club member, noted that March is National Women's History Month and the club chose the topic of sexual harassment because it went along with that theme.

"People aren't aware of how big an issue this is," said Schindler. We want to increase awareness of sexual harassment and "let people know what their rights are."

The club first showed a film titled Power Pinch that dealt with the effects sexual harassment can have, not only to the victim(s), but to their place of employment as well.

Women who are victims of sexual harassment on the job can lose not only their self-esteem, but are also fearful of responding to the attacks because they may lose their jobs as a result.

Companies find that the harassments women employees receive on the job, can cause problems in production, as well as in other areas, and end up costing the companies a lot of money.

> People aren't aware of how big an issue this is...
> —Mary Ellen Schindler

The definition of sexual harassment was defined in the film as the "unwelcomed, unwanted, repeated physical contacts of co-workers that affect the job, a raise, or a promotion."

The film also explained what is believed to be the causes of why many women suffer from sexual harassment on the job including misinterpretations or confusing signals, (such as what a woman is wearing on a given day), that are caused by a lack of communication between employees.

After the film, the club had a guest speaker direct an informal discussion on the issue where those in attendance could openly voice their experiences with sexual harassment on the job, and to get some helpful information as to what their rights are, and how to handle delicate situations. "'I thought I had to put up with it,' is a common response by women", said guest speaker Donna Weber, lecturer in the Psychology department at Stout. Weber added that "Women should do the best they can in a given situation."

Weber went on to say that responses don't always have to be verbal, stating that "a non-verbal turn-off would be to step aside, physically removing yourself from the situation."

"The rules and regulations of the company can affect the amount of sexual harassment females receive on the job," noted Weber, who added that "you're hurting yourself and the company by putting up with it."

The victim must start up legal action, file charges, and set the precedent for what the consequences of the attackers will be, noted Weber.

But as for the risks of actually doing something about the attacks, Weber said, "you may win but you still may lose...., you may lose your job."

Council Forum held at Leisure Center

Former Stout student and Menomonie City Council member Jay Shroeder addresses the audience at the Candidate Forum on Tuesday night. Seated behind him is Paul Kniesz, waiting to explain his views to interested voters.

by Rose Shakal

Candidates for City Council in wards that include the Stout campus brought up what they feel are the most serious issues facing Menomonie, at the City Council Candidates' Forum, on Tuesday at the Menomonie Leisure Center.

Stout student Paul Kneisz, who is running unopposed in Ward VII, has lived in Menomonie for two years, and in the seventh ward for the past three months.

Ward VII includes CKTO and HKMC halls.

Kneisz has been involved in the Stout Student Association (SSA), the student governance body at Stout, for six months.

Kneisz maintained at the Candidates' Forum that there is a large gap in communication between the students and the politicians in Menomonie.

Kneisz said that the students feel they are not listened to, and the politicians say the students do not get involved or vote.

"I'd like to be that foot in the door," Kneisz said, "and to leave that door open for both sides to listen and to communicate to each other."

One issue that Kneisz said concerned him, as well as many other students, is Menomonie's noise ordinance.

Kneisz said he thinks the present ordinance needs to be refined, as it is felt by many to be inconsistant and discriminatory.

Another issue that Kneisz feels needs to be looked at is the parking problem. This problem, Kneisz pointed out, effects shoppers looking for a place to park downtown, as well as Stout students and faculty.

"There's more cars than there are places to park," Kneisz remarked.

Another student candidate for City Council office, Jim Falkofske, is running against Vince Hague in Ward V, which includes South Hall.

Falkofske has lived in Menomonie all his life and graduated from Menomonie High School.

> "I only have one special interest — and that's Menomonie.
> —Jim Falkofske"

Falkofske is an applied math major and is also minoring in technical writing and business administration. He pointed out to the audience that he is involved in numerous activites.

"I'd like to think I'm active in both community and student affairs," Falkofske said.

Falkofske is the Media-Advertising Coordinator of the SSA, and is also a lobbyist for the SSA on a state level.

Falkofske is involved in the Menomonie Theatre Guild, as are his parents.

Falkofske said many people have asked him if he is going to represent only student related issues.

"I only have one special interest — and that's Menomonie," he said in response.

Falkofske believes that the most serious problem facing Menomonie right now is the lack of industrial development. More industry would lead to more jobs, he said.

In response to the landfill problem, Falkofske suggested a recycling center, with special bins for glass, metal, and toxic substance containers.

Falkofske also mentioned concerns with the noise ordinance.

"I would like to see, though,. . . a stronger noise ordinance that would clearly state what times and what decibel levels would be considered unacceptable noise," Falkofske suggested.

Vince Hague, who is running against Falkofske, did not have any comments relating directly to students during his presentation at the forum.

However, Jan O'Neill, who runs unopposed in Ward IV, which includes JTC and AF Halls, told the audience that she is concerned about both the community's and the students' welfare.

"I want to be visible," O'Neill said. "I want to know what the students' interests are."

"I plan to keep them informed of issues that are coming up in the City Council that would pertain to them, so they know about them in advance," O'Neill added.

"Many of the students will eventually become part of our community as taxpayers, business people, homeowners, and families in the future," O'Neill concluded, "and we'd like to keep them here."

The City Council elections will be held April 7, at various polling places.

Advisory Council to cater to graduate students' needs

by Judy Weitzer

There were approximately 570 graduate students enrolled at Stout last semester.

Among them, a representative of each program was appointed to the Graduate Student Advisory Council.

Every year, graduate program directors nominate students for these positions. The list of nominees is then turned over to the Vice President of Academic Affairs of the Stout Student Association (SSA).

> "But we get in touch with more classes through classes that they are in...
> —Lawrence Wright"

The Vice President brings the list to the attention of the SSA, which then makes the appointments.

The group is advised by Lawrence Wright, assistant dean of graduate studies and curriculum. They elect a president who is automatically a member of another committee including faculty and program directors, where there is direct input from the Advisory Council.

The purpose of the council is to meet the needs of graduate students. One major concern that had not been perceived before it was brought to the attention of the Advisory Council was the need for a more complete daycare facility.

A recent accomplishment of the committee was the development of a new diploma, which was recommended to the chair of commencement and resulted in a much improved style of diploma.

The group recently invited Kurtis Kindschi, Director of the Financial Aids Office to meet with them and discuss tax laws on graduate assistantships.

Information about the council, now in the process of being reviewed and revised, is sent to incoming graduate students to welcome them and make them aware of the group's existence.

"But we get in touch with more students through classes that they are in, such as Research Foundations and Systems Analysis and Design," said Wright.

Announcements are also placed on campus bulletin boards.

Wright said the recent trend was toward graduate students taking a full load including 9-16 credits and a graduate assistantship.

Because of this, the group cannot accomplish as much as they would like, as students opt to spend their free time completing their research, which is generally very time-consuming.

Since its members usually complete their graduate requirements within a year, the committee tends to start fresh with new members every year.

This is not conducive to sponsoring any annual events, however, the group plans social meetings for students "to participate in casual conversation, and to congregate with members of their own discipline," said Wright.

Stout students set for Olympics of Mind

by Judy Weitzer

Last weekend, while most people were outdoors enjoying the ingress of spring, some students were hard at work in the process lab at the Technical Wing of Jarvis Hall.

Amidst a myriad of springs, screws and bolts, these weekend hermits were busily preparing their entries for the Olympics of the Mind (OM), a creative problem solving competition which will take place in Tulsa, Oklahoma March 23rd through the 26th.

Although this type of competition is widespread at the elementary and high school levels, a collegiate version of the competition is being held for the first time this year.

Unlike elementary and high school students who must progress through regional, state and national competition, the collegiate competition begins at the national level and is by invitation only.

Bob Berkemer, instructor of the Design for Industry classes, announced the competition to his students and they signed up for the teams on a volunteer basis.

> "...it gives us an experience as to what to expect as educators."
> —Kevin Kerwin

One team from Stout will be participating in the competition to design a vehicle that runs entirely on spring power. The problem was modeled after a concept developed by Leonardo da Vinci.

The major limitations of the creation involve cost and time. Excluding the cost of springs and some other items which are exempt from cost in the OM Program Handbook, the amount spent may not exceed $75.00.

A twelve minute time limit is imposed on the entire performance of the vehicle, including set up, charging of the springs and the vehicles journey through the course.

Scoring is based on eight criteria, including fastest time, and each is assigned a specific point value for a maximum total of two hundred points.

Penalties for violation of any rule, such as the driver not wearing a helmet or the driver touching his feet to the floor other than at the start or finish of the race results in point deductions.

There are fifty additional points awarded for style, including points for sketches, models and the creativity of the presentation.

The members of the spring car team were very enthusiastic. "In order not to stifle creative activity, each person has a chance to fully explain their ideas before they are accepted or rejected, " said Charlie Brown.

"You learn how to work as a team, being able to take constructive criticism as well as to help improve on another person's ideas," added John Higgins.

The team members praised Stout's well equipped labs. "Because of the facilities here, we have access to virtually any type of materials we need," commented Kevin Kerwin. "We've also been lucky to have the support of area businesses," Higgins said.

Another of category for which a team of Stout students was organized is the Structural Impact competition. The team had to design and build a balsa wood structure that can absorb impact from moving billiard balls while supporting as much weight as possible.

The main limitations involved the size of the balsa strips, the types of glue that could be used, and the final weight of the structure, which could not exceed 18 grams.

The structure holding the highest weight, including bonus weight receives 200 points and each consecutive weight receives a percentage thereof. Bonus weight is calculated according to the number of billiard balls hitting the structure. Penalties for infractions of the rules are deducted from percentage scores.

Kevin Hallberg, a member of the Impact team said the project was a real challenge for the group to stretch their imaginations to the limit while staying within the realm of the guidelines.

Olympics of the Mind is co-sponsored by the Industrial Technology Education Association (ITEA) and most of the participants are majoring in Technology Education.

Kerwin said this is an invaluable opportunity for students because "it gives us an experience as to what to expect as educators."

Senate supports Placement Policy

by Gretchen Eke

Next year Stout may have a new policy that could save incoming freshman and transfer students time and money awarding them credit for classes they have tested out of.

The Stout Student Association (SSA) passed a motion Tuesday night that would support the Educational Activities Comittee's endorsement of this Advanced Placement Policy for UW-Stout.

The Education Activities Committee is a university committee with student representation.

The committee endorses this policy change because it is used at UW-Whitewater and UW-Eau Claire. They hope that the policy would attract more students to Stout.

According to Mike Mundy, a spokesman for the Educational Activities Committee, many high schools offer Advanced Placement courses.

"The students take a standardized test for these courses," said Mundy, "which is graded from one to five. A four equals a college A. This way students get credit for classes they have already taken in high school."

Another motion brought on the floor at Tuesdays's meeting asked for SSA's endorsement of the Educational Activities Committee's proposed changes in the undergraduate academic probation and dismissal policy.

These changes would raise minimum GPA requirements to be more in line with graduation requirements, and would also simplify the present policy, according to the committee members.

The proposed minimum GPA requirements would affect second-semester freshmen through second-semester sophomores, whose minimum GPA would be raised one-tenth of a point by the change of policy, according to Mundy.

This motion was tabled for one week to give the senators additional time to review the proposed changes.

These SSA endorsements, pending approval by the SSA, would be referred to the Faculty Senate for their endorsement.

Mundy said that if the policy changes are approved, they will probably go into effect next fall.

Student grievances are not discussed in meeting

by Tracy Lea Landis

The chair of the Faculty Senate said that UW-Stout's chancellor had "an amazing way of defusing the issue," in comments made after a meeting concerning action on the structure of a committee which hears grievances against faculty members.

Stout Student Association President Paul D. Nelson, Chancellor Robert Swanson and Dr. Susan Nurrenbern, chair of the Faculty Senate met after Nelson expressed outrage that the issue of student representation on the Positive Action Committee, which hears grievances, was not brought before the last meeting of the Faculty Senate before it was adjourned.

Nurrenbern explained that it was not her intention to bury the issue but that the faculty governance body had run out of time at their March 17 meeting.

Nurrenbern said the report of a committee looking into the idea of student representation on the Positive Action Committee is "on the Faculty Senate agenda first thing under new business next time."

> "an amazing way of defusing the issue."
> —Susan Nurrenbern

She said that she understands Nelson's impatience in waiting for the Faculty Senate to make a decision about the requested change in the committee structure.

Nurrenbern said, however, that it would be April before the faculty governance group would be able to discuss the issue.

Letter writing campaign organized

by Tracy Lea Landis

The UW-Stout community is being asked to spend 10 minutes writing a letter for human rights after a presentation by the national director of Amnesty International on Tuesday, March 31 at 7 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center.

In conjunction with a presentation titled "Prisoners of Conscience and Human Rights in the World Today," by John Healy, the director of Amnesty International-USA, the audience will be asked to participate in the Write-A-Thon by the event's organizers.

> "We'll show them how to write effective letters
> —Tracy Zimdars"

The letters the audience will be asked to write will express concern for the welfare of political prisoners held in the countries of Taiwan, Chile, Sri Lanka, Yugoslavia, South Africa, Cuba and Brazil.

Tracy Zimdars, chair of the Write-A-Thon Committee for the Stout student chapter of Amnesty International, one of two sponsors of the event, said that names of prisoners held in violation of their human rights will be taken from "urgent action sheets" provided by the national organization.

"These lists come out twice a month," said Zimdars, "with the names of new prisoners or those who still haven't been released."

"The letters," Zimdars explained, "go to top officials, telling them that we're concerned and that we want the torture, kidnapping, killings, or whatever has been reportedly involved, brought to an end."

Zimdars said that people attending Healy's presentation will be invited to another room where tables will be set up for letter writing.

"We'll show them how to write effective letters addressing human rights concerns," Zimdars added.

The Amnesty International event is funded through a Cooperative Programming agreement between the Stout Amnesty International group and the University Speakers Series Commission.

Cooperative Programming events are funded through a special pool of segregated activities fee funds approved by the Financial Affairs Committee of the Stout Student Association and two people with programming experience.

Because the event is funded by student's segregated activities fees, Healy's address is opne to the public free of charge.

WHEN IS THE RIGHT TIME TO CALL YOUR PARENTS?

a) When you're stuck in your room because someone "pennied" your door.

b) When you spent all your money playing video games and you still have to buy books for Developmental Psych.

c) When you just miss hearing their voices and telling them what you've been doing.

One thing about parents: they love to hear what you've been up to. But you should call them anyway.

And when they ask where you were last night, tell them that you always call using AT&T Long Distance Service because of AT&T's high quality service and exceptional value.

When they ask how your studies are going, remind them that AT&T gives you immediate credit if you dial a wrong number.

And when they ask about your plans for the weekend, note that you can count on AT&T for clear long distance connections.

And when, at last, they praise you for using AT&T, then—and only then—you might want to mention those Psych books.

Murdered heiress comes back to life

by Masha Roberts

Hundreds of students and staff gathered at the Johnson Field House on March 23 to listen to the breathtaking story of Dr. Petti Wagner.

Wagner's publicity said she is the inventor of the world's first cold wave permanent and the developer of hydroponics. She has two Ph.D degrees in psychology and in medical research.

Wagner says she was a victim of a sinister murder plot and was kidnapped, tortured and murdered for her wealth. She believes that, through a miracle of God she lives today.

With great enthusiasm, Wagner began her two hour lecture by asking the audience to repeat "I am a winner", "I am an overcomer," "I am a child of God" and "I am washed in the blood of the lamb."

In one of her frequent references to Jesus Christ, she said, "It's fun to be in Jesus and because of him, I am standing here today to relate this message that would really stir up spirits."

Wagner said she has done 80 television shows and visited approximately 135 churches, relating her out-of-body experience with God, to the people.

Here is how she described what she called her kidnapping and torture:

Wagner was going out to dinner with a friend when the phone rang. The caller said that her aunt was dying and that she was to come immediately to Room 120 at the hospital.

On reaching the hospital, she found the place in near-complete darkness with no one in sight. Wagner began to feel something must be terribly wrong when she said that she saw signs pointing to the upper stairs, saying "Room 120 this way."

Regardless of this uneasy feeling, she mounted the stairs as fast as she could have until she saw two huge men standing next to her aunt's doctor's office.

"I thought they were the ambulance men but when I looked in the room, the bed was empty and my aunt was not there," she said.

> "My out-of-body experience with God happened on the tenth day.
> —Dr. Petti Wagner"

After saying who she was and apologizing to the men for being in the wrong room, Wagner told them she was looking for her aunt. She related that the men said that she was in the right room and then one of them struck her over the left eye. He kept hitting her for about 10 minutes until she sank to the floor unconscious.

"I came around about four hours later, judging from the clock across the street." "All my jewelry was shipped off me and I was beaten, bruised and tortured each day for the ten days that followed," she continued.

On the eighth day Wagner said that she felt that she was beaten harder than she could remember.

"I could feel myself sinking into oblivion when I heard one of the men say that he wondered how much more of this can this gal take," she related.

By this time she said that her jaw was broken, left eye knocked out of its socket and pieces of torn flesh hung from her fingers. She was then taken to be electrocuted without success because the equipment did not work as it was supposed to. All God's doing of course, Wagner believes.

"My out-of-body experience with God happened on the tenth day when I was again taken to be electrocuted. After being strapped down onto the chair, I felt myself floated up into heaven and I was walking on light. I leaned against it and was supported by it. I felt I was walking on glory and I could feel the pure light of love penetrate my skin, and my body," she said with enthusiasm.

She further said that she was welcomed into heaven by Jesus Christ and he asked her if she wanted to stay up in heaven or come back down to earth. Wagner decided to come back down to earth for she said that she felt her work is not yet done.

From heaven, Wagner said, she looked down to earth and saw the men throw her dead physical body in the room again and cover it with a white sheet.

She said she listened to a booming voice, like 20 loudspeakers saying "I am God, the Lord, do not be afraid for I will help you get out of this."

She believes God has a great sense of humor for when they were both back on earth, God said to her that she should tell her kidnappers that she was tired and is going to bed early.

Wagner believes God helped her escape at 3 a.m. after putting the kidnappers into a long sleep. All this time, the enormous glow of light of God was with her, she said.

After 30 days of being home with doctors telling Wagner there was no hope for her scars to be removed from her face, she said that God once again appeared in her room at four in the morning.

"With just a wave of his hand, my face was transformed into beautiful and wrinkle-free as I had never seen before, and he said to me, you will never be terrorized again," said Wagner.

She advised that people should never stop having dreams. She said that you have the power when you have Jesus.

says that the students have the right to determine how their segregated fees are spent as well as how decisions that affect students are made.

"We would like to have more input into the spending of funds on the Student Center, Health Center and equipment purchases," Nelson said.

"The management of allocative money is very important," he said, "I would like to hold public meetings to get feedback on where the money would be best spent."

Nelson is also concerned with funding student safety projects, student parking and the allocation of Cooperative Programming money.

James Falkofske, Todd Nelson, Angela Bias and Dan Meyer are running on a unified ticket for the executive offices. They feel that their ability to work together will enhance their efficiency when working toward the goals of SSA.

Next week an article featuring the candidates for Vice-President of Legislative Affairs, Vice-President of Academic Affairs, the Women's Affairs Senator candidate and others will appear in The Stoutonia.

Bash on the Grass exceeds $4,000 budget

by Tracy Lea Landis

Bash on the Grass, the Homecoming event sponsored by UW-Stout's student government last semester, cost $1,640.87 more than the $4,000 set aside to fund the event.

$4,000 was allocated to fund the non-alcoholic event by a vote of the senators of the Stout Student Association (SSA). In the end, the SSA spent $5,640.87 from the unallocated account, which has since been renamed the reserve segregated fee fund.

A list of expenses from Bash on the Grass, reported by the Vice President of Financial Affairs of the Stout Student Association (SSA), Catherine Reszka, itemized the expenditures.

The event featured two bands, Gerard and Metros. $1,200 was spent on Gerard and $2,000 was spent to hire Metros.

The next largest expenditure for the event went to Eclipse Concert System to provide $900 worth of sound equipment for the performances of the two bands.

An additional $344.11 was spent to hire an electrician to set up the project.

In addition, $594.40 was spent on advertisements placed in The Stoutonia to promote the event.

Contributions from the Housing Office to cover security and the Alumni Office to provide toilets and tarps augmented the SSA budget for Bash on the Grass. $435 covered security for the event and $550 was spent on toilets and tarp.

Exchange Programs

The Work Abroad Program of the Council on International Exchange (CIEE) is the largest student exchange organization in the U.S.

Now in its eighteenth year, the Work Abroad Program is the only one of its kind. By cutting through the red tape, it helps thousands of students obtain permission for temporary work in foreign countries.

The program is open to U.S. students 18 years of age or older enrolled in a U.S. college or university.

CIEE also sponsors work camps, which provide free room and board to volunteers. No special skills are required of volunteers except a willingness to get involved and an open-minded approach. Volunteers must be 18 years of age, except in Germany where 16 year olds are accepted.

For more information and application forms, write or phone: Council on International Educational Exchange, PR-WA, 205 E. 42nd Street, New York, NY 10017, (212) 661-1414; or 919 Irving Street, San Francisco, CA 94122, (415) 566-6222.

Enrollment Cuts

A reflection of the state's inability to maintain a quality university with virtually open enrollment prompted the Board of Regents to unanimously endorse a plan that will tighten admission standards, thereby cutting enrollment within the UW system by 15 percent.

About 1500 student spaces would be cut systemwide for each of the next two years and 2000 a year for the following two years, said UW system President Kenneth Shaw.

The enrollment-management plan, drawn up by Shaw and endorsed by Governor Tommy Thompson in February, spells out how additional funds would be apportioned among UW campuses.

Over the objections of Frank Nikolay, the Democratic majority leader who said the board was acting too quickly, the eight point plan was recently approved by the regents.

Voter Registration

The Wisconsin Elections Board voted to introduce legislation to increase voter participation by allowing more people to register as eligible voters.

The United Council, a state student association representing UW campuses and Marquette University, has advocated standardized procedures because student voter registration drives in certain communities have been discouraged by city clerks.

"Current law suggests that everyone who applies for deputization (enabling them to register voters) must be appointed unless a previous appointment was justifiably revoked," UC Legislative Affairs Director Paul Swinford said. "Judging by the disparate actions of city clerks, there is no standard interpretation of the law."

The Elections Board will introduce the student proposal along with other recommended election law reforms. If the Legislature approves the proposal, the Elections Board will create rules governing the appointment of deputy voter registrars.

Career Computer

The latest in computer assisted career information services, titled "Discover," is now available on campus.

This self-help, self-directed program permits users to assess their work-related interests, abilities and values; to identify occupational fields compatible with these traits; and to identify schools where training for these career fields is available, along with information on Financial Aid and other information about the school.

For more information or to gain access, stop by the Counseling Center in the lower level of Bowman Hall between 1 and 3 p.m., or call Pinckney Hall or Tom Coates at x-2468.

Speaker Series

A colloquium in food and beverage merchandising will be held at UW-Stout with speakers scheduled for each Tuesday in April.

These presenters will represent the media, manufacturing, wholesale and retail aspects of the industry. Presentations will take place in Room 208 of the Home Economics building.

The schedule for the presentations is as follows: April 7th, 3 p.m., Jane Kirby, Food Editor of Glamour magazine; April 14th, 2 p.m., Michael L. Minor, Vice President of the L.J. Minor Corporation; April 21st, 1 p.m., James Wickus, President of Baraboo SYSCO Food Services; and April 28th, 3 p.m., Wallace Pettit, President of Tom Thumb Food Markets. Admission is free.

Additional information can be obtained by calling Tom Phillips, program director for home economics in business.

Remodeling Projects

Two major remodeling projects at Stout have been approved by the State Building Commission for the 1987-89 biennium. The commission endorsed a "Center for Service Industries" project for approximately $1.8 million and a consolidated project at Price Commons totaling $425,000.

Included in the Center for the Service Industries will be the remodeling of approximately 15,000 square of the Home Economics building and an additional remodeling of 13,000 square feet of the Fryklund and Jarvis Halls.

Primary objective of this project is to create additional laboratory space to serve a variety of programs. Completion is expected in July of 1990.

Work at the Price Commons will include building maintenance, removal of architectural barriers for people with disabilities, energy conservation, and projects to improve the building's health, safety and environmental aspects. Work is expected to be completed in December of 1989.

Arms Race Lobby

The fourth annual University Lobby to End the Arms Race, sponsored by United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War (UCAM), will take place April 2nd. The lobby day is a chance for students and faculty nationwide to urge Congress to pass legislation calling for a Comprehensive Test Ban treaty.

UCAM, the only organization devoted to building a campus movement to end the arms race, holds the annual event to teach students effective citizen skills for a lifetime of use.

With a vote likely in early April, the April 2nd Lobby Day can make a real difference.

For more information, contact UCAM a (202) 543-1505, 220 I Street, NE, Room 130, Washington, D.C. 20002.

Editorial

The threat of apathy

Each year, the threat exists that a relatively small block of UW-Stout students and faculty may determine the SSA leaders for the next year simply because approximately 85 percent of the electorate chose not to vote in the SSA elections.

The voter apathy results in large part from the ignorance the majority of Stout students have of the significant role SSA plays in their lives.

On a day to day basis, many complaints are heard about problems existing at Stout. Yet, more often than not, these complaints never get as far as the SSA office. It is essential that students remember the SSA is their student association which has the purpose of aiding activites which benfit the student body as a whole.

The election dates, Monday and Tuesday, April 6 and 7, students have the chance to decide who they want to represent them in prioritizing the spending of the student activities budget which totals almost one quarter of a million dollars annually.

There will be a 90 minutes debate Monday night, March 30 between the SSA presidential candidates starting at 5 p.m. in the Grand View Terrace, followed immediately by a half-four debate between vice president of financial affairs candidates.

The next few days, it will pay to familiarize yourself with the issues on campus by talking to the candidates themselves and reading about the candidates and their political platforms in The Stoutonia.

You might ask yourself about the pros and cons of the Paul Nelson administration. What did you think of the SSA initially approving the funding ($4,000) for Bash on the Grass during the summer of '86 when students as such had no way to be in on the meeting?

How do you respond to the SSA's confrontational style this year with the faculty senate, The Stoutonia, and Menomonie landlords?

Does the student body want leaders who think that a group's fight for human rights, aimed at people and especially student protestors suffering torture in foreign lands, ought to be denied because, "It is aimed at people who aren't part of this campus."?

The choice is yours, unless you choose to pass up your opportunity to determine the course of the SSA next year and for years to come.

Fine Line

I been hypnotized

Jef Maynard

In the future, everyone will be a government official. Please plan accordingly. Get your start in the SSA.

In the future, no one will be involved with government. Please plan accordingly. Don't vote in the SSA election.

You, dear readers, have a unique opportunity to generate the future, to be the inceptor of a new age. By a simple exercise of the inertia principle of "parademocracy," you can usher in the future of your choice, the future of no choice. I'm suggesting with all sincerity that everyone who can, does not vote for any SSA candidate April 6 and 7. Don't encourage them.

After attending this week's SSA meeting, I came to the conclusion that the money could be better spent sound-proofing the Pawn, or for scholarships for the Women's volleyball team or any other worthy cause.

Looking at the name cards for SSA members, I had to wonder. I mean, when you see representatives with names like Crooks and Bias, and so on, you just have to be a little concerned.

I really went to see SSA President Paul D. Nelson in action, and while his presence was undeniably felt, he was not in attendance. Someone said he was practicing for Camelot. I always thought so. Then, someone said he was rehearsing with the band for the spring musical. I had to imagine him playing a long trumpet with a banner hanging from it.

Maybe that is what SSA needs, a blasting trumpet fanfare before each meeting to give it a sense of dignity and proportion.

They do say the Pledge of Allegiance. I stood up but I didn't say the words. I said it once and that should be binding. A pledge is a pledge is a pledge, not a mantra.

The evidence of Paul D. Nelson's presence was a statement read by Wesley Stead, Administrative Assistant, which said that Paul D. Nelson thought it would be best if only paid executives, and preferrably only himself, discussed the possible pending legal action by Amnesty International towards the SSA.

This had something to do with potential subpoenas and the spreading of false information, and the question of whether University legal services could be extended to non-paid SSA members.

I think it is a polite gag-order so Paul D. Nelson can try to personally control an artificial mess he created based on personal politics. Thank heavens for opinions.

Someone read, in their report, that there will be a limited number of those cute little dorm, (excuse me...residence hall) refrigerators for sale for the unbelievably low price of $42. Maybe that's what SSA can do, turn their show into a Buying Club on campus cable.

Then some woman headed for the podium to give her report. On the way she tickled Todd A. Nelson, (candidate for V.P. for Financial Affairs) in the ribs. Thank heaven for hidden agendas. Her report included the news that the hypnotist Jon Lautrec would be in the Great Hall at 8 pm.

Right then I decided to go over and see his show. It is better to watch a professional hypnotist than amateurs, because at least he will be funny.

There was a report by Julie Weiss about some SSA proposal to the Faculty Senate, which the Faculty Senate had refused to put on their agenda or had tabled for the last five or six months. It's nice to see that the upper crustaceans take the SSA so seriously.

Wes Stead reported that a bus to the United Council meeting at UW-Platteville, ("the middle of nowhere" as he phrased it) was scheduled including "stops at two bars and one reststop." It is nice to see that the SSA takes the United Council so seriously. And so on...

Every year the turn-out for SSA elections goes down. It is around 12-15 percent. This year, I think a 0.5 percent or less turn-out might be the statement of choice. Do not vote for any of the SSA candidates. Do not encourage them.

Subject: Working for the students

by Cosmas A. Whitten

Mike Wyatt is the director of sports information and marketing and the offensive coordinator for the UW-Stout football team. This is the second semester that Wyatt has been employed at Stout.

Wyatt is originally from Oklahoma. Wyatt is a graduate of Oklahoma Panhandle State University located in Goodwell, Oklahoma. Wyatt holds a bachelor of science in health, physical education and recreation, driver's education and safety training.

No foreigner to football or the position as sports information director, Mike Wyatt has a vast amount of experience in both.

Wyatt played football while attending college. After college Wyatt went on to pursue various coaching positions. In 1977, Wyatt was the head football coach and general manager of the Wichita Falls Steelers Pro Football Club.

In 1978, Wyatt went on to be head football coach and general manager of the Oklahoma Stampede Pro Football Club. That year the Stampede was ranked 11th in the nation.

Between July 1979 and June 1982 Wyatt returned to Oklahoma Panhandle State University as sports information director and offensive coordinator. Wyatt coached under present Stout Coach Richard Lawrence. Together they started out coaching a team with no better than a three win season. During the last year of coaching, that team had a 9-0 undefeated season and ranked 8th nationally.

Mike Wyatt

Between June 1982 and May 1986, Mike Wyatt was the head football coach and administrative assistant to the superintendent for Atoka, Oklahoma Public Schools.

Currently Wyatt is working on a masters degree in guidance and school counseling here at Stout. Wyatt also instructs various courses in the field of physical education. Last semester, Wyatt taught a general psychology course.

To add to the busy day that Mike Wyatt puts in at Stout, he teaches a traffic safety course for point reduction at District 1, Menomonie's technical school.

STOUTONIA; WHAT DOES THE JOB OF SPORTS INFORMATION DIRECTOR CONSIST OF?

WYATT: I am responsible for all media relations, public relations, and take care of department printing of brochures and booklets. I also arrange for photographs and press releases. At Panhandle State, one of my brochures took third and one first in the nation. I did not enter any this year but I thought basketball was the best. Now that I have quality help, I would like to expand so that we send home three features on each athlete. We want to reach hometown newspapers; we will not

Twisting the truth

I am sick and tired of the news media making the news instead of reporting it. I specifically want to clarify that I am the contact person, not the sole supporter of the two petitions which over 700 Menomonie electors signed in an effort to gain direct legislation by binding the city council to adopt the referendums or refer the decision directly to the electorate.

Slanted journalism can be equated to "twisting the truth" to support one's own views. It appears the Leader-Telegram may be guilty of the aforementioned or they are not providing necessary background information in their February 28, 1987 article entitled "Request filed in Dunn Court to place petitions on ballot." "The petitions called for full-time mayor and a $50 increase in the pay aldermen receive for attending meetings, doubling the present rate."

In 1981, a charter ordinance set the compensation for councilmen at $100 per month. Aldermen Furlong, Schuknecht, Kropp and Rockwell supported a motion to cut this monthly salary in half - to $50 a month which took effect in January 1987. The petition, more fairly stated, is attempting to restore the 1981 charter ordinance -not increase or double any councilmen's salary as the article would lead the readers to believe. Cutting the salary in half is discouraging low-income people from serving on the council.

People like Ald. Furlong, a retiree from UW-Stout, and Ald. Schuknecht from UW-Stout; both earned over $40,000 a year - cutting the councilmen's salary to $50 could hardly be of significance to them. My question is why didn't these aldermen cut their salaries when they first got on the council -not when their term is about to expire?

It is important to understand that in April, 1986 when Menomonie's form of government changed to an elected mayor, some of the same aldermen who voted against the will of the people to build the library also voted to change the mayoral election to a date when half the population of Menomonie would not be here. This action clearly made the election unfair to the total qualified electorate.

Further clarification needs to be made on another statement in the aforementioned article in the Leader-Telegram. "The mayoral petition would have required the mayor to conduct city business during normal business hours.

CAMPUS SLANT/ Do you plan to vote in the student government election April 6 and 7?

By Brian Kraimer
Photos by Dan Banach

Mike Todey, Applied Technology,
Junior,

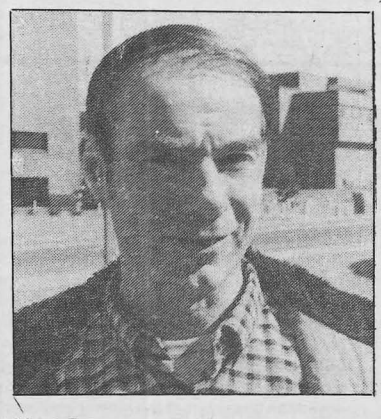
Yes, I am going to vote. It is important to get involved and see what is happening. It is important that we vote and show your involvement in your school and stuff like that.

Karen Miller,
Dietetics,
Junior,

Probably not. I guess I am not informed enough about the candidates that are running. The SSA election does not seem to be of enough importance for my time. I guess I really do not know what the SSA does here on campus. I do not have enough knowledge to make a rational vote.

Troy Johnson,
Plant Engineering,
Senior,

No, I probably won't. I do not know that much about the candidates that are running. I am sure that the SSA is important, but I really do not think it is fair to vote for the candidates when you do not know that much about them.



Stan Jones,
Education,
Graduate Student,

Probably. It is very important that we vote. If you do not vote, then you do not get a true consensus of opinion.

Holly Bain,
Undeclared major,
Freshman,

No, I really do not know what is going on. I do not know who is who with the candidates. I do not know anything about the candidates. I think the SSA is important but I just do not get involved.

Bottom Line

Facts of life

Rich Brueckner

"I'm not lost, but I don't know where I am."--David Byrne

Since I'm about to graduate and cross over into the real world, I think it's about time that I take inventory of what I know.

For instance, I know that I do some pretty stupid things. That's all right though; it's taught me the first fact of life;

The only TRUE test of intelligence is keeping yourself out of trouble when you do stupid things. Some of us are tested more often than others. You can't help but get "street smart" when exam week goes on all year long.

I've therefore concluded that I will continue to do stupid things after I graduate in an effort to further my education.

I don't feel uncomfortable about a future full of stupid acts because of the second fact of life:

Most people do stupid things. They just usually aren't written about in the paper. Look at Ronald Reagan's situation.

Having a flair for phrasing things, I often let discretion lose out to what sounds good. I won't apologize for this since it's what makes me good at what I do. This leads me to the third fact of life:

Being clever has nothing to do with being wise. The strange result of this is that I'm only half as wise as people think I am. This may include those who think I'm a stupid jerk.

The Stoutonia is seeking columnists for next year in an effort to replace Jef Maynard and myself. The next fact of life is for those who might consider such a feat:

Writing can be a powerful tool in the hands of those who know how to use it. The rest of us would rather just treat it like anything else and flick on the switch before we read the instructions.

Of course, there has to be a sexual fact of life. This one comes from the mind of Woody Allen:

"Sex without love is an empty experience." This is true, but as empty experiences go, it's one of the best.

This column has been a big part of my life for the past two years. If there has been a driving force behind it (that is, above my belt) it has to be the fifth fact of life:

"Most of the things I believe are probably not true." This wouldn't be a comforting statement except for the fact that most people don't believe it about themselves. And remember, most people do stupid things.

HOW DO YOU THINK THE NEW FIELD HOUSE WILL AFFECT STOUT ATHLETICS?

WYATT: I admire the work Dr. Warren Bowlus (Athlete Director) and Rita Slinden (Intramural Director) do with what we have now. I can just imagine how nice it will be with the new facility. The training room and locker rooms will be expanded. There will also be more office space. Currently, myself and four assistants work on one side of this office while Coach Miller is on the other side. The new fieldhouse will be nice to showcase the athletes. It will be a positive recruiting tool. It will be tremendous for the students who have sacrificed for late intramural scheduling, and good for the program as a whole.

WHAT IS YOUR OUTLOOK FOR THE 1987 FOOTBALL SEASON?

WYATT: We have got to be excited, we lose six seniors but the bulk of the team returns. Two of my former players (Anthony Fisher and Tim Cotten) in high school who were all-staters and had full ride scholarships at West Texas State University transferred into Stout last fall. I coached quarterbacks specifically last year. (Robert) Lindberg was hurt in the first part of the season, but by the end of the season we had three quarterbacks, all started. Next year they will all be veterans. This year we beat nationally-ranked-number-two LaCrosse 29-21 and threw the ball a record 66 times. We are very optimistic, we had good high school recruiting. We are making a run for the conference title, we are due, it has been 22 years.

HOW DOES STOUT COMPARE TO OTHER DIVISION III SCHOOLS?

WYATT: That is hard for me to compare. My experience has been with division I and II schools. There are not that many division III schools around. A few things I think are excellent are the student center, library, home-ec building and the residence halls. Compared to Panhandle State, there is no comparison. We can compete with anyone in the conference but what is most important about Stout are the programs offered and the people associated with them. The people here make the experience. It is nice being here but being from down South -What is all this about the winter we are supposed to have??

WHAT CHANGES AT STOUT WOULD YOU LIKE TO SEE?

WYATT: I would like to see greater student and faculty involvement in athletic programs. We have a product to be excited about. The swimmers hosted the conference and national meet. We have a fine basketball program and national participants in gymnastics. Besides this, we are building the football program. It was very upsetting when I heard some Eau Claire students say, "When in doubt go to Stout." I would like to see a changed attitude, so there is little doubt to go to Stout.

That would have meant a change in the term of incumbent Mayor Chuck Stokke, who is Menomonie's postmaster. City voters last summer approved making the mayor's term part-time."

Let's get the record straight! In the costly special election for mayor in July, 1986 the electorate voted for candidates to fill the new mayor's position. NO PLACE ON THE BALLOT WAS THERE A CHOICE FOR MAKING THE POSITION FULL-TIME OR PART-TIME. Mr. Stokke chose to continue his full-time job with the post office; thereby deregulating the new mayor's position to his part-time position.

This scenario ends with Mayor Stokke's ill-fated "20-month study" conducted by his hand-picked special committee voted 6-2 in favor of making the position full-time.

The impending referendum does not change Mr. Stokke's term as mayor. It would simply require Mr. Stokke to put his priorities in order so the city, not the post office, would receive his first allegiance as mayor for which he was elected!

ONCE AGAIN the Menomonie City Council rejected the people's voices and denied their legal right to petition for direct legislation -striking down our check and balance on government.

How can we, the people of Menomonie, continue to allow four people to disregard not only the will of the people but also the law? Who is running the city for whom?

Sincerely, Dolly Shranklen

Seeds of Change

He loves me?

Gene Emahiser

For God so loved the world that He gave His one and only Son, that whosoever believes in him shall not perish but have eternal life.
John 3:16

Almost anyone with even a small exposure to Christianity has heard John 3:16. I think that this verse has effectively inoculated a large group. The dreaded disease? Chronic Christianity.

We have read it on the bumpers of cars, billboards, pamphlets placed on our cars, and now, on Monday night football, you can see the reference John 3:16 emblazoned on a white sheet.

Why all of the fuss over one verse of the Bible? In this statement, Jesus was laying out the reason for his life. The basis of Christianity can be derived from this statement.

To put the verse in simpler terms, God loves you so much that He sent His only Son to die on earth and take the place of you on the cross. Now all that you must do is believe that God exists and that He has provided the only way to Him. If you will put your trust and faith totally into that and that alone, you will escape eternal separation from God and enter into a life of communion with God that will last forever.

The first part of the verse is the pivotal statement that many people have a hard time accepting.

HE LOVES YOU!

These three words sound innocent, but they undermine the authority that Satan has on earth. When God showed us this love, He conquered Satan and Hell for eternity. Jesus' death and resurrection, as an act of love, gave us the power, authority, and dominion, as believers, to spit in the face of Satan and say, "You're a loser, Chump! Take a hike!"

Let's take a close look at each of these three words.

1. He or God God, the Creator and Ruler of our universe, the all powerful, all knowing being who designed you and created you from nothing, said that He also loves you. He personally cares for you.

2. Loves What kind of love is God talking about here? The Greek word that is translated into our word love is "agape". Agape is the type of love that is self-sacrificing. For God to have agape love, He would have to lay down His life for someone else. What a God! He chose to give His life for us before we even knew who He was, let alone knew him personally.

3. The World or You Here again we can see that God loved us even while we are still in the world, or said another way, He loved us even while we hated Him.

God Loves You

Even though you might be the worst enemy of God, He still loves you. God loved us so much that He gave His only son as a sacrificial offering unto Himself for our sins.

Jesus Christ underwent the most painful death that history has ever recorded. He was beaten for hours by an army of Roman soldiers. He was whipped 39 times with a whip that contained pieces of broken glass and metal. He hung on a cross, being only supported by the nails driven through his feet and hands.

As if the mocking and physical pain weren't enough, Jesus went through something that none of us have experienced yet. As Jesus undertook the sins of the world, God the Father was unable to even look upon him. At this point, Jesus and the Father were separated for the first time.

The question is not "Does God exist?" or "Does God care about me?" No, the real question is, "Do I care about God?" God has already done everything that he possibly can to save you from your sin and eventually hell. The ball's in your court now. God is waiting for your reply.

The Bible is very clear on the issue of commitment. God says that either you are for him or against him. Choose, today, who you will serve: God, who loves you enough to die for you, or your own passions and desires.

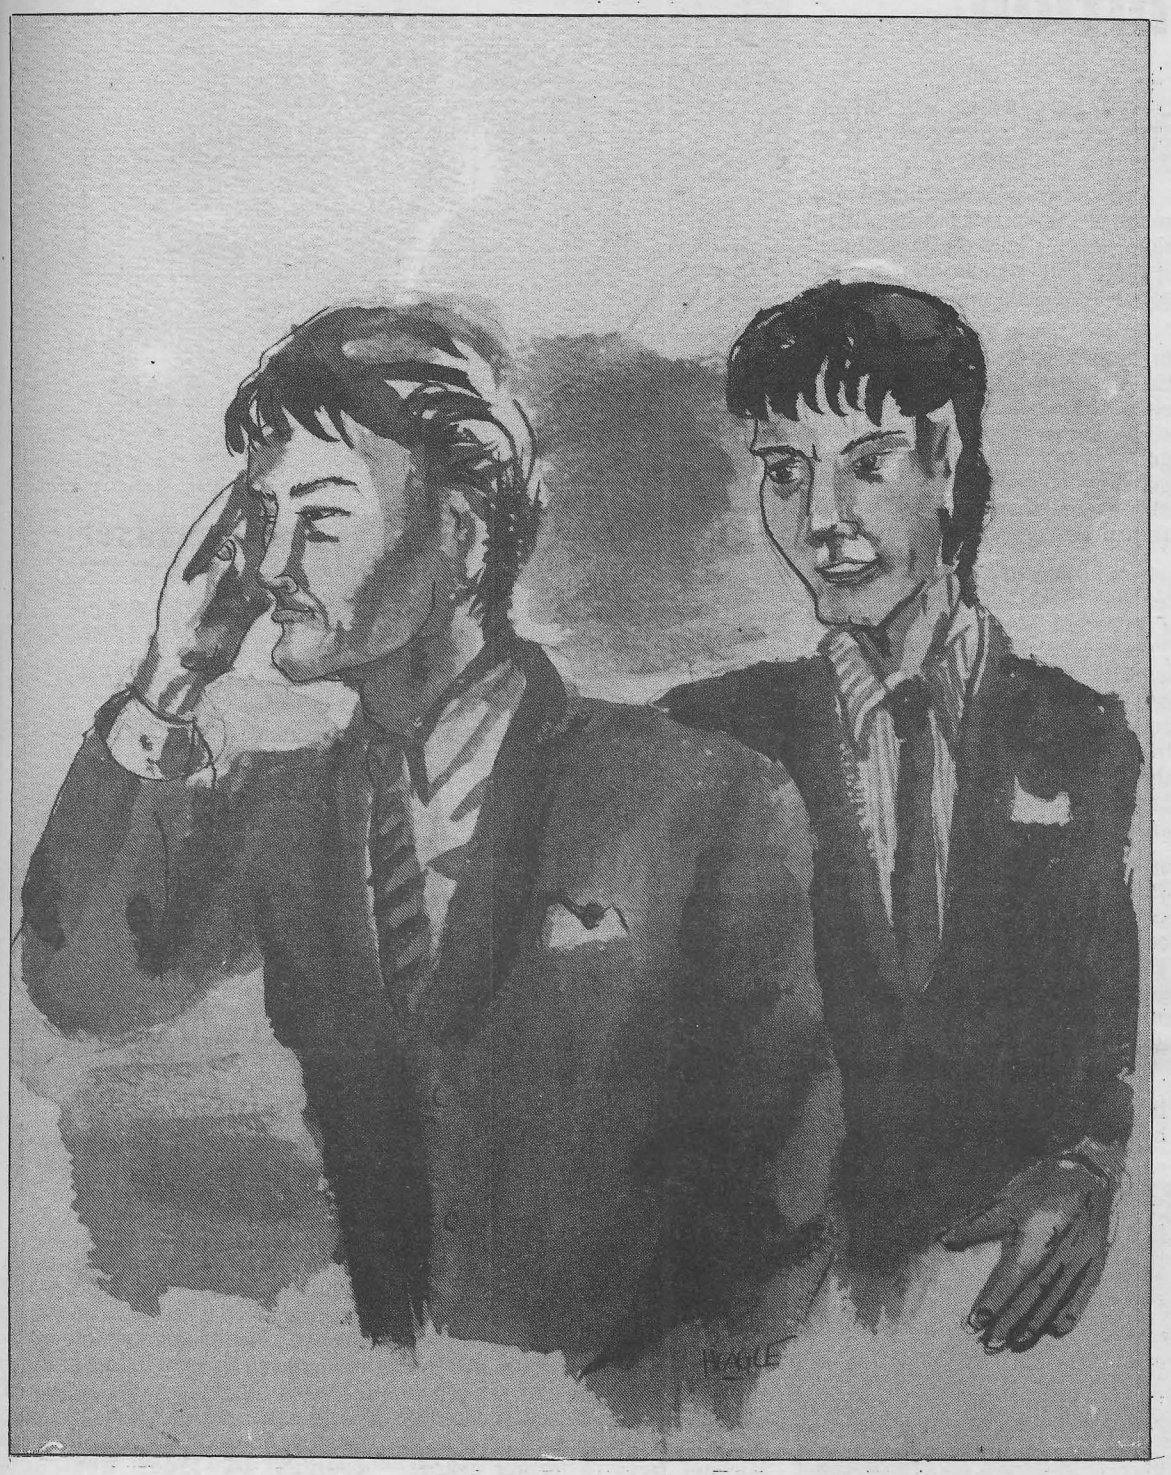
Interviewing need not be terrifying



by Rhonda Olson

Interviewing can be a terrifying ordeal for many students. The type of suit to wear, the behavior expected of you, and many other worries assault students.

Robert Dahlke, Director of Career Planning and Placement, said that there is no doubt that students are measured on their dress and overall appearance.

The main points considered here are suits, behavior, and accessories/hygiene.

When deciding upon a suit, consider three factors. The biggest factor is to determine what type of company you will be interviewing with. This step will help you to decide what type of image you should portray. The second factor is determining what position you will be interviewing for. Some companies desire more conservative dress, while other companies look for more trend setting type of people. The last point is to consider to corporate dress.

Dr. Mary Welch, Program Director of Fashion Merchandising, said that if you don't know what the corporate dress is, play it safe with a conservative image.

Welch also said that it is not necessary to wear a different suit to the second interview. The look of the suit can simply be changed by wearing a different shirt, tie and accessories by men. Women have a wider variety of accessories to play with when changing the look. For example, by wearing different shoes, hose, blouse, and accessories, a woman can easily achieve several business looks with one suit.

Questions about preparation for the interview and the interview itself, can be answered in the Placement Office, Administration 103. The counselors and directors have advice and information about companies and student's interviewing responsibilities.

A Stout graduate who has gone through many interviews is Barb Deiters, Customer Service Manager for Target in Edina, Minn. The first thing that Deiters looks for in a candidates dress is that the person appears comfortable and at ease. Deiters also said that research of the company was important.

"Be yourself because you don't have a lot of time to make an impression," said Deiters.

Natural behavior is important, also of great importance is corporate behavior. Knowing what is expected from you on the part of the interviewer can make the interview go more smoothly.

Some steps which students can take in preparing for a successful interview are reading, classes, and special sessions on corporate etiquette.

A book Welch recommended concerning business etiquette is Corporate Etiquette, by Emily Cho. The Library Learning Center also has many other resources available on the subject.

A class which Stout offers for education in corporate behavior is, Self Presentation in Business. Corporate Etiquette may be offered in the future. Instruction in this class would cover topics such as social atmosphere at dinner parties, small talk and preparation for small talk, non-verbal communication, travel with the opposite sex, and many more important issues. When this class becomes available it will be offered to all majors.

Ruth Thomas, a counselor with the Co-operative Education program, and Dr. Welch have held "early bird" sessions which provide students information about corporate behavior. Welch stated the mini-session could be held again if students show enough interest.

Accessories and personal hygiene are elements to consider when preparing for an interview. Welch mentioned that bracelets and red nail polish should be avoided. Jewelry worn for an interview should be small, conservative and of good quality. Beware of chipped or tarnished jewelry, also avoid "cheap" jewelry.

Other accessories which are necessary for students to carry to their interviews are a brief case or quality folder, and a professional appearing pen.

A general rule to follow: anything the interviewer can or will see must be given some attention in your preparation, said Dr. Welch.

Good hygiene is a vital part of creating a successful image. Dahlke said that clean hair which is out of the eyes and stylish is a major factor. Neat finger nails, clean handkerchief or tissues, and polished shoes are of great consequence. Dahlke recommended that men not wear earrings.

Rick Files, training manager for Holiday Inn, said that he likes to see someone who appears neat, well-groomed, and professional in manner. He also said that he looks for, "someone who has obviously taken the time to prepare for the interview."

Files said that out of all the school's he has recruited at, he has found that Stout students are some of the best prepared in information and dress.

Graduating art student shows prints in national exhibition

by J. Dauplaise

"I Can't Get No Satisfaction", by the Rolling Stones, is, although a cult classic, not necessarily true. At least in the case of Rick Hutter, a graduating studio art major. Hutter was recently accepted to two national art shows.

As any artist can knows, nothing is quite so satisfying as having one's work appreciated and formally acknowledged. The exposure and recognition made possible through national and regional exhibitions is highly sought after by artists from allover. Because of such extensive competition, acceptance to these shows is quite an honor.

The shows to which Hutter was accepted are "For Love or Money", which is hanging at Cameron University in Lawton, Oklahoma, and "LaGrange National 12" in LaGrange, Georgia.

Hutter learned of the shows via a bulletin board on the third floor of the Applied Arts building. "I've been rejected from twice as many shows as I've been accepted to," said Hutter.

Hutter has been attending Stout for five and a half years. He will graduate in May with a degree in Studio Art, concentrating in Printmaking, with a minor in Business. He has been very active as a student, having served as president of the Fine Arts Association, editor and art editor of the Prometheus, and has been a PASS advisor for four years.

After graduating, Hutter is interested in working with the visual arts in a business capacity.

The printed pieces which Hutter does are derived from the influence of Pop Art and Minimalism. They incorporate the use of pop culture elements in making satirical statements. The pieces are highly impactive and visually striking.

> "Stout has the best Art department in Wisconsin
> —Rick Hutter"

Hutter cited as major influences on his work the artists Andy Warhol, Ellsworth Kelly, and David Hockney.

Typical of Hutter's work are the garish colors he uses. Glaring purples clash with grass green and turquoise to reiterate the satirical element of his work. "I choose tacky colors which will offend. They are pleasing because they offend. It's inverse chic."

The sixties provide Hutter with much of his subject matter. "With the recent nostalgia kick," said Hutter, "I'm wondering if my imagery should change."

Hutter uses the silkscreening medium to execute his images. He has experimented with and stretched the traditional method by screening on 45 rpm records, using gold spray paint, and incorporating billboard paper. He has also executed some of the largest screen prints ever done at Stout.

In addition to printmaking Hutter also paints. "My paintings are a different story." said Hutter. "They regard intimate passages working within large fields of color." Photographs are often included in his painted works. He paints in an intuitive manner quite unlike the precision and order required in his printed work.

The balance of intuition and order has allowed Hutter a flexibility in an already flexible program. Said Hutter, "Stout has the best Art Department in Wisconsin. The program is flexible, which is good. The success of the department is reflected by the success of its graduates."

Hutter is sure to continue the tradition of excellence established by the Art Department at Stout.

Rick Hutter is a graduating senior in studio art. concentrating in print making. Two of his prints will be appearing in national exhibitons in Lawton, Oklahoma and LaGrange, Georgia, Hutter entered the prints in a advertised competiton.

Boppel notes changes in the art department

by Stevie Voll

When Todd Boppel came to Stout in 1963 the art department was just starting to form. In 1963, the school also hired Rob Wilson (currently teaching ceramics and design) and Michael Jerry (a former instructor) The plan was to start an art department. The three taught design courses that related to the Home Economics department along with a few courses offered in the area of drawing and painting.

In 1964, Stout hired Orazio Fumagali to head up the art department. For the next three years the art department was gradually building to its present standards. Painting studios were placed above the Pub, Printmaking in an old bottle factory, and classes were taught in an old farmer's store across from the Credit Union (which is now a parking lot).

Then most of the students were enrolled in the Art Education and the Studio programs. Things have changed through the years. Now the art department consists of 450 students most of which are in the design area and there is a big place called the Applied Arts Building.

At present, Todd Boppel teaches drawing, painting and design courses at Stout. After graduating from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee with a master of science degree in art, he went to teach at the Racine Unified School District for three years. He has also taught at West Surrey College of Art and Northeast London Polytechnic, both for a year and then came back to Stout. In 1967, he received his MFA from University of Southern California in Painting.

Presently, his work consists of large canvases of color and line, usually about 3' by 4' which he seemes to label abstract-impressionism. Pointing to the impressionist use of color and pointlism which was a sort of scientific approach to color. Some paintings are large grid-patterns that fire the eye around in the rectangle. The paintings start as patterns on grid paper, sometimes charcoal drawings.

The paintings he said came out of field painting which is disturbed by line. Bopple said, "These are inquiries into space and color." The color varies through the painting, some being reduced to black and white with color showing through the surface.

Exhibitions include locations around the world: Kuhl Gallery, Hannover, West Germany, Sweden, England as well as more local shows. In 1985, a one-man show at the Friends Gallery, Minneapolis Institute of Art and more recently a group show at the David Barnet Gallery, Milwaukee.

Being a teacher involves many duties and it leaves a limited amount of time to be a painter. Somehow, he still keeps the two occupations going. Boppel's accomplishments as a teacher and a painter rather speak for themselves.

Todd Boppel has been a member of the art faculty since 1963. He has seen the department make major advances since it began. Boppel has also been exhibiting his work to galleries world-wide. Boppel classifies his work as, absract impressionism.

Richard Henzel spends aproximately three hours in make-up to perfect his likeness with Twain. Henzel has performed the character so often he has perfected the performance. University Programming plans to present more theatrical performances like Henzels, in the future.

Richard Henzel captivates audience in one man Mark Twain show

by Jennifer Tooley

In an attempt to draw bigger crowds and to please and entertain more students, the Performing Arts Commission of the University Programming Board has included a series of one-man acts in the Spring Series. Last week Thursday, Richard Henzel portrayed Mark Twain in a production entitled, "Mark Twain in Person." Henzel has perfected the character through 700 performances as Twain, and has entertained audiences across the United States and Great Britian.

"We were all in his living room listening to... a crazy old man —audience member"

Henzel spends approximately three hours in make-up, perfecting it until the resemblance to Twain is uncanny. Henzel also oversees the stage setting and lighting to make the transformation as real as possible.

Reaction to the lecture at UW-Stout was enthusiastic. One audience member described the show as, "magnificent; it was Twain come to life, he just talked to us as if we were all in his living room listening to the ramblings of a crazy old man."

A mixed audience of about 85 students, faculty and community members attended the performance. Most had very positive things to say. This reaction has encouraged Student Activities Director Kay Gilbertson, who is helping the Performing Arts Commission, to come up with new ideas for entertainment at Stout.

"We just wanted to see what would happen," Gilbertson said, "it was good to see that many people."

The Performing Arts Commission's next theatrical performance is entitled, "The Devil, You Say?" and will be held April 14 in the Great Hall. In this performance, Scott Keely becomes the devil and portrays him as depicted in folk tales and literature. Gilbertson is excited about the show and believes it will bring much to the art scene at UW-Stout. Further information about "The Devil, You Say?" is available by contacting the Performing Arts Commission.

Let the Fat Lady sing

Denise Cain

Hotel Shell was lined up with the camera at Epcot. I posed with a glossy smile in front of the grand attraction: Shamoo, the whale. Shell yelled from across the room, "Hey Bernice, do you want to suck it in, I can't see the whale."

It was at this point in my life when I came to a fork in the road, either I regain my girlish figure or I grow fins and join Shamoo in the tank. Since I look awful swimming naked (Even a swimsuit could not hide my condition), I decided to lose the weight.

My weight gain in Florida did not go unnoticed in Menomonie. My ever concerned co-worker Rich Maggot-eyes mentioned that I seemed to look rather fulfilled since Florida. He asked me what I had been swallowing.

My female co-worker (I will call her Laurie) was thrilled with my weight gain. Finally she could lend me her clothes. I am especially interested in that White outfit. It always looked so good with her Bob haircut.

I turned to my boss for help. He is an expert at diagnosing weight loss to virtually anyone who walks past his office. He gave me many timely tips towards losing weight including: abstinence from food, limiting my alcohol consumption to those drinks that are bought for me, and a weight lifting program, which would consist of raising my thighs a couple times a day.

I began to condition my quivering rolls into lean cellulite. At breakfast I resisted the strawberry danish for a warm Pop-Tart. In the afternoon I stepped on the scale without stopping to rest. During the evening I jumped like a fat lady on a trampoline, waking all the neighbors.

The results have paid off because I have lost weight. Now I can sleep on my stomach and my feet still touch the bed. I can also walk down the streets of Menomonie without little kids making wicked sneers about my jowls. The following recipes are great salad recipes that can be made this Spring or all Summer. They are especially good for Easter feasts.

One Point Perspective

Kodachrome

Jean-Marie Dauplaise

Although Spring Break is quite over and the ugly realities of daily academic existence have once again seized our lives, a vestige of the Spring Break experience remains in the photographs taken during that time.

In my usual procrastinatory manner, it was only two day ago that I finally managed to procure the developed prints. They turned out fine for the most part, but, as usual, there were the expected mystery photos and thoroughly embarrassing "candid shots" my boyfriend insisted on taking.

Just what I've always yearned for is a blurry shot of me springing off the toilet as the door was kicked open. Likewise the overhead view of me packing my suitcase is much appreciated.

In our travels we were able to document the finer cultural monuments which we encountered. The "Kum and Go" stores, Iowa's answer to Tom Thumb, were a constant roadside companion worthy of documentation. I also insisted on taking a series of shots of the "Dick Bong Memorial" in Poplar, Wis. It really exists. I have pictures.

I do feel somewhat guilty now, however, having taken these shots since I didn't even bring a camera with me when I went to Washington, D.C. I was assuming my family and friends already knew what the Washington Monument and the Jefferson Memorial looked like anyway.

The only photographs I have of the trip are those sent by a friend who enjoys using his camera as a torture device. The prints he sent were of two individuals, a male and a female passed out on a bed. He, and various nameless accomplices had unbuttoned the girls shirt, stuffed it with twenty dollar bills, placed the male individual's hand in a prominent position which blatantly displayed the TIME card they had inserted between his fingers. In the background, various persons, including myself, look on.

I don't know what the guy who arranged and took that photo is doing now, but I have rather lascivious ideas regarding what he might be doing with his life.

My own father enjoys using photography as a torture device as well. By taping twenty five year old photographs of my mother around the house in attempts to recall her more youthful figure, he usually succeeds in making her quite irate. He also carries truly nauseating photographs of me in his wallet which pay homage to my former Marsha Brady hairstyle.

The most creative use of photography is done by tabloids such as the National Enquirer and Midnight Star. This inquiring mind wants to know how they truly expect me to believe the content of superimposed and retouched photographs in which I can still see the cut lines and brush work.

Their advertisers go one step further. In fact you can make great "Before and After" shots right in your own apartment or dorm room. Just find the biggest pair of pants you can possibly get your hands on, step inside, and pull the waist out in front of you. If the pant are really big this may require assistance. Have a roomate snap a shot of you in this flattering pose. 'Voila!'

All this discourse on photography may lead you to believe I may be at least partially knowledgable on the subject. I did take Elementary Photography last year, but didn't learn a hell of a lot. I'm not really sure how to load the film properly. My boyfriend took a nifty picture of his friend Jeff's beer mug while performing this simple task. Jeff's head is cut off and entirely out of focus, but I kind of like the picture anyway.

I can develop black and white film with major amounts of assistance and a little luck. Aside from that I didn't learn much in my Photography class. Not because I didn't want to, but because it was virtually impossible. The instructor distracted me so much with his continuous grammatical errors.

I'm not talking about an occasional "ain't" either. My friend and I sat in back one day and recorded no less than forty grammatical errors in one class period. His favorite phrase was "most contrastiest". I was appalled. I am not claiming grammatical infallibility, but this was ridiculous.

Stout tennis wins two of three matches in Duluth

by John Pelishek

The men's tennis team, despite playing on an unfamiliar court surface at the University of Duluth, won 2 of its 3 matches last weekend.

On Friday the netters split matches, first losing to the University of Duluth by a 5-4 score and then came back later by beating the University of North Dakota by a 7-2 mark.

The Duluth -1 singles player beat Chris Jauoweic in a 3 set match at 3-6, 6-2, 6-1 and Mark Paine beat Tom Lepisto 7-6 who defaulted after an injury. -5 singles Tony Phiefer ousted Tim Turnquist at 7-6, 6-3.

In doubles Leehy and Paine won a close 6-4, 7-6 match against Ton Aney and Wells Patter.

Stout lost -1 singles star Tony Snoeyenbos due to an ankle injury he suffered earlier.

Although the loss of Tony hurt us we still could have won," said Tennis coach Bob Smith. " University of Duluth is a good team and it would have been tough even with Tony."

Later on Friday the team fared better. Appointed -1 singles John Leehy won against Phil Burke of North Dakota 6-4, 6-4 who is a very good, steady player mentions Smith.

> "The indoor surface is a fact of life in the north
> —Coach Smith"

"Although we have no excuses to playing on their hard Tarton surface, we played better as soon as we adjusted," says Smith. "The indoor surface is a fact of life in the North," mentions Coach Smith.

In other singles matches, 2 singles Mark Paine defeated Kevin Erikson 6-3, 7-3, -3 singles Mike Friedman beated Del Nelson 6-4, 6-0 and Bill Johnson won easily at 6-1, 6-1 against Terry Sheehar. 5 singles Tony Pheipher won 6-3, 6-3 over Mike Atwood.

On Saturday the netters played flawlessly, winning all 9 of its matches against Michigan Tech University.

In singles matches against Tech, Todd Trabant beated Brian Elison 6-4, 6-0, -2 singles Mike Friedman defeated Tony Spivak and Tony Pheifer handled Don Livingston at 6-1, 6-2.

Bill Johnson and Mike Friedman who are 2-0 as a Doubles team won 6-0, 6-4 over Tony Spivak and Jorge Chavez while 5-2 Doubles team Tony Pheifer and Todd Trabant outdid John Tucker and Kregg Raducha, 6-1, 6-2.

For the weekend three players, John Leehy, Mark Paine, and Tony Pheipher went undefeated while Mike Friedman and Bill Johnson won 2 out of 3 matches.

To date the mens' the tennis team has a 12-9 record and look to strengthen it next weekend against schools like rival Eau Claire and Northern Iowa.

John Zuerlien's twenty-five years of physical education

by Paul Emerson

It was 1962. The majority of today's Stout students were yet to be born. But in that same year a student named John Zuerlein was entering his sophomore year here on the Stout campus.

Twenty-five years later, and a lot of good memories inbetween, John Zuerlein remains on the Stout campus, although thankfully not as a student.

Zuerlein is now an instructor in the Physical Education Department and also coaches the women's gymnastics team.

After first entering Stout in 1959, Zuerlein dropped out after his freshman year, and returned to his hometown of Lincoln, Nebraska, until returning here in 1962.

During his sophomore year here at Stout, Zuerlein led a group of 24 interested students who wanted to start up a men's gymnastics program. Zuerlein was appointed coach of the team, while also competing on the team.

For the next 3 or 4 years, Zuerlein coached and competed for the Stout men's gymnastics team until he had used up his eligibility to continue competing.

Zuerlein received his Master's degree from Stout in 1966. From there he worked on an American Industries Research Project, while continuing to coach mens gymnastics at Stout.

But in 1969 the project was terminated. Faced with leaving the area in search of other employment, or enrolling in education classes and remaining at Stout. Zuerlein chose the later, a decision he is very happy he made today.

So in that same year, Zuerlein was hired as a Physical Education instructor, and also remained the gymnastics coach. In 1979, the women's gymnastics program started, and Zuerlein became coach for both teams.

> "I believe you learn from experience
> —John Zuerlien"

Due to several factors that led to a decline in the popularity of men's gymnastics, the program at Stout was dropped after the 1982-83 season.

"The NCAA and the NAIA both dropped sponsorship of their national meets," said Zuerlein, "and a lot of area high schools dropped their programs. Which dwindled the pool from which to draw from."

Looking back on some of the mens teams he has coached, Zuerlein has a lot of good memories to draw from. "All the teams were good," said Zuerlein, "twice we were 2nd at the NAIA nationals. And that was back when the competition was very tough, (among the 15-20 teams)."

"I can't mention all the names, but there was a lot of skilled athletes, with several national champs and all-americans among them," said Zuerlein.

The womens team has completed just it's 9th season. The 1983-84 team which finished 4th in the NAIA, was the strongest team that Zuerlein has coached.

"They were all very enjoyable teams to coach," said Zuerlein, "and this year's team is going to be a very talented team."

When asked why he has remained at Stout, rateher than move onto perhaps a larger school, Zuerlein was quick to reply.

"I like the hands on experiences, they make things happen. Everything is geared toward career development, knowledge, and skill," said Zuerlein.

"I don't think people realize the advantage this campus, at least not until they get out," added Zuerlein.

Zuerlein has a strict, regimented coaching style, explaining that, "I try to help them and guide them, while integrating school and gymnastics together."

In his classes that he teaches, Zuerlein also likes the hands on experience style of teaching. "I believe you learn from experience, so most of the classes I teach are hands on doing type things," said Zuerlein.

Zuerlein was instrumental in initiating the Outdoor Adventure series of courses that includes: Outdoor Skills, Orienting(land navigation with a map and a compass), Outdoor Living, and Skiing classes.

Zuerlein credits Dr. Warren Bowlus with allowing him to try new things and expand into more area's, that he could teach in his physical education classes.

On a closing note, Zuerlein said, "it's been a lot of fun, it's very challenging. There's been ups and downs, as there is in anything you do. I've met some pretty fantastic people here both on the faculty, the administration, as well as the students."

"Is that your real name?"

Cosmas A. Whitten

"Is that your real name?" is a question I am always asked. Names have been written about before in The Stoutonia and since I have no other ideas as to what to write about I will inform all as to what it is like to walk around with a weird name like Cosmas.

When I was a little girl I could not even say my name much less spell it. When asked, "What is your name little girl?" I replied, "Zebra." This I could say. I have a friend named Jodi who loves that story so much, she even started calling me Zebra.

As I grew older, cosmic candy became the "in" candy to eat. My peers often asked me if I was named after that yummy stuff which fizzed in your mouth. Others asked me if my father owned cosmic candy. My obnoxious reply was always, "No, they named cosmic candy after me."

The teasing never ended. I remember being handed out locker assignments in gym class. First, when my airhead teacher at Glenbrook North read off each girl's name and her locker assignment for the locker room, my name was not read off.

Next the airhead read off the boys' names and included mine with them. I guess I would not have minded so much if there had been even one decent-looking guy in my class, but there was not. I in turn decided to get perturbed at my teacher with the out-of-date beehive hairdo. All she had to do was see that there was a F for female next to my name.

I sometimes wonder what teachers think when they look over their roster of names and come across mine. I see them breathe a sigh of relief when I am the one who says, "Here." What are they expecting anyway, a weirdo?

Actually my name comes out of the Bible. Saint Cosmas who was a male had a twin brother named Damion. They were both doctors, I believe, in the time before Christ. They were put to death, for what reason I do not know. Anyway, they are martyr saints, whatever that is.

The funny thing is, there is some monk society that keeps sending me mail. I guess they want to recruit me to monkhood. Wouldn't they just shit if I actually took them up on their offer?

I hardly ever get any mail so I sent away for all these free brochures. I knew I was sending my name into a junk order mailing list. I wanted to see how much mail I would get from there so I wrote my name down as Coz. I go by Coz anyway.

Well the person typing my name onto the junk mail list switched the Z to an X. I started getting the usual junk mail like how to hypnotize yourself and various "get rich" plans. A few months later I guess someone thought that Cox Whitten was an overendowed male and sent me obscene catalogues.

When people meet me and I tell them my name they ask me, "Now what is your real name?" When I tell them that that is it they ask, "Well what is your last name?" When I tell them, people are usually very disappointed and say, "Oh, well that's normal."

I guess I have lived with this name all my life so I am used to it. Just remember my experiences when it comes time to name your kid.

Bowling activities in full swing; clubs offer competition, enjoyment

by April Whitney

Many of us are full of spring fever lately and want so desperately to be outside in the sun. Well stop for a minute and think of all those bowlers who are basking, perspiring and wondering, "Will I get a strike?"

The bowling clubs are at the peak of their season. Scores are climbing and the competition is intense. The Stoutonia would like to recognize the outstanding bowlers from last week. Bill McFarlane led the men's league with an individual game score of 255. McFarlane also led the men's competition in the three-game series with a total score of 647.

Bowling can be very intense in the competition series. When asked how he managed to bowl so well throughout the series, McFarlane replied, "You just have to relax and play your own game. Your team gives you a lot of support which really helps also."

McFarlane enjoys bowling for various reasons. First of all he enjoys the "family feeling" of being on a team. "Group interaction and meeting many different people are also included in being a part of the bowling team."

> "Pour team gives you alot of support —Bill McFarlane"

Other leaders in the individual game series were Mark Shady with a 248 and Kurt Akstulewicz scoring 228. Jeff Barsness and Rick Jalling bowled extremely well in the three-game series also. Jeff had a total of 579 and Rick was just behind him with 576 pins.

The lady leader from last week was Jane Haglund with scores of 236 in the individual game and 507 in the three-game series. Cindy Cherek and Carol Kardler followed with individual scores of 178 for Cherek and 169 for Kardler.

The Memorial Student Center team open was also held last week. First place went to The Big Dogs. Congratulations to its members — Al Lucht, Bill McFarland, Mark Shady, Jeff Barth and Keith Andes.

It really seemed like Friday the 13th for The Friday Five team who placed second in the tournament. The team consisted of Cindy Cherek, Roger Myrkle, Ron Klaustermeier, Paul Warosh and Todd Larson. Congratulations to all for a fine show at the tournament.

The Parents' Weekend "Welcome" Tournament will be held on April 4 at 11 a.m. for the first round and at 1 p.m. for the second round. Sign-up is at the recreation desk in the student center for anyone interested in participating.

Athlete of the week: Renee Kasten

by Darron Vanman

Name: Renee Kasten
Sport: Women's Basketball
Year: Junior
Major: Business

Latest Accomplishments: First team All-American according to Fast Break magazine.
WWIAC All-Conference
Fourth in rebounds in Division III according to NCAA News.
Coach: Lynda Lee

Athlete's statistics: Renee Kasten was the star of the women's basketball teams' 0-22 season. She led the WWIAC in rebounding with a 14.2 average. Renee also was the eighth leading scorer in the WWIAC. Kasten landed a spot on the WWIAC All-Conference team

Athlete's history: As good athletes go, an early start at their sport is common. Such is the case with Kasten, who started playing basketball during fifth grade as part of intramurals.

Kasten says she likes basketball because of the competition. "In fact right now [after the season] I really miss it," she said.

Renee also commented on being a star of a losing team. "I'd rather have a good team record than a good personal record. People only seem to care if a team wins or loses. My stats don't mean as much if the team loses."

Kasten blocked only three shots this season, but she said, "I don't really try to block shots. I don't have the arm length for blocked shots. Plus I get in enough foul and has been named The Stoutonia's athlete of the week.

Coach's comments: "Being fourth in the nation in rebounding is quite an accomplishment," Coach Lee said. "Renee has magnetism towards the basket. She is good at blocking out." At six feet, Kasten is one of the shorter centers in the conference.

Coach Lee continued, "She's a real fighter. She always wants to do better. Renee rarely gets irritated with her teammates. Instead she will blame herself."

"Renee has been a very solid player. Even when she's off, she's on," Coach Lee said, referring to the fact that if she is off offensively, she will be on defensively. "She has a strong desire on the court," Coach Lee added.

trouble as it is."

Kasten has set in her mind team goals as well as personal goals for next season. Most important, she wants to beat UW-Eau Claire, a feat that has slipped away the last three years by a close margin. Next, she wants to win at least six conference games and place in the top six in the WWIAC.

As personal goals go, Renee wants to move to the top three in the nation in rebounding and break into the top five in the conference in scoring. She wants to up her average from 14 to 19 points a game.

Team-oriented Renee Kasten made a nice compliment of her team, saying, "This year's team was the best in my three years at Stout."

Lady cagers and spikers sponsor triathlon

by Paul Emerson

Saturday, April 25, 1987 marks the debut of the UW-Stout Modified Triathlon. The Modified Triathlon is being presented by the UW-Stout women's basketball and volleyball teams.

The triathlon will consist of three events — swimming, cycling and jogging. The basic format is to cover as many laps as possible in one hour and to obtain sponsors to pledge monies per lap or flat rate.

An individual can compete in one, two or three of the listed events. Registration is set for 7:30 a.m. with a trio of one-hour brackets at 9 a.m.-10 a.m., 10:30 a.m.-11:30 a.m. and 12 p.m.-1 p.m.

Competitors will be scored in the following age groups: 12 and under, 13-18, 19-25, 26-40 and 40 and over.

Ribbons will be awarded to 1st-, 2nd- and 3rd-place winners in each event, and in each age group for both the male and female divisions.

The individual who runs, swims or cycles the most laps (in each event and age group) will receive a gift worth $50.00.

Gifts include season tickets to the UW-Stout basketball and football games, guest passes and tanning sessions from the Cedarwood Racquetball and Fitness Center and free bowling from the UW-Stout Student Recreation Center.

"What makes this event unique is that it should bring out some serious competitors as well as your novice sports enthusiasts," said the Modified Triathlon Coordinator, Lynda Lee.

The basic philosophy of the Modified Triathlon is to raise monies for the women's volleyball and basketball teams and to provide an opportunity for participating clubs and organizations to finance some of their own projects.

UW-Stout will bill all sponsors and collect all monies. And clubs and organizations will receive 50 percent of all those monies collected.

There is no entry fee and the sponsors' donations are tax deductible. "Help us help you by participating in the UW-Stout Modified Triathlon," Lee said.

For more information or sponsor sheets, contact Lynda Lee at the UW-Stout Athletic Department by calling x-1336.

Stout sluggers split double-header with St. Thomas in Metrodome

by Chris Riba

It was raining outside Monday afternoon, but inside the Metrodome in Minneapolis the UW-Stout baseball team was playing St. Thomas in perfect weather conditions. Stout dropped the first game but bounced back to take the second.

The Blue Devils dropped the first game 5-3 despite the 4-for-4 performance from team leader Jeff Kloes.

"We had one bad inning," Blue Devil Coach Terry Petrie said. One inning was all it took for St. Thomas to capitalize on Blue Devil pitching mistakes and pick up 4 runs on 3 walks, 1 hit batter and a balk.

"We played very well. We outhit them 7-2," Petrie said. "It was just a combination of pitching mistakes."

In game two Stout's pitching came to life and was too much for St. Thomas as Stout won 8-0. St. Thomas went into the day with a record of 7-2. Pitchers Dave Crabtree, John Schmitt, Tim Fuerst and Joe Schopp pitched two innings each, allowing only 2 hits and combining for the Blue Devils' first shutout performance of the young season.

The young squad's defense also contributed a flawless afternoon. Another freshman was added to Stout's lineup. Chris Larson took over the duties at first base, going 2-for-5 at the plate, scoring 2 runs and knocking in another.

> "We played very well. We outhit them 7-2
> —Coach Petrie"

Offensively Jeff Kloes, Karl Drezek and Larsen each had doubles. Drezek completed his 2-for-2 game with a sixth inning blast, the only home run by either team.

The Blue Devils' next game is scheduled for April 3 with St. Mary's at Winona, Minn. They will open the home season on April 4 (Parents' Weekend) with conference foe UW-Eau Claire.

Golfers begin spring practices to prepare for summer tourneys

by Denise Cain

It is a sure sign of Spring when men are hunched over with a huge bag of clubs swung over their backs. So it is the UW-Stout Men's Golf Team as they prepare for the Spring golf season.

In golf, spring is the training period for the fall season. During spring training the team looks for "in-school" talent that could not come out in the fall.

Head Coach Sten Pierce commented, "In the spring we spend time preparing the lettermen and varsity players from the fall for summer tournaments. The members of the team must play a minimum of four summer tournaments to help prepare them for the fall season."

The spring golf season for the Stout golfers consists of four tournaments. On April 17 and 18 the team will compete in the Mankato State Tourney in Mankato, Minn. The following Thursday, April 23, they travel to Northfield, Minn. to compete in the College City Classic sponsored by Carleton College.

To mark the second half of the spring season the Stout men play April 24 at the Lawsonia Country Club in Green Lake, Wis. This tournament is hosted by UW-Oshkosh. May 1 wraps up the year as Stout travels to UW-Stevens Point to compete at the Stevens Point Country Club.

This spring Coach Pierce is completing his sixth year as Head Golf Coach at Stout. He is looking forward to coaching a young, but talented, team.

A member of that talented team is Paul Byron, a junior from Wausau, Wis. Byron was a third-place medalist in the conference meet this past fall.

Other standouts on the team include Charlie Brown, a freshman from Racine, Wis.; Freshman Jim Maguire of Green Lake, Wis.; Jim Nord, a freshman from Elk River, Minn.; Freshman Dan Bolger of Stewartville, Minn.; Jim Olson, a freshman from Mound, Minn.; and Junior Steve Kostka of Schofield, Wis.

Two promising transfer students Coach Pierce mentioned are Craig Anderson, a junior transfer from La Crosse and Junior Steve Dahlby, a transfer from Northern Illinois University and a native of Menomonie.

The conference goals for the team have been set very high. Coach Pierce feels he has four players on the team who have the ability to be the conference medalist next fall. He stated, "The team has the ability to have the best all-time showing ever. We have no excuses for poor play."

Coach Pierce mentioned that there is room on the team for new members to enter. If anyone is interested in trying out for the team, they must see Sten Pierce this spring for an invitation to discuss the qualifying procedures.

THE STOUTONIA

Leadership roles debated by candidates

by Jill Huppert, Rose Shakal

The candidates for SSA president and vice-president of financial affairs met in a debate Monday, March 30, to discuss their plans if elected and their views on issues affecting Stout students.

The debate was sponsored by The Stoutonia and a panel of three people asked questions of the candidates while Dean of Students Sam Wood acted as moderator.

The panelists were Valerie Clark, representing the Inter-Residence Hall Association, Adesola Adisa, minority affairs senator of SSA and Tracy Lea Landis, news editor of The Stoutonia.

Members of the audience were also able to question the candidates.

The three candidates for SSA president are James Falkofske, Mark Nickels and Damon Smith.

During the debate, the candidates were asked what leadership style they would take if elected.

Mark Nickels, a student with four years of experience in student government, said he would assume the role of a consultant.

Nickels said that it is the president's duty to consult with and guide vice-presidents on issues he feels are important.

James Falkofske explained in his opening statement that his candidacy for city council will not be a conflict of interest for him with the SSA presidency.

If elected, Falkofske plans to be an effective leader who would guide the senators and trust in their abilities to do their jobs.

"The ability to take one's actions from one's words is very important" in order to be an effective leader, Falkofske said.

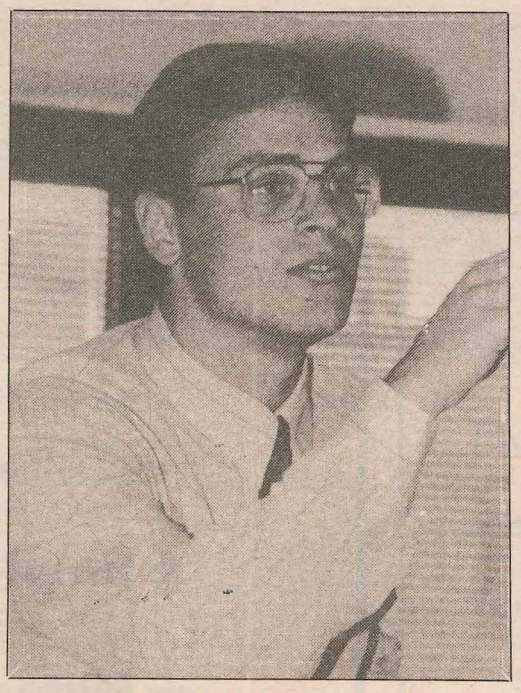
Damon Smith said that he believes in a very directive style of leadership, where students ask and he will try to achieve.

"I want to work for the students, which is you, in the most efficient and effective way possible," Smith said.

When the candidates were asked how they would improve communication between the SSA and the students, Falkofske said he would organize a "President's Lunch," where students could meet and present views and ask questions informally.

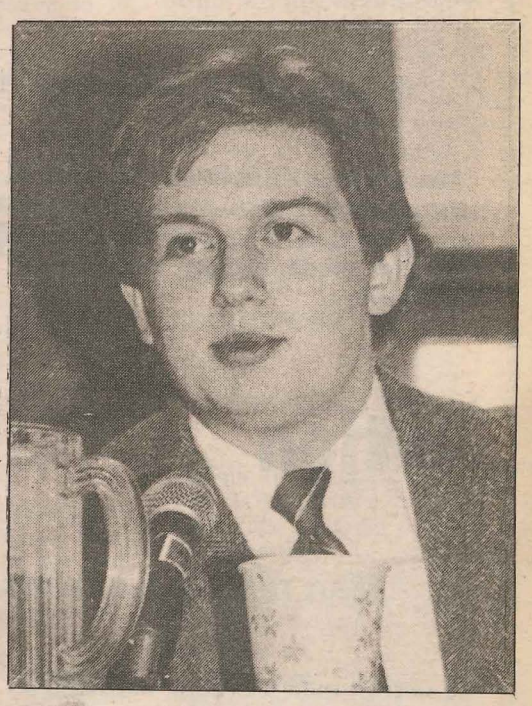
"The president has a responsibility to act as a liason between the student senate and the community," Falkofske said.

"I support continued funding of Cooperative Programming," Nelson said, "which is the most effective use of student funds."



Damon Smith

Mark Nickels



James Falkofske

Smith said SSA and student communication is "really failing."

"There is an isolation of the SSA president and the SSA from the rest of the student body," Smith said.

"The president must take the initiative to open the lines of communication between the SSA and the students," Smith added.

Nickels said he believes the general lack of communication about the SSA is caused in part by The Stoutonia.

"I don't feel that The Stoutonia is properly presenting the news," Nickels said.

Since the majority of Stout students get their news through the student newspaper, Nickels said, "The Stoutonia has to have responsible reporting on student issues."

Jonathan Graham and Todd Nelson, the candidates for vice-president of financial affairs, differed in their views of student government budgeting policies during their part of the debate.

Jonathan Graham described himself as an articulate individual who could bring a new viewpoint into student government and could make intelligent decisions as to where students' money goes.

Although SSA budget money is dwindling, Graham believes, "it has been put in places not in the best interest of students."

Todd Nelson, current member of the SSA Finance Committee, pointed out that he has experience dealing with the budget process and segregated fees.

"A vote for me would be a vote for experience in dealing with your money, where no mistakes can be made," Nelson said.

Nelson believes that Cooperative Programming encourages groups to work together to stop duplication of events.

Graham feels that the Finance Committee has too much control over Cooperative Programming. He believes that funds should be distributed in a more equitable manner.

Graham said there are a lot of Cooperative Programming events not appealing to a large majority of the student population.

When asked about the rationale for budget decisions, Nelson explained that there are guidelines outlining who can be funded for what.

"Any organization can come to senate and ask to be funded," Nelson said. "Each organization is considered as to their past experience in efficiently using funds."

Graham said the SSA needs a better system of checks and balances in its budgeting.

"We need an intelligent, mathematical approach to the budgeting process," Graham said, "rather than an emotional one."

"There can be a lot of trimming of fat in the SSA budget," Graham said.

"Experience is the key to understanding what goes on in the budgetary process," according to Nelson. He emphasized that continued funding of Cooperative Programming offers efficiency for all groups.

The SSA elections will be held on April 6 & 7 in the Student Center.

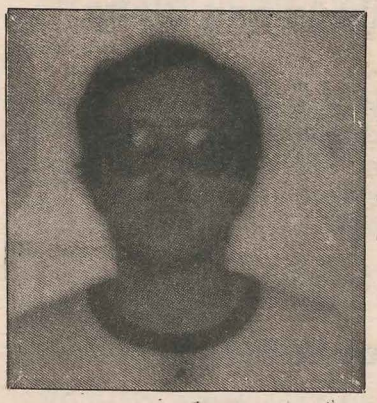
Police hunt for motive in shooting incident

by Eric Johnson

At approximately 10 a.m. Saturday, the body of Timothy D. Hayden was found by friends in the living room of his Menomonie home.

LeRoy Goss and Curt Maloney, both friends of Hayden, discovered his body Saturday after entering his home at 408 E. 20th Ave., in Menomonie.

Goss and Maloney became suspicious after Hayden failed to show up for a dinner engagement Thursday night.



Timothy Hayden

Investigators from the Wisconsin Crime Lab were summoned to assist in the collection of physical evidence.

An autopsy was performed Sunday morning by State Pathologist Dr. Robert Huntington, however, the results have not been released.

According to Menomonie Police Chief Dennis Beety, Hayden was the "apparent victim of a gunshot wound."

Hayden, 27, worked as a custodian at UW-Stout since May of 1981. He was assigned to Jarvis Hall working the 6:00 p.m. till 2:30 a.m shift.

"He was a hard worker and a good friend," said co worker Walter Britton.

Hayden was described as a car enthusiast who owned several vehicles. None of the vehicles including a 1930's automobile were missing.

At this time robbery is not suspected as none of the valuable in the house were disturbed.

The autopsy from the State Crime Lab is expected today.

Rental resource center relocates again

Students entering the newly expanded resource center for the first time may feel a bit disoriented, but the set-up of the center is basically the same as before.

Stephanie Brunner, left foreground, performs the ritual of desensitization on the resources being checked out by a student.

by Mary Raymond

Approximately 110,000 textbooks and instructional resources found a new shelf upon which to rest following Stout's Rental Resource Service (RRS) relocation to 101 Ray Hall.

Having been formed as a part of the Library Learning Center in 1975, the resource center has moved a number of times. Originally located in the weight room behind the Johnson Fieldhouse, the center then moved to the Vocational Rehabilitation building, and finally ended up in 102 Ray Hall. As of the beginning of March, the center made yet another move to its present site, one door down from last year's location.

Brenda Swannack, coordinator for the RRS, said the system will remain as "adequate, useable, and functional" as it has been in the past.

Swannack said that preparations for May returns are already being anticipated as she and her staff remove and rearrange shelf sections to accommodate easier traffic flow.

"RRS is a self-sustaining account based on student fees," Swannack explained, "and all resource purchases and salaries are derived from that flat rental fee paid each term."

Swannack said that students will not see a noticeable difference in the appearance of the resource center. Odd shelving units and worn carpeting are a part of Swannack's operating method.

"Since RRS is self-sustained," Swannack explained, "we believe it is more important to spend for resources, not just looks." "We are happy with the extra space and the additional shelving we've acquired," Swannack added, but the center will continue to direct fees toward obtaining the best resources for students rather than focusing on the aesthetics of the location.

> "It is more important to spend for resources, not just looks.
> —Brenda Swannack"

Unique to a rental resource service, is the center's ability to "go beyond the textbook" and provide paperbacks, pamphlets, microfiche, films, reprints of articles, computer disks, and various custom-made media in addition to the textbooks.

The Rental Resource Center doubles as a library during the semester, allowing resources to be checked out as needed, and also offers discount sales for students who wish to purchase resource materials.

UW-Stout has one of only six rental resource centers in Wisconsin.

Concerns expressed by SSA candidates

by Steven Lemire

With elections less than a week away, there is still time to make an informed choice about the candidates before going to the polls next Monday or Tuesday to vote in the campus-wide elections.

Each of the candidates stressed the importance of voting to assure that your wishes are best represented in the Stout Student association (SSA).

Vice-President of Legislative Affairs

Angela Bias

"As VPLA I would monitor local, state, and national affairs and examine the effects of that legislation on the students at UW-Stout," stated Bias.

"I would then bring these important concerns to the students and monitor their reactions to them," said Bias. "In that way, I could better voice student issues at the monthly United Council meetings."

One of the most important things Bias was concerned with was that students need to get more involved with their student government.

"I would put continued pressure on the students to vote and just be aware of the important issues facing this school," Bias said.

Other areas of focus for Bias are team building, communication between her office and the students, and the effects of the Menomonie City Council on the student population.

Russel Thill

"I am concerned with anything that affects UW-system students in general and UW-Stout students in particular," Thill stressed.

"Proposed cuts in federal financial aid will cost 1.1 million dollars to this school alone, " said Thill. "Also, the enrollment cuts that we have been hearing about will drive up education costs."

"I hope to work with students and student representatives to solve the problems that face this university," Thill stated. "I also hope to increase the level of student involvement and their awareness of the issues."

Thill also cited interaction with the city council, on-campus child care, and statewide involvement as goals of his campaign.

Ali Vazirabadi

"My philosophy is that student government should be task oriented and not based on emotion," Vazirabadi said.

"If I am elected, I will expect students to get involved and work harder for the important issues," said Vazirabadi.

"Participation creates policy, and communication between the student body and the SSA will make us strong," he said.

"I feel that it is my job to point out the power of the individual student," said Vazirabadi.

> "I would put continued pressure on the students to vote...
> —Angela Bias"

"One person can make a difference and you must not underestimate yourselves," he said.

"Once we open the lines of communication we can dispel any misconceptions that we have about each other," Vazirabadi said. "We can then establish a link between UW-Stout and local, state, and national government."

Women's Affairs Senator

Denise Albrecht

"My first concern as Women's Affairs Senator would be to write a position description," Albrecht said. "Currently, there is nothing written about what this position entails."

"I would then like to set up a women's affairs board where I could go to hear the concerns of women of this and other campuses," Albrecht said.

"Date and acquaintance rape is one of the most important issues facing women today," stressed Albrecht.

Albrecht mentioned Students Taking Action Against Rape (STAAR) as a means of heightening awareness and counseling victims.

Albrecht would also like to conduct seminars on interviewing skills for women.

"I would like to show right and wrong techniques, as well as teach women how to recognize discrimination when it occurs," she said.

Laura Wolcyk

Wolcyk is also concerned about the rape issue at Stout.

"It is important to realize that sexual assault and harassment occur," Wolcyk said.

"I would help develop programs to define rape, promote awareness and prevent these situations from arising," said Wolcyk.

"Through counseling, we can help the victims deal with the guilt associated with this act," she said.

Wolcyk said that she feels that a position description for Women's Affairs Senator is very important.

"An unmotivated person could get into this job and not be compelled to do anything," said Wolcyk.

Preparation for Parents' Weekend

by Mary Raymond

Students on a committee here at UW-Stout are preparing for Parents Weekend, which will be held the weekend of April 3 thru the 5th.

Many different activities are planned for the students and their parents. Some of these include comedian David Nastar, the theater production of Camelot, laser art, an antique auto show, and other various entertainments.

Dean Samuel Wood, Assistant Chancellor, explained the purpose of parents weekend. "Parents weekend was originally started as, and remains, a time for parents to see the work and activities of the students, and how they live," Wood said.

"We have to compress into one weekend what should take a week," Wood continued. "The idea is to make the parent more comfortable with the fact that their son or daughter is going to school here."

Wood also stated that around 3,000 parents register each year, with possibly more attending.

Darcy Zimmerman, one of the chairpeople on the IRHC parents weekend committee, said that a lot of work is done into putting the weekend together.

"Right now we are working on the final details, like decorations," Zimmerman said.

The committee consists of 13 members, including 2 chairpeople, and 2 advisors.

Fraternity Little Sisters unite at Lake Street Station party

by Julie K. Ragatz

A Little Sister party was sponsored Thursday night at Lake Street Station by the girls of three fraternity affiliated organizations: Phi Omega Beta, Kappa Lambda Beta, and Sigma Tau Gamma.

Little Sisters are auxilliary groups to the fraternities. The purpose of the Little Sisters is to support their fraternity "brothers."

The ties between the guys and their "sisters" are strong, said Lisa Hegyi, a member of the Phi Omega Beta sisters, "Once you become a sister, you're a sister for life."

The girls support their guys by helping with fundraisers, such as the Phi Omega Beta mudbowl for Kinship, and the Kappa Lambda Beta ice softball tournament, where the sisters tend the concession stands.

The three sister groups had the gathering to promote working together instead of always competing.

"It's important to set up good relations with other organizations on campus," said Denise Albrecht, vice president of the Sigma Tau Gamma sisters.

A big aspect of the Little Sisters is to get involved with other groups, and to get to know people on a more personal basis.

"It's a good way to meet a lot of people all at once," said Michele Bannon, vice president of the Kappa Lambda Beta sisters.

All three groups are relatively new, said Hegyi. "For the amount of time we've been together, we've come a long way."

Hegyi said that in order to become a Little Sister, girls should get in touch with the president or vice president of the desired organization. There is usually a pledge week, or "Hell Week", each semester, but the next one will not be until the fall semester.

During Hell Week, pledges participate in a variety of team activities. "By working together, they get to know each other," said Bannon.

Such events include canoe or camping trips and the tractor tire roll. "Some of the events are kept secret," said Bannon, "but we don't do anything dangerous."

After a short address from an officer of each group, the party ended with a toast to Little Sisters, and somewhere an unknown voice generated applause with a shout of "guys couldn't live without us!"

Healthy lifestyle promoted by Chancellor Robert Swanson

by Masha Roberts

A Proclamation signed by Chancellor Robert Swanson on March 30 declared the week of April 6-10, 1987, to be Wellness Week at the University of Wisconsin-Stout.

In the proclamation, he urged that all members of the community participate in the important learning experiences that Wellness Week offers, which are a part of choosing a healthy lifestyle.

The fifth annual Wellness Week being presented by the Wellness Club of UW-Stout, defines wellness as "a philosophy of life, a style of living. It is picking and choosing the best for yourself so that your years are long, rich and satisfying."

"There are numerous events, presentations and films scheduled for each day during wellness week," said Karen Hoyer, president of the Wellness Club.

She said that one of the most important event during wellness Week is a presentation by Earl Hipp, president of Human Resource Management, Inc. in Minneapolis.

Hipp, the author of "Fighting Invisible Tigers," a book on stress and life management skills for teenagers, would be speaking on the topic of The Wellness Experience.

He is also the former editor and publisher of the Wellness Journal and teacher of courses in "Organizational Programming for Health and Wellness."

"I feel he is a speaker worth listening to because of his experience in the area of Wellness," said Hoyer.

In addition to the other events planned for wellness week, there will also be Wellness menu specials in the Heritage Room and in Grandview Terrace Cafe all week. Items range from pita bread sandwich on Monday to baked fish on Friday.

"I am pleased to know that the students have formed the Wellness Club and are actively participating in it," said Dave Mc Naughton, faculty advisor of the Wellness Club.

Hoyer said that people associated with the Wellness Club, are working hard for the preparation of events for Wellness Week.

"I feel that people should become conscious of the lifestyle they choose to live and a good way to start is by participating in Wellness Week," continued Hoyer.

Redefinition of eligible voters is goal of SSA

by Gretchen Eke

A motion has been tabled for one week that would redefine membership to the Stout Student Association (SSA), to include only students enrolled at Stout.

As it stands now, SSA membership includes voting representation for students, faculty, and administrators.

Concerns were expressed at Tuesday's SSA meeting that faculty already has voting representation for issues on campus through Faculty Senate, and students cannot vote in Faculty Senate.

"We, as students, pay an activity fee," Senator Todd Nelson said. "Are we going to allow people who don't pay this a voice in how this money is spent?"

"We are supposed to represent students," Media Advertising Coordinator James Falkofske said.

Arguing against the motion, Sandra Stark said, "I think we should promote unity between the faculty and the students. Some of the faculty and administrators are as well informed on issues as the students are. I think they should have a right to vote in SSA."

"My sweeping generalization is that they do not know what is going on in SSA," Vice-President of Academic Affairs (VPAA) Julie Weiss responded. Weiss said that she came to this conclusion through her interactions with them.

SSA advisor Bill Siedlecki brought out that not all administrators and staff have faculty standing which make them eligible to vote in Faculty Senate.

"I think that anyone who doesn't get to voice opinion in Faculty Senate should get a voice in SSA," Senator Tom Aumann said.

In other business, VPAA Weiss said that at the last meeting of United Council (UC), the statewide student government association, a resolution passed unanimously which gives UC support of the SSA's request for student representation on the University Positive Action Committee.

This committee, Weiss said, reviews student initiated complaints against faculty members.

"This UC support gives more ammunition and support for the meeting on April 14," Weiss said. "We have all UC schools backing us in our quest for this."

The SSA's request will be heard in the Faculty Senate meeting on April 14.

Also on Tuesday night, the SSA passed a motion which endorses the Education Activities Committee's proposal for an Advanced Placement Policy for Stout, and its proposed changes in the undergraduate academic probation and dismissal policy.

These changes raise GPA requirements and are expected to simplify the present policy.

These proposed changes will be referred to the Faculty Senate for their endorsement.

Reports lead to ousting of two Oetting Hall residents

by Catherine Schneider

The issue of the university's responsibility to control the atmosphere in the residence halls has been raised following the ejection of two students from Oetting Hall.

Tom Roth and Darien Schaefer, formerly of 294 Oetting Hall, claim that the action taken against them was unfair.

The two were removed from the hall by Joseph Brown upon the recommendations of Steve Remington, CKTO Hall director, and Erik Rotvold, their resident advisor.

Roth and Schaefer believe that they have been treated unjustly for several reasons.

They claim that incident reports kept by the hall resident advisors have been falsified and are misleading.

Roth said that one report is dated January 8, 1987, three days before any students were allowed back into the halls.

In another incident concerning the violation of sauna regulations, Schaefer believes he was treated unfairly by Rotvold.

After returning from uptown, he and two visiting friends checked out the sauna. The desk worker allowed them to do so even though it was past the check-out hours.

Schaefer claims that Rotvold blew the matter out of proportion after he discovered Schaefer and his friends in the sauna.

"It wasn't my fault," said Schaefer. "I had no idea what the rules concerning the sauna were."

Schaefer said, "My main gripe is they never came to us and said, 'This is what's happening and you'll be getting in trouble for it.'"

Roth added, "We always heard about it through the grapevine that we were getting written up for something."

Roth and Schaefer appealed the decision to Joseph Larkin, Assistant Dean of Student Services. Larkin upheld the decision.

Larkin maintains that he based his decision on the information that Brown had received from Remington and Rotvold.

Larkin added that both the hall director and the resident advisor were under an obligation as employees to provide the best possible atmosphere for the floor residents.

All of the floor residents, with the exclusion of Rotvold, have signed a petition stating that they have no problems with Roth or Schaefer's community behavior or actions, that they believe the two complement the floor, and that they would testify in their behalf if asked to do so.

Because of the protection granted to Schaefer and Roth by the Education Privacy Rights Act, Brown, Remington, and Rotvold, have declined to comment.

"For me, it is a matter of self motivation," Wolcyk stressed. "It is also a matter of talking to people and finding out what they want and what is important," she said.

Wolcyk is also looking forward to working with other schools and getting ideas and support from the United Council.

Vice-President of Academic Affairs
Dan Meyer

Dan Meyer is running unopposed for his position and wishes to use this space to direct an appeal to the students and UW-Stout.

"By taking part in the university activities," said Meyer, "they will be better and the university will be better as well."

Right now, Meyer said, some of the student positions on university governance committees are vacant. These committees are involved in determining course offerings and availability as well as listening to the needs of the students, Meyer explained.

"On a university committee you work with experienced, accomplished people," said Meyer. "You also work as equals with adults and learn how to influence people."

"There is just no way to learn these life skills in a classroom," Meyer stressed.

Award Winners

On March 17 the the Stout Student Association (SSA) recommended and unanimously approved this year's recipients for the University of Wisconsin-Stout Medallion Award.

The recipients for this year's award were Valerie Anne Clark, Gary A. Harder, Adrian J. Amelse, Agnes Marie Duda, Teresa A. Mitchell, Tony Lundell, Tina M. Grandt, Colleen M. Hartmon, Julie Ann Weiss, Julie Marie Koller, Paul D. Nelson, Brenda L. Bennett, Brent W. Kreofsky, Jeffrey S. Campeau, Wesley R. Stead, Sharon Kay Miller, and Jerome Shea.

The Medallion Award was created to honor those Stout seniors who had given outstanding service and leadership to the Stout and Menomonie communities during their college career. This award is a non-academic recognition, and is the highest such award given to Stout students.

The committee evaluating the recipients consisted of faculty, staff, and students and evaluated the applicants in four areas. Leadership, extra-curricular involvement, service to the Stout and Menomonie communities, and prior recognition for service were the basis for evaluating the individuals.

These Medallion Award recipients will be honored at the Spring SSA Awards Banquet, which will take place on Friday, May 15, 1987.

There are no requirements necessary except willingness to learn, interest in helping people, and a desire to share concerns with their schools and communities.

Application deadline is April 15 . For more information contact Katie Harkins, Program Coordinator, P.O. Box 1430, Cambridge, MA 02238; (617) 868-3002 or (617) 787-3935.

Telephone Tip

Good telephone etiquette dictates that a ringing telephone should be answered by the third ring. However, the third ring to the person being called is actually the fourth ring heard by the caller.

Next time you place a call to an administrative office in the Library Learning Center, Harvey Hall or Tech Wing, carefully listen to the ring signal. It may momentarily stop and start again during the third or fourth ring, if unanswered.

The break in the ring signal indicates that your call has been forwarded to another phone. Someone other than the person you are calling will probably answer the phone. Disconnect when you hear the break if you do not wish to be forwarded to another phone.

Gallery Exhibit

The Uproom Gallery in the 3rd floor of the Applied building will house an exhibit featuring the honor award winning architectural and interior design projects submitted by professionals.

The exhibit, on loan to the university from the Minnesota Society of the American Institute of Architects will run through Friday, April 10th.

Classical Studies Speaker

"The Family Structures of Athens and Rome: The Conflicting Paradigms of European Culture" is the title of the presentation by Eva Kuels, a renowned author and classical scholar who is with the department of classical studies at the University of Minnesota.

Kuels has studied and written on family structure and women's roles in ancient Athenian and Roman society, and traced these patterns through the history of Western culture to the present day.

The presentation is scheduled for Thursday, April 9th at 11:00 a.m. in room 182 of the Home Economics building. Admission is free. Additional information is available by calling 232-1606 or 232-1463.

Editorial

What's news?

The Stoutonia has the fundamental commitment to report clearly and fairly what is going on in the UW-Stout community.

The Stoutonia editorial board accepts the challenge each week of assigning a limited number of stories to staff reporters and photographers.

The job of deciding what is covered and the story location in the newspaper each week invariably pleases those whose story is covered and displeases those whose story is left out.

The decision of what goes in the paper depends on newsworthiness as perceived by the editors. Another significant factor affecting the decision to cover a story is the communication received from groups desiring coverage.

Starting with the first issue put out at the beginning of each semester, The Stoutonia recognizes it cannot please everyone all the time. Each department recognizes it is not psychic. There are important topics missed if we are not notified they are going to happen.

Trying to do the best job it can, The Stoutonia would be helped by community members becoming aware of the needed lead time to accurately cover a news story or print an advertisement.

News deadlines are every Tuesday at 12 noon. Advertising deadlines are every Monday at 4 p.m. News stories are generally assigned one week prior to their due date. Therefore, editors need a week to 10 days advance notice to get the story properly covered.

Most importantly, The Stoutonia thrives on news leads, ideas and suggestions. We encourage students, faculty and staff members to stop in our office with ideas, complaints or even compliments on a job well done.

Editorial board members have office hours and if a staff member is in the office, our door is open to you. The editors need to know what you think of the job The Stoutonia is doing.

Each department recognizes the need to highlight outstanding efforts made in the Stout community. The arts department attemps to widen the view of what art is in our community.

The news department recognized clearly what is going so readers can follow the developments in the community. Columnists write to entertain and impact the thinking of our audience while not representing the opinion of the editorial board.

We hope that these explanations of The Stoutonia's committment and the strict limitations which affect our work helps the Stout community make better use of the paper both as a reader and as a source of news ideas.

What the hell is Cooperative Programming?

I asked this question when the program was first suggested, I've participated in it and I still want to know.

It looks to me like Cooperative Programming (CP) is somebody's sneaky way of gradually undermining student control over student activities fees by centralizing the decisions in the hands of a few people who sit on the Finance Committee of the Stout Student Association (SSA).

While the SSA senators were hacking away at the funding of band and forensics, they were also giving money to non-traditional students for the first time and increasing the budget of the student government itself by $2,000.

They also put $14,000 into CP.

CP, a program started last year, was proclaimed to be a way to improve efficient use of activity fees money.

Best of all, it was said that CP would help groups get to know one another better.

As the chairperson of the University Speaker Series, a committee which chooses, hires and organizes speaking events at Stout, I haven't seen any reason to believe that CP does either of these things.

All I've seen is that hard-working people have put CP funds to creative use and that the Financial Affairs Committee uses implied promise of approval for CP applications to placate people who have been refused independent funding.

This year, $11,000 of the $13,000 in CP went to events sponsored by at least one member of a group called the University Programming Board (UPB).

UPB is a priviledged group. It shares office space with SSA and has a voting seat on senate.

They are the only voice on SSA which has the potential of officially representing students who work with student activities fee funded groups — but they never do.

I am expected to attend the weekly meetings of UPB as chair of a member organization. The only benefit it has been to my group is that it gives us the privilege of being able to use the phone in the SSA office to call agents in the process of hiring speakers.

UPB meeting time has been some of the most unproductive time I've spent all year. Several times I've come in to find the group playing giggly little games to get to know each other better.

I left those meetings early.

The only concrete stand UPB took this year is that they should have strict attendance policies for people like me and that it's okay for us, as chairpeople, to move to change the constitutions of the groups we represent without asking the groups' approval first.

These people scare me.

Since UPB shares an office with SSA, it is understandably convenient that its members take thorough advantage of CP.

But the Fine Arts Association and others were given less than they asked for last year so that money could be put in the CP budget.

This year's budget for the Fine Arts Association and other organizations funded by the SSA was set during last year's SSA budget sessions while the president of Fine Arts, Roger Daleiden, and several others staged a protest outside, urging their Senators to vote against CP so that they could have the money they asked for.

The Senators literally ignored the protest and approved CP.

This year we see that most of the funds sucked away from organizations to collect a $14,000 chunk in CP went to UPB members, although Fine Arts was given CP funds to keep them happy.

The groups that received substantially less than they asked for last year were mostly liberal arts oriented organizations like the Fine Arts Association.

They unwillingly donated part of their budget so that CP could exist.

This year band donated.

I think it's someone's dream that, eventually, CP will grow and grow, completely bypassing the messy, time-consuming process of approval by the representative body, the SSA Senate.

Then the small and efficient Financial Affairs Committee could work its hidden agenda magic on who gets what out of our pooled activities fees without the hassle of diverse representation.

It is my belief that if there wasn't an attempt to stealthily restructure student organizations by a powerful few, a rational review of the design and effect of CP wouldn't be seen as such a crazy idea.

Some of the self-interested people involved think that it is.

What I really want to know is where are the advisors of the SSA and UPB when this baloney is going on?

Healthy Conflict

I think we will all agree that in any campus, state or country there exists a natural, often times healthy conflict between governments and the media. We at Stout are no exception. I have been involved at an executive level with both The Stoutonia and the Stout Student Association, and I have no problem with this.

However, I could not help but chuckle while reading the editorial of March 26. Apathy is always a problem; it can be fought, or it can be accepted. I have always been under the impression that the former is more acceptable than the latter.

Let's take a quick look at paragraph eight of your editorial. The Stout students are asked to consider how they should react to the "SSA's confrontational style... with the faculty senate, The Stoutonia, and Menomonie landlords."

Would The Stoutonia prefer that we, as a student government, remained apathetic, taking no action on behalf of our students which may cause a degree of friction? It has been our policy throughout this administration to deal fairly but firmly with any group not acting in the best interests of students. We are presently making headway with the faculty senate. As for The Stoutonia, I suppose it is easy to see why they were named along with these other two groups. After all, don't we all like to see our names in print?

If The Stoutonia wishes to continue its own "confrontational style" with the SSA, more power to you. If you choose to ignore us, that is fine too. Just do not ask the 17th congress to roll over and play dead.

As one prominent campus group is fond of saying; if you are not part of the solution, you are part of the problem.

Sincerely,

Robb Zimdars United Council Director

Stout Student Association

Slanted Slant

Last week The Stoutonia's "Campus Slant" asked five students, "Do you plan to vote in the student government election April 6 and 7?" Three of my fellow students stated that they probably wouldn't because they basically [don't know what is going on]. And if that is a fairly representative sample of the student body because of the random way in which they were chosen to respond, then approximately 60 percent of our peers have not been served by their newspaper, The Stoutonia.

The media, and the media alone, is responsible for keeping the citizenry aware of any and all relevant information. The First Amendment exists to insure that The Stoutonia and other newspapers will not be impeded in their pursuit.

Perhaps The Stoutonia would have had more room to print relevant news if they had not dedicated so much of their valuable news space to their support of Amnesty International, only one of over 150 student organizations on this campus.

Because The Stoutonia receives thousands of dollars via SSA funding, students should wonder if they are in fact getting their money's worth from their newspaper. Perhaps those of us in the SSA have made a grave mistake by financially sponsoring a personal opinions publication, as opposed to campus newspaper.

Sincerely,

Paul D. Nelson President, Stout Student Association

Philosophical Crap

Again we hear cries from members of The Stoutonia and Amnesty International about the poor job of the SSA and in particular Paul Nelson. I for one was there when AI became an issue as vice president of financial affairs. So, before all you high and mighties start cutting down the SSA, I ask were you even there? I read Jef Maynard's article and was informed he attended one, yes count them on one hand, one meeting. But now he is an expert on all the candidates in the upcoming election? Wow, he must possess some supernatural powers. And let us not forget the cry of AI's advisor and president. The SSA did not fund AI at reallocations or allocations. DID NOT FUND. They also did not say one negative thing about their cause. Of course, if some of these people would have been there, they would have known that. I would suggest that AI quit belly aching and apply for monies from cooperative programming and the segregated fee reserve. With AI's leadership stuck in the rut of egotism they may never get the monies they need. The primary purpose of any segregated fee funded organization should be to benefit Stout students. As AI has said, their primary purpose is to free political prisoners. Are there any Stout students who are political prisoners? Perhaps they are being held in the chancellor's office and AI cannot let it out or they will be bludgeoned to death with a box luncheon. I am tired of this issue and the immature jabs of Ali and John See towards the SSA and Paul Nelson. I personally take responsibility for recommending monies be allocated to AI in the first place. That was a mistake. I stand behind the SSA and the budget passed at allocations. I deplore AI's president and advisor for clouding the issue with philosophical crap and shoveling it into Paul Nelson's back yard.

Senate Bashing

Hooray and hallelujah, The Stoutonia will have a new management next school year per their ad in last week's issue. Reading this past year's issues, one can not help but get the impression that the current management has used this newspaper to suit their personal beliefs and goals (whatever they may be). It seems that they are more interested in bashing the student senate for the Bash on the Grass event, in pushing their particular charity (Amnesty International), and censoring the letters to the editor (they did that to my first letter to the editor) to make certain that any opposition to their beliefs does not appear in "their" paper than they are in publishing the news and happening going on at Stout. It is true The Stoutonia is produced by students and they necessarily make mistakes (as evidenced by some of the weekly columnists' weird logic). They are in the learning process as are the student senators and all the other students active in campus affairs learning how to get things done. With a new management next year, I believe The Stoutonia will resume being a student's newspaper and do a more credible job of publicizing the university community news and happenings and be more responsive to the Stout students' interests and needs.

Violated Students

I have remained quiet for an entire semester, but I am finally upset enough to write to you. I feel that the Stout Student Association has violated the students of this university by not funding Amnesty International.

As far as I have been told, almost everyone on campus is a member of Amnesty International. The group has had stories in the newspaper every other week since the beginning of November. They have worked hard as a group on CAMPUS SLANT/ What is your opinion of Parents' Weekend?

By Brian Kraimer

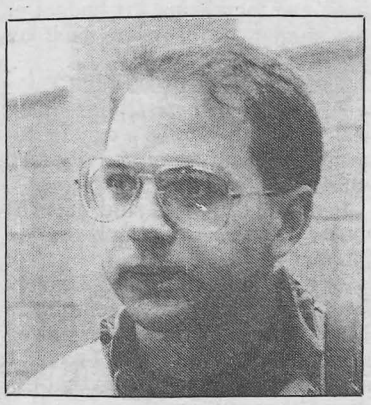
Laura Klein,
H&R management,
Freshman,

It is great and a real opportunity for the parents to see what the students are doing here at school. The students can show off the school, also. My parents are going to be coming up and it will be a real great time.

Brad Jones,
Packaging,
Junior,

It is great, I think every parent should be up. It is important for parents to get involved in what the students are doing. The parents get involved in the academic atmosphere.



Gary Horn,
Packaging,
Senior,

Well, my parents have been here twice and they have seen the campus. They have not been here in the last couple of years. I really do not get into that much anymore. It is good for the parents to see what goes on here at school.

Fred Breisch,
Math Instructor,

I have worked for institutions that have not had parents weekend and we where not at all disappointed. I suppose it is good for the parents to get to the campus to see what the students are doing. It looks like or sounds a little high schoolish to me.

Catherine Reszka,
Business,
Junior,

I think it is a great opportunity for parents to see what college life is like in the 80's. It is important for the parents to get a first hand look at what college students really do.

campus and should thus be rewarded.

Just because the group does not provide activities here at Stout should not be reason enough to discriminate against them. I think that the awareness people get from just signing a petition is education enough, and most certainly any one looking at one of the posters of the group can gain valuable insight into the political and economic problems of the world.

I don't understand how they can fit the entire student body into Crystal Ballroom A for their meetings, but I have been assured that there is plenty of room for anyone else interested in joining. But if you have not joined, you are probably one of the three who has not already dedicated their lives to the cause of human rights.

The group is open to all individuals from this campus and all you have to do is pay $5 to become a voting member. From the 7,100 students on campus, the group should now be able to allocate at least $30,000 to itself.

In fact, I think that it would be a good idea for the SSA to encourage groups like Amnesty International to apply for funding. I think the SSA should fund similar groups like UNICEF, United Way, Kinship, American Cancer Society, Jerry's Kids and the Rotary Triathalon for Jewish American Princesses. I feel that these are all important groups which deserve funding from SSA. I mean, who even goes to these movies or concerts at Stout?

VOTE "4"

I am writing in support of the VOTE "4" candidates running in the SSA spring elections. From what I have seen of all the candidates, I strongly support James Falkofske for president, Dan Meyer for academic affairs, Todd Nelson for financial affairs and Angela Bias for legislative Affairs.

I am especially impressed with the motivation and determination of James Falkofske, who is seeking the president's position on the next Student Congress. Mr. Falkofske has worked very hard to get students to vote in the upcoming city council elections.

From what I understand, Mark Nickels (who is presently the vice president of legislative affairs, is supposed to be in charge of legislative matters of the SSA. I would consider voting in city council elections a legislative matter. Unfortunately, he has taken no initiative to inform students on where and when to vote.

James Falkofske, on the other hand, has gone out of his way as a private individual to pay for posters and flyers to let students know where and when to vote. When I questioned him why he was spending his money this way, he replied that "Voting is so important that if no one else is willing to spread the word, I certainly will."

I highly commend Mr. Falkofske on his initiative. I wholeheartedly agree that his leadership skills and concern for students are not only greater than the other candidates but will efficiently and effectively lead the student senate next year.

Sincerely,

Balanced Board

You have been hearing from the candidates for SSA and City Council who wish to represent UW-Stout student interests.

Did you know there is another election next Tuesday which concerns students' interests? I am talking about our younger students, age 5-18 and the little kids who aren't yet in school. You will have a chance to vote for three Menomonie school board members from a slate of six.

I have attended school board meetings and followed board decision making for the last several years. Five or six people running have been on the school board so I have seen them in action. My conclusions?

I support the three people who are currently on the school board, John Miller, Nancy Miller and Judy Ganzemiller (the 3 Millers). I have not always agreed with how these three people have voted, but I have found them willing to listen and to look at all sides of complex issues. They are not bound to any one interest group. They are the moderates on the board. I have observed them striving to balance the needs of the taxpayers' pocket books with the needs of our kids to have an excellent education.

Please care enough about our next generation to vote for school board next Tuesday, April 7. We need a balanced school board, and I think the "Three Millers" fit that bill.

Personal Grievances

I am strongly embarrassed by The Stoutonia's handling of the election of SSA representatives for this year. I believe that, as usual, The Stoutonia has taken the attitude that publishing personal grievances against the SSA is of much greater importance than printing and reporting on newsworthy items on campus.

Instead of having election coverage that would allow students to know the views and stands of each candidate running in the election, the paper has chosen to take cheap shots at the present student senate. While screaming that the present SSA representatives are ineffective and blindly following the path of the executive officers, the paper has decided not to insure that reputable representatives will be in office next year.

And speaking of reputable representatives, I am wondering why one of the chief candidates in the election, Ali Vazirabadi, has not resigned his post at the paper. Ali is presently the assistant business manager at the paper.

He also has the "opportunity" to express his opinions through the editorial staff of the paper. I believe that the position Ali currently holds with the paper is in direct conflict with the position he is a candidate for. If Mr. Vazirabadi had any sense of personal responsibility, he would have resigned his post as soon as he became a candidate.

I was a columnist for the arts section, and I had the decency to resign my column as soon as I became a candidate so that I would not have conflicting interests. Paul Nelson last year resigned his post as editor-in-chief through a leave of absence without pay PRIOR to the election.

Considering that Mr. Vazirabadi is also the president (convener) of the Amnesty International group makes me question his real interests and reason for running for elective office.

Part of my concern was an interview that The Stoutonia printed of Mr. "Ali." Mr. Vazirabadi was quoted saying that "by unanimous vote, they (SSA) would give us (AI) half (funding) of what we asked for." Reviewing the minutes, the motions that Ali referred to passed by only a slim margin. Not only did Ali abuse his position, but he fabricated "facts" in order to enhance his political.

I believe that just by the amount of press coverage Ali has been receiving of late should indicate that The Stoutonia is biased and not representing the best interests of its readers.

I certainly hope that as you search for a newspaper staff next year, that you are able to locate people with a little more integrity and responsibility than the present ones.

Everyone has the opportunity to express his/her opinions through the editorial staff of the paper.

Sincerely,
James Falkofske

Amazing Biases

It is simply amazing to me the biases that The Stoutonia consistently writes in its columns. I can hardly pick up a paper without seeing something cutting down the Stout Student Association (SSA). Isn't it too bad that The Stoutonia (which is one of the soul sources of information to students about what is happening on campus) can not give an objective viewpoint to its writing so that students can get both sides of the story. I guess it's not so amazing, owing to the fact that Tracy Lea Landis, who ran for SSA president last year and lost, is also a member of The Stoutonia editorial board. Come on people -grow up!! If you can not keep your personal feelings out of the paper, you should not be writing articles for it. Do not abuse your right of freedom of the press by not representing issues fairly. I strongly question the motives of Mr. Vazirabadi's running for the Vice President of Legislative Affairs of SSA: is he working in the interest of the students on this campus, or for Amnesty International? The really pitiful thing is that two of the most important and influential organizations on this campus can not work together for the good of the students. I personally have nothing against The Stoutonia, or the people who work for it. But, this is not Russia where bits and pieces of news get through to the public. This is the United States where the press is allowed to report a whole story and is ethically bound to do that objectively. Maybe we should change our newspaper's name to Toss?!

Well-Informed Senators

Fabricated fact?

It has been a proven fact that if you ignore somebody's indecent behavior, the person will take you for granted thinking you are not aware.

I wonder if anyone knows how frustrating it is to try explaining a point to a body which has already biased its mind on a particular issue. For that matter, a body that works on majority.

The letter in question does have some good points, I must agree, but others were grossly misstated.

(One) example is the fact of "many well-informed senators."

It becomes astonishing to find out how well-informed these people are.

They struggle to sign to move or support motions written by a remote person understanding it.

They come to the senate meeting with no state of mind or opinion of their own (though they are entitled) only to agree with the person with the veto power.

They do not want to do anything that will hurt the finger that is feeding them.

They do not want to learn, even when they don't know.

If you ask me, I will say they are not even half-informed. To get the picture perfectly, personally take time off to attend caucus and senate meetings at least once.

Out of Line

I am writing in reference to Jef Maynard's article, "I been hypnotized," in the March 26 issue of The Stoutonia.

I feel Jef's attitude and sarcasm were totally out of line. I would like to know when he became such an expert on politics and student government on the Stout campus. I don't recall seeing or hearing of Jef ever being involved and putting forth an effort to positively overcome the apathy on this campus.

I hope those of you who read the above mentioned article recognize it as one person's attitude and opinion. The Stout Student Association (SSA) is here to represent the students. However, the SSA would be much more effective if you, the students would give support and feedback in a positive manner.

It is really easy to sit back and criticize...but where does that get any of us?

If you care about student representation on governance committees, how tuition increases will affect you, and what the future has in store for UW-Stout, you will vote in the upcoming election on April 6 and 7.

You have a right to your own opinion and a right to vote. Do not let a sarcastic column writer influence your actions. The future of Stout's student population is in your hands...

Vote on April 6 and 7.

C.S. Lapidakis

Right To Vote

I would like to congratulate Jef Maynard on his sincere article, "I been hypnotized." I agree with a lot of things he pointed out in his article except when he encouraged students not to vote for any candidates for the SSA elections.

Many people have fought in America for our freedom to choose and the right to vote. You have the right not to vote and to encourage others not to as well. I just want to encourage students to vote on April 6 and 7. If you and anyone else out there are so dissatisfied on the way the SSA is representing you, then, you should do something about it--not doing anything about it will solve no problems.

The most effective way is to vote them out of office and vote for people who will best represent you in office. If you cannot find the candidate(s) who could best represent you, maybe we can write in Mr. Jef Maynard as a candidate, since he is so good with words.

The SSA is run by students who are not perfect and so is The Stoutonia and any other organization on campus. Does this means we are human and that we make mistakes. As students, I hope we can learn from our mistakes and become adults.

I have a question for the students here at Stout: If an SSA official does not show up for a meeting or for office hours, do they still get paid for it?

Thank you for your time.

Paul Kniesz

Wise Vote

This letter is a vote of confidence for UW-Stout's next Vice-President of Financial Affairs, Todd A. Nelson. A vote for Todd A. Nelson would be the only wise way to vote when it comes down to the V.P. financial affairs position.

Being former colleague of Todd A. Nelson, I know Todd is more than just a person of words. Todd is a doer, he is the type of person who makes things happen. I am sure Todd will not sit around waiting for the other person to make the first move, Todd will see a problem coming and take action to stop it before it becomes a serious matter.

Todd A. Nelson's strong leadership and dedication will surely be an asset to the SSA executive board next year. Please vote Todd A. Nelson on April 6 or 7 as your next vice-president of financial affairs--It's one vote you won't regret.

Most Sincerely,
Thomas E. Roth

"It's just another example of a perfect answer to a flawed question." White House spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater.

Upset about hefty tuition increases? Talk to the man in charge. Who is the man in charge? That is a good question.

Republicans deftly try to teflonize their responsibility for the overcrowding of classrooms plus the increase in tuition. Meanwhile, back at the ranch, the man who eliminated revenue sharing is busily trying to convince Americans he even knows what he is talking about.

The Reagan Game grows more absurd as Ron mistakenly responds to an eleven-year-old's question about whether the trouble of the presidency is worthwhile. Ron says his arms sales to Iran, "sort of settled down to just trading arms for hostages."

Meanwhile, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater gets to put the blame where it ought to lie in this case, on the eleven-year-old student who asked the misunderstood question. Fitzwater made the president's response sound like a masterpiece. "It's just another example of a perfect answer to a flawed question." Now I know what to tell a professor if ever I fail an essay test.

No one ever answered the question Time Magazine asked about Ronald Reagan, "Why is this man so popular?" Could it be because the federal government is the biggest employer in America and continues adding to its payroll. Since Reagan took command, we have created more than 180,000 new federal jobs. Keep those pay checks coming in. Forget the bank failures and the lay offs. We're having a good time, aren't we?

If only the press could learn to interpret all the news cheerily, then we need not be concerned about anything. "Bartender, I see a dream hidden somewhere in that bottle of beer. Could you pass it this way?"

As I glanced at the paper the other day, a headline caught my eye. It read, "Researchers say that Aids virus may have at least a 15-year incubation period."

Fifteen years! That puts everything into a whole new light. Most people don't exactly ask to see a list of references before they slip between the sheets. How careful will people have to be to avoid contracting AIDS?

If those researchers are correct, when you take someone to bed, you're not just making love to that one person, you're making love to that person and every person that person has taken to bed and every person that each of those people have taken to bed and so on and so on...

The reason that I brought the subject up is not to start a mass panic. No, the main reason that I brought it up is that it is just one of the many side effects of a morally deficient society.

Look around you! Socially-transmitted diseases are running rampant in America. Oh, and it's not just the ghettos that have high incidences of socially transmitted diseases and drug abuse. These days, the college campuses are proving to be a hot spot for these and other problems.

It wouldn't be right to bring up the problem and not offer a solution, so I will offer mine to all who care to know.

First, most of the problems with abuse of alcohol, other drugs,and sex could be eliminated if our children were taught some discipline and self-control. Most sin is a sin of indulgence. Our generation, for the most part, does not deny itself anything that it desires.

This has produced a serious character flaw; self-centeredness. Everybody looks out for -1 and little else. Every relationship, every night out, and every little phrase has the best interest of number one in mind. In a word HEDONISM.

Secondly, much of the abuse seems to be centered around general consensus that there is nothing else to live for. Most, if not all, people are disillusioned when they discover that drinking, drugs, or sex will not and cannot solve any problems, produce happiness or fulfillment. Upon being disillusioned, depression sets in and, in many cases each year, suicide is contemplated.

My solution here is the same solution that works for everything. Let God be God! God created each one of us with a special purpose and plan. God designed us to be in direct communication with him. Outside of that communication, man feels lost and without purpose.

God also wanted us to have a guide book so that we would be able to live richer and more consistant lives. That is why He gave us the Bible. If we choose to abuse our bodies or use them in ways that they were never meant to be used, we pay the consequences.

Aids is one of those consequences. God created Adam and Eve, not Adam and Steve! God never meant for men to have sex with other men or animals. When men walk away from the wisdom of God and sow seeds of immorality, they reap the fruit.

God never meant for men and women to have sexual relations with anyone else other than their mate. When we walk away from the wisdom that God shows us in the Bible, we walk in to judgement. The consequences of being promiscuous in today's world are numerous. God has a simple solution to the problem.

Abstain from any and all sexual relationships other than with your mate.

This is God's solution to the problem. Accept it or reject it. You can choose today to start walking in the wisdom of God or you can remain rebellious and suffer the consequences of your own stubborness.

Nothing could please me more than to quote Frank Zappa in this black and white zone. In the closing benediction to his bizarre movie "200 Motels," he has Theodore Bikel say, "and now everyone is gonna leave this theatre and once again, take themselves...seriously."

I have never taken the same topic twice in this column, but this week I prefer not to resist.

So, kids, how many of you cut class or skipped dinner to attend the SSA candidate debate?

There was a large, (probably average) number of people in the Terrace Cafe at 5 p.m. to watch the show. Or were they a captive audience, or a coincidental audience working on their QFP and business math? We all know the answer to that, don't we? (Questions, questions, questions.)

Being so involved in student politics, I found myself in the front row, (like: "I must be in the front row.") More likely, it was because my friend Denise was up there and we hadn't seen each other much lately, so we had a lot to laugh about. Otherwise, Rich Brueckner and I would have been sitting in the back discussing the merits of each of the candidates in the appropriate terms.

Actually, for a while, we did just that. We compared notes. I pointed out to Rich that Damon Smith had on two different colored socks. They were close, a dark gray and blue, but not a pair.

Rich thought that was going to cost Smith some votes, but I disagreed. I pulled up my pants legs to reveal white gym socks, one with black stripes and one with blue stripes. "May be a politically hot trend, I think," I said. Rich nodded.

Rich's notes contained key words like: "initiative, achieve, certainly, infest, rhetoric, Monday-Friday, 20, 30, 40, screwed-up, somewhat, Policy Paper 20, total viewpoint, legible form" and "once and for all."

The candidates for president each had an opening remark where they described their reasons for running for the office.

Mark Nickels came to the conclusion that he was the logical choice. That should have solved the whole problem right there, logic being what it is. But then, of course, he would think that is logical. Human logic is not universal.

Falkofske said that when he began his campaign, he had no intention of running. Think about that. He came to his conclusion by the process of elimination. His "twenty, thirty, forty" friends asked him why he wasn't running. Since he couldn't think of a reason not to run, (therefore) he must run.

In the surprise political move of the day, Damon Smith said, (rather loudly considering the content and the situation), "Shit," as he laughed a nervous laugh. Sounds like a Monty Python skit, "the candidate who said 'shit.'"

I was told later that Falkofske's notes had fallen over Smith's and when Damon glanced down to read his text, it said, "Support James Falkofske." That would make me laugh too.

The questioners on the panel all looked very nice. They dressed up as if this were a real event instead of an ambush sponsored by The Stoutonia for irresponsible junior journalists to make more jokes about the SSA. Once again, everyone is fooled by the mere appearance of seriousness.

Questions from the panel were mixed. Tracy Lea Landis asked a question that lasted about two hours, and had no beginning or end. Rich and I knew that this would make or break the entire debate. Each of the candidates responded as if they understood what she was talking about.

One question not asked, but suggested by photographer Brian Pook, was to ask Mark Nickels what the hell he knew about Chappaquiddic.

I wanted to ask Damon why he had on two different colored socks. Another question I would have liked to have heard answered was: Considering how disappointed you all claim to be in The Stoutonia's coverage, would you, next year, readjust funds for the newspaper if the paper hadn't behaved the way you thought it was supposed to?

I have heard on several occasions that certain current and (possibly) future SSA office holders would consider doing just that. That smells funny to me, being a long-time fan of the Bill of Rights, particularly freedom of speech.

This is a student newspaper and that is a student government. In the overall history of the universe, what The Stoutonia says about what the SSA does, and vice versa doesn't mean squat to a green poodle.

After attending the debate, and now being fully-informed, I am still advocating not voting. If for some uncontrollable reason, you do vote, vote for "none of the above." In this way, you can fulfill your right to vote without actually encouraging any more nonsense.

There is always the write-in option. I suggest Pee Wee Herman, Freddy Krueger, or Garfield Goose. The SSA presidency is a demanding position, and these undeclared candidates have the proper perspective and personal traits suitable to handle the task.

Quite unrelated to this: next week will be my last column for The Stoutonia.

Niche offers experience to fashion designers

by Rhonda Olson

Many famous designers are poor business people. UW-Stout has a solution for students with design talent, but little business sense.

Three designers have been hired to work with management at the Niche. Because of this new program, designers will be able to gain practical experience with in theirfield.

Problems which designers may encounter in the "real world" include, production problems, costing out goods, and actually getting the item to the retail floor, said Joan Eklund, Fashion Director of the Niche.

Three students accepted the challenge to step out of the common designer preconceptions. The students and their logos are: Natalie Retzlaff--NTQR Designs, Chantel Grotbeck--Chantel Marie, and Pamela Schultz--Mela.

The Niche directors like fun-fashion, and fun it is! The apparel consists of original designs by the students.

The themes are Midwest and "Out of Africa".The apparel sizes run small, medium, and large.

The Chantel Marie line features playwear tops and shorts. The top is 100 percent cotton and the shorts are 50/50 cotton/polyester.

Grotbeck worked with the "Out of Africa" theme, "I wanted to design something that would be original in some way."

The main colors in the Chantel Marie line are black, white, and earth tones. No one top is exactly alike, each design is dif ferent in layout, sizes, and fabric print.

Pamela Schultz also worked with the "Out of Africa" theme. Schultz made herown fabric by using the methods of tie-dye andscreen printing.

Said Schultz, "I feel a designer is some one who designs something never seen before, something new. The Mela design is body fitting. The line includes skirts, tops and dresses with center zippers and gathers.

Schultz worked with the colors of indigo, black, sand, and various ranges of cream.

The last designer to work with the program is Natalie Retzlaff. The NTQR Designs feature a cooton/polyester blend chambray fabric in pale blue.

Retzlaff said, "I've always liked-the idea of trains on dresses, and the ability ofa garment to be worn in different ways."

The NTQR Designs can be wornas a simple circle skirt, or as a fashion forward mini/midi. The skirt can be attatched at the waist to shorten the skirt, which exposes the inner lining of lace.

Grotbeck, Schultz, and Retzlaff-were generally pleased with the program. The designers learned to meet with buyers, fill orders, meet deadlines, design, manufacture,and learn the business aspects of designing.

Schultz said the program was agreat experience in many ways. The pro-gram is a good opportunity for designers to work for a retail establishment, to build a portfolio, and to gain recognition in design.

The new program is a part of the Home Economics Department of Apparel, Textiles, and Design. Students interested in lear-ning the design business should contact Joan Eklund to arrange for a summer or fall independent study.

The Camelot production crew commended for their team effort

by Gretchen Pemberton

The people involved in the production of Camelot, on and off stage, should be commended for their dedication and intuitive thinking. The people in the cast put in much more effort and time than they are credited for.

Natalie Bothwell who is the director of Camelot said, "the cast members become a family. They rely on one another. Each student has certain fears which the other overcomes. There is a real camaraderie within the different people. They are dedicated to making the show the best they can."

James Michael-Miller designed the set. It is apparent through the workmanship and aesthetic value that abundant thought and time was spent.

One part of the theatre that is not credited enough, is costuming. Ray Yound is a student at Stout who spends 80 to 90 hours per week working on costumes. Yound said, "I've stayed all night three times this past week. The saying around here is, 'You've got to love it to do it.'"

The cast does love it, and that is revealed through their enthusiasm regarding the production of Camelot and their attitude towards each other.

Tom Knudten plays the lead as King Arthur. Knudten said, "Each character you play seems to add something to you. It becomes part of you. It's fun to perform. I'm surprised there isn't more interest in the theatre here. There is no emphasis on the fine arts in this school. There is no music or theatre minor. It would be nice to get more people involved."

The wife of King Arthur, Guenevere, is gracefully portrayed by Kirsten Hmielack. Hmielack transferred to Stout after attending Eau Claire for two years. Her sensual, tender voice carries beautifully in song and speech. Hmielack said, "I'm really grateful I came to Stout. I love everybody within the cast. I was new to this school and they welcomed me and helped me fit in."

Steven Crowley plays the eccentric French knight Lancelot. Crowley says he enjoys theatre because it is, "fun, bold, daring and different." Crowley also added, "I wish the university would recognize the theatre than more than just a pastime. If we can recognize sporting events as a physical art, we should in the same respect, give theatre equal recognition."

John Payne plays Mordred, the wicked illegitimate son of Arthur.

"Camelot," the University Theatre's spring production opens tonight, and will run through Sunday. Performances for Friday and Saturday are nearly sold out. Lancelot (Steve Crowley), is a knight of the round table, King Arthur (Tom Knudten) and Guenevere (Kristen Hmielack) are pictured in this scene from the play with the ensemble. A lot of time and hardwork has gone into this production. Tickets are $3 for adults and $2 for students.

Payne said "There is nothing as exciting as walking out in front of an audience and staying in character."

Sara Falkofske said she gets a natural high from performing. Falkofske said, "I hug people on the street from the cast just because of the pure joy and magic within theatre."

The artful Dennis Crawley portrays Pellinore. Crawley said, "I enjoy becoming a completely different person on stage. People find it hard to be this outgoing, but you have to be."

Camelot is a musical written by Alan Jay Lerner and composed by Frederick Lowe. It is about King Arthur and the knights of the round table. Robb Kuchta is the conductor. Thursday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 1:30 in the afternoon are the best chances to get tickets. It is also shown Friday and Saturday evenings. Tickets are available in Harvey Hall basement.

Campus Cuisine

See Jane Kick

Denise Cain

Doing aerobics is not a matter of getting "in shape" for me, it is a matter of torture. My poor thighs have to kick and lift and circle in the most inconceivable directions. How do they think up those positions?

I usually start out my aerobic workout sprawled out across the Glass Lounge floor with a bunch of other women. I take up about two spots. Anticipating the worst, I meditate on how I am going to survive four aerobic songs.

The hyperactive members of the previous class come bouncing across the floor in their exotic leotards and matching wrist weights. One hour of aerobics was just not enough hell for them; they want to do it again.

We all start our warm-ups to the "go-baby-go" music. After 5,000 ankle twists the beauty queen instructor hysterically announces that we are ready to start the aerobics. My aerobic workout tends to be kicking people on all sides of me as "aerobic disorientation" takes over my body.

The thrill of completing the aerobic workout is overshadowed by the thought of butt tucks. It never fails, just as I am in the most obnoxious position, a group of guys glare into the room.

Incidentally, isn't it ironic that the most indecent sport is done in a "glass lounge" instead of an enclosed room? If I wanted the whole campus to see me in misery, I would walk down the sidewalk wearing my high school jeans.

The stupendous workout is completed. The women who have been there for two workouts are organizing a trip over to the weight room. (Excuse me, I am going to get sick.) I organize my body parts back into their original positions, head for the library, a less stressful place.

Actually, Stout aerobic classes in the Glass Lounge are great because they help prepare your body for summer clothes that always seem to shrink over the winter. Included in this week's cuisine are two recipes that are fast to make, low in calories and compliment each other in a meal.

Turkey Cordon Bleu

2 (4 to 6 oz.) turkey tenderloins, cut in half
1 Tbsp. margarine melted
4 slices turkey ham
4 (4x4") slices Swiss cheese, room temperature
1/4 cup fine dry bread crumbs
2 Tbsp. flour
1 Tbsp. Parmesan cheese
1/4 tsp. seasoned salt
1/8 tsp. paprika
1/8 tsp. basil
2 Tbsp. milk
1 egg, beaten

Heat oven to 325-degrees. Lightly grease 9x9-inch baking dish. With sharp knife, slice each tenderloin lengthwise to within 1/2-inch opposite side, forming a pocket. Open each steak; brush with melted margarine. Roll a slice of turkey ham and Swiss cheese together; place in pocket of steak. Secure with toothpicks. In shallow pan, combine bread crumbs, flour, Parmesan cheese, seasoned salt, paprika and basil. In another shallow pan, combine egg and milk. Dip steaks in egg mixture; coat with crumb mixture. Place in prepared baking dish. Bake at 325-degrees for 20 minutes; turn tenderloins and bake an additional 20 to 25 minutes or until tender. Four servings.

Stir-Fried Oriental Broccoli

2 Tbsp. oil
3 cups broccoli florets, cut into 1-inch pieces
1 small onion, cut into slivers
1/4 cup water
8-oz. can sliced bamboo shoots, drained
4.5 oz. whole mushrooms, drained
2 Tbsp. sliver almonds
2 Tbsp. soy sauce
1 Tbsp. slice pimento

In a large skillet or wok, heat oil over high heat. Add broccoli and onion; stir to coat with oil. Add water; stir-fry over high heat 3 to 5 minutes or until broccoli is tender-crisp. Add remaining ingredients; stir-fry until heated thoroughly. Serve immediately. 4 (1 cup) servings.

Historic fans at Learning Center

by Rhonda Olson

The beauty of hand held fans as an accessory item still remains. Today, the fans are used mainly as wedding accessories, while 100 years ago hand held fans were a part of everyday life.

Fans were used for decorative and functional purposes. The decorative fans were used by ladies who carried them to church, balls, or other social events. The functional uses of fans included cooling the air, shading the sun, and brushing away insects.

An exhibit of historical fans will run from March 31 to April 10, in the Library Learning Center exhibit area. The display boards feature interesting information about fans which are dated in the late 1800's and early 1900's.

There is a variety of fans in the display cases. One fan is made of peacock feathers with an Oriental design painted on the feathers. Another fan is made of fancy red feathers with a black ivory handle.

Several other fans are made of silk and have flowers or birds painted on them. Others are made of intricately carved wood.

There is a variety of fans in the display case

Bonnie Kirkwood is curator of the exhibit series. The "Historical Costume and Textile Collection" is a part of the Apparel, Textiles, and Design Department in the Home Economics program.

Nancy Engen is a student assistant who has done much work in preserving hand held fans. The antique fans, silk especially, are extremely fragile.

The fans must be backed with a supporting fabric which is attached with a delicate cross stitch. After the fans are repaired, they are laid in an open position to prevent further wear along the folded edges. The fans are stored in boxes lined with an acid free tissue paper.

Kirkwood praised her student assistant saying, "through Nancy's interest in careful work, a number of the fans have been preserved."

The fans are on display for all to enjoy. By looking at the fans and reading the information provided, one can gain insight and appreciation of the history of hand held fans

These hand held fans are part of a collection now exhibited at the Library Learning Center. The exhibition titled, "Historical Costume and Textile Collection," is sponsored by the Apparel Textile and design department. It will run through April 10.

STEVE MILLER BAND
Living In The 20th Century

I never thought that Steve Miller would come out with a new album.

His last big hit was in 1982 with the hit song "Abracadabra." On this album it seems that Miller is getting back to the style of his earlier albums.

The first song, "Nobody but you," has got a reasonable amount of airplay. It's a fast blues song with catchy lyrics. The only problem is that every other word is "nobody."

The first single released is "I want to make the world turn around." This is a slower song with some very good sax playing. This is the only song that I've seen a video for so far.

One of the two instrumentals on the album is "Slinky." The entire song is by Miller himself. The song is like one long guitar solo with a drum machine in the background that sounds like one of those home organs set on a disco beat.

"Living in the 20th century" sounds like he put this song in there because he needed a song with the same name as the title of the album.

"Maelstrom" is the other instrumental on the album. This song features Greg Douglas who plays some of the best acoustic guitar I've heard in a long time. I really don't know where they got the name for this song.

The first song on side two is "I wanna be loved (but by only you)." This is probably the best song on the album. It's a fast song that has a real good beat that will keep you singing it all day long.

The next song is "My babe" which was written by Willie Dixon, a legendary blues performer. It features a harmonica solo by Miller. The guitar sounds like it's Chuck Berry playing.

"Big boss man" is a song written by a couple of old blues players. This song also has a good harmonica solo by Miller.

The last three songs have a definite blues feeling to them, it might be because two of them were written by Jimmy Reed, another bluesman. They have some great harmonica playing and Miller playing a twelve string guitar.

If you're wondering why I went through this album song by song it's because it would be very hard to describe the album as a whole. The entire album was done quite well. It seems like Steve Miller just went ahead and played the kind of music he's always been playing. This album is definitely for people who appreciate good music.

U2
The Joshua Tree

It's been two years since U2 released their last album "The Unforgetable Fire." Now U2 is definitely trying to go over the top with their latest album "The Joshua Tree." The album is named after a tree that grows in the American Southwest. The Joshua tree was named after Joshua of the bible.

On this album U2 didn't go for any major change. Bono Vox, lead singer, keeps on signing about hope and terrors. Because of U2's experiences with Amnesty International they can reach all different people with their music. It's like U2 is the Bob Dylan of the 80's.

"With or without you" has been playing on the radio a lot. It looks as if this is going to be the best single of the album.

The strongest lyrics are in "Bullet the blue sky." It has a real heavy beat to it. The song is about American violence in other countries.

"Trip through the wires" has Bono playing a harmonica.

"One tree hill" is a song that pays tribute to Greg Carroll, a U2 crew member who died in July 1986.

One thing they've added to their songs is a synthesizer. They use it mainly for background percussion. It's good to see that they didn't overdo it with their new toy. It didn't take away from the U2 sound, but enhanced it.

The rest of the album has just as agressive songs as U2 always has. Three songs were mixed by Steve Lillywhite, who produced U2's first three albums. This album is produced by the same two guys who did "The Unforgetable Fire."

If you have never listened to U2 before, it's something you should check out. U2 has something that's been missing from pop music for a long time.

Limited Warranty

by Jennifer Tooley

Following the tradition of the Tubes, Limited Warranty, a rising pop band from Minneapolis, will soon be appearing at UW-Stout.

Limited Warranty began as many new groups do - high school friends getting together, practicing in garages, and striving to "make it big" in the music business.

But in 1985, these efforts began to show a large return. Limited Warranty became television's "Star Search" best new musical group of 1985, winning the $100,000 grand prize, and perhaps more important, the publicity of a nationally televised syndicated program.

Limited Warranty followed this success with the release of their most popular single to date, a two-sided hit entitled "This is Serious" b/w "Never Enough." The reaction to this single was incredible. It reached the top of the playlist at KDWB and WLOL, two popular Minneapolis stations and the Minneapolis Tribune ranked them seventh in the "Best Group of 1985" category.

Limited Warranty began to move out of the Minneapolis area at this time, and began to open for more established groups such as Tina Turner and Tom Petty. Their success was noticed by rock magazines Rolling Stone and Rock Video who covered their career, adding to the growing popularity and recognition of Limited Warranty.

In August 1985, Limited Warranty signed a recording contract with Atlantic Records. Their debut album, "Limited Warranty," has received very positive reviews and listings in industry-related publications such as Billboard, Hitmakers, The Gavin Report, and The Album Network. The Island-Ear, a New York based publication, described the band as "one of the better power poppers to debut this decade, Limited Warranty has the hooks, the musicianship, and the playing to become something big for many years to come."

More recently, Limited Warranty has been setting records in Minneapolis by receiving an unprecedented 11 prizes at the Minnesota Music Awards in 1986, including "band/entertainer/group of the year."

One Point Perspective

I Read a Dictionary

J. Dauplaise

Last week I began to expound on my annoyance towards severe abuse of the English language. Unfortunately, my words lost a certain power when a sentence was mangled beyond recognition, and the concluding paragraph mysteriously vanished.

Regardless of this literary mutilation, several individuals were able to discern the gist of my message regarding severe grammatical abuse, for which I am grateful.

Nonetheless, I feel compelled to elaborate on the issue. I've been frequently accused by family and friends of being overbearingly fanatical in my crusade to support the English language. I no longer correct people verbally, which is a personal triumph. It was a hard habit to break.

If you're terribly interested in driving me absolutely crazy though, the easiest way to do it is to be somewhere within earshot and say things like; "I never saw none of them", or "I did good on it".

I blame my parents for my grammatical preoccupation. It was there decision to have me educated in the Catholic school system. I once thought that EVERYONE had had to diagram sentences. I was wrong.

Among educators, the phrase "teaching aids" is frequently bantered about. My school had plenty of them. They were called rulers.

I became very familiar with the use of rulers early on. I've been told I was quite verbal as a child. The problem was that my comments were generally unappreciated. Actually, I'm not so sure that things have changed since then. At least nobody hits me anymore.

Further blame for my obsession with the English language (actually I'm grateful) goes to my father. He bought me my first dictionary and made me read it. Yes, I read a dictionary.

Besides reading the dictionary (it was a small one with big type), I did a lot of other reading as well. I think its because it was a lot easier for me to do at the time than playing kick soccer was. I was not cherished in my neighborhood as a gifted athlete.

When I was older, I scoffed at the cheerleaders. The idea of gathering together and giving uniforms to six perpetually perky teenage females and having them shout sentence fragments at the top of their lungs seemed preposterous to me.

They even had the augacity to call further attention to themselves by waving pompons, kicking their legs, flailing their arms and wearing powder blue eye shadow. Despite my most valiant efforts, the tradition of cheerleading remains firmly entrenched in our society. I am curious to know the fate of the tradition of diagramming sentences.

Five tracksters travel to Gainsville for relays

by Denise Cain

Five athletes from the UW-Stout Men's Track Team traveled to the University of Florida, Gainesville to compete in the Ganesville Relays March 25-30.

Head Coach Steve Terry chose five athletes who have been dedicated members to the track program. The roster included upperclassmen: Paul Bons, Steve Hoeschele, Matt Christenson, Scott Romenesko and Dan Doucette.

Coach Terry commented, "The trip to Florida was their reward for the strong committment they display to the track program. I wanted them to compete in a high quality meet like the national's meet to let them run against top competition."

The Gainesville Relays were a Division I meet with 1984 Olympic medalists competing. This high quality meet gave the Stout tracksters a chance to compete in an outdoor meet with scholarship athletes from around the country.

The results for Friday's open meet included Senior Paul Bons hitting 3 minutes, 54.5 seconds in the 1500 meter run. It was a personal best for Bons and captured him a ninth place finish out of 63 runners.

Junior Dan Doucette once again showed his stregnth as he placed eleventh in the 400 intermediate hurdles with a time of 54.21 seconds.

Doucette's high finish landed him an invitation to participate in Saturday's invitational meet. Only the seven best athletes from the previous day compete in this meet while two talented athletes from the field are chosen to fill the lanes.

Doucette competed with the best athletes in the country in the 400 intermediate hurdles once again, but this time finishing with a time of 54.9 seconds placing him ninth overall.

A personal best was accomplished by Doucette in the distance medley as he anchored the team in a time of 48.5 seconds.

Steve Hoeschele ran a 1 minute, 58.5 seconds in the 800 meter run. Hoeshcele's effort earned him thirty-fith place in a field of 67 athletes. He came back to run a 58.9 second run in the distance medley for the Blue Devils.

Two disappointments occured in Florida. Matt Christenson suffered from severe heat as he ran the steeple in a time of 10 minutes, 10 seconds placing him 23 out of 25 athletes. Scott Romenesko reinjured his ham string while warming up for the pole vault and was not able to compete at the meet.

Centaurs open season with 20-4 win

by Slash La Freniere

When people get angry, they can usually do great things. Last weekend in Dubuque, Iowa the UW-Stout Centaurs rugby club got mad at the Loras College team, and the Centaurs poured on a great many points in the second half to win 20-6.

Centaur player Tim Anderson, who led the team in scoring on the day with 12 points, said "I think that we really could have beaten them by a lot more if we would have played them later in the season."

The match started off slowly with neither team able to gain much of an advantage. Near the middle of the half, the Centaurs managed to advance the ball to within five meters of the Loras try line. However, a penalty on a Centaur player gave Loras a chance to kick the ball out of their zone.

The kick by Loras went to Stout player Ed Reesman, who returned the kick. The ball took a Stout bounce into the try zone and Reesman smothered it for a try. The conversion kick was missed and the Centaurs had a 4-0 lead.

Reesman said,"We are really starting to play rugby now instead of just trying to kill people." This became more evident to the Centaurs as the match wore on. But before the Centaurs could get too self confident, Loras managed to score a try and the ensuing two point conversion kick to take a 6-4 lead.

The Centaurs were visibly upset that they let Loras get ahead of them. Many Stout players became angry, but for a change, the Centaur players used their anger in a positive way. The Centaurs felt that the score by Loras was a slap in their faces and they were determined to not let it happen again.

"We just started to play fundamental rugby and we took it to 'em," said player Jim Mcguine.

Just before half-time, the Centaurs were awarded a penalty kick near the Loras try zone. Penalty kicks are awarded after a major infraction, such as a high tackle, and Stout elected to exercise their option to kick for goal. Anderson made the kick, which gave Stout a 7-6 halftime lead.

In the second half, The Centaurs began to get the ball out to their back line. This allowed them to move the ball much more easily than in the first half.

Said Reesman, "We ran a lot of overloads, which created lanes for our backs to run in." Overloading is a tactic that allows a team to get a man advantage and to exploit the other team's back line.

Reesman broke free on one of the overload situations to score a try bringing the score to 11-6. Confidence then returned to the Centaurs' play.

Now it was Anderson's turn to score. With the combined efforts of the forwards and the back line, Anderson was able to score on a 20-meter run. He also made the two point conversion kick and another penalty kick. This brought the Centaurs' final point total to 20-6.

Said player Billy Reis, "Cal (Anderson) is a regular Gretzky."

The Centaur "Killer B's" were also victorious in their match, winning 4-0. Randy Domack provided Stout with the game winning try. The match was very physical and the Stout team played extremely well.

This Saturday, the Centaurs will face Carleton College of Minnesota at 1p.m.

The Stout Rugby club won it's match 20-6 beating Lorras College in last weekend's game. Team captain P.J. McDonel (lower left) helps the Centaurs scrum, out powering the opponent to win the ball.

Miller named co-coach of the year; elected to NAIA executive board

by Slash La Freniere

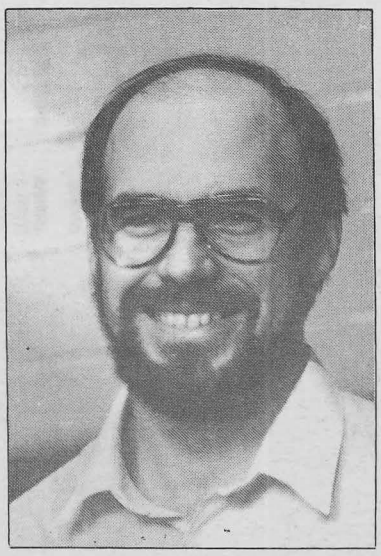
Recently UW-Stout Head Swimming and Diving Coach John Miller was named co-coach of the year for the women's swim team. Miller also was elected to the executive board of the NAIA swim coaches association. To become an executive board member is an honor that is voted on by a coachs' peersand shows the coach that he has earned their respect.

Said Miller, "I was pleased with my selection as co-coach of the year, but the athletes deserve the credit."

Miller came to Stout four years ago when there was no swimming program at all. "My first year the men's team had only five members and we placed fifth overall and the women finished dead last," Miller said.

Miller studied and swam as an undergraduate at UW-Oshkosh. He then went on to the University of Minnesota and earned a graduate degree in sports psychology and served as an assistant coach for the Minnesota swim team for two years.

Stout had dropped its swimming program for financial reasons and lack of interest before Miller was hired. Said Miller, "I wanted to get into college coaching when I heard that Stout had an opening. I knew the area and I liked the idea of starting from scratch. I also knew the conference from when I was a competitor."



John Miller

As a competitive swimmer in the Wisconsin State University Conference, Miller was aware of the depth of talent in the conference. Both the men's and women's teams finished fourth in the conference and the women's team wound up 11th in the nation this season. Several other schools from the conference also finished in the top 20.

Miller said, "Our women really performed tremendously at the national meet. We really have some quality swimmers and you don't finish in the top 20 without them."

As for next season, Miller looks for the teams to continue to improve. He has no real set goals for performance so as to put no undue pressure on the teams.

"You don't really know how you will do until two weeks before the start of the season," Miller said. "We have a good foundation and good people with our program. In the next couple of years we will be right up there."

Miller will only lose three swimmers for next season — Cheryl DeBaker, a scholar athlete, for the women and Captain Stu Boese and Kurt Siebert for the men.

Boese summed up his two years under Miller: "It was a worthwhile experience. I've swam for ten years and he is the best coach that I ever had. He is very strict and knowledgeable about the sport."

Intramural softball to begin April 6; 100 teams to compete in 3 leagues

by April R. Whitney

Well folks, the basketball season has come to a close. We all know that Indiana deserved to win, right? Now it is time for us to prepare ourselves for outdoor recreation, a time when wearing shorts, bikini swimsuits and hanging out at the beaches are the "in" things to be doing.

The intramural softball leagues have been forming and are now getting ready to play their first game on April 6. River Heights, Wakanda and Fowler Parks will be crowded with softball team players who really know how to have a good time.

Rob Klemm is an assistant director of the intramural athletic department here at Stout. He is doing a fine job at organizing intramural teams in all different kinds of sports. Rob is especially excited for the softball season to begin.

This year Rob has organized 100 teams — men, women and co-ed. He feels that the intramural program prepares many students (that go home for the summer and play softball) for the team interaction. Rob calls it a "preseason warm-up."

Michelle "Mish" Espe is the captain of the POS team. She said, "It really is a lot of fun. You get to play with a lot of people that you know and it is a really good time. I don't have much time for any kind of club at this time in the year, so I play intramural sports."

Mish is excited for the season to begin and so are many of her team members. So if you find yourself with a little extra time on your hands during the school year, why not join some type of an intramural sports program? Better yet, you can start enjoying the fun right now and head on out to the parks on April 6 and cheer your favorite team on. Games begin around 3 p.m. It is a guaranteed good time.

Athlete of the week: Dan Doucette

by Darron Vanman

Name: Dan Doucette

Sport: Men's Track

Year: Junior

Major: Industrial Technology

Coach: Steve Terry

Latest accomplishments: 1986 — school record, 440-yard intermediate hurdles 1987 — school record, 220-yard intermediate hurdles

Athlete's statistics: Dan Doucette was the leading point winner for the indoor track and field season with 70.5 points. Paul Bons, a distance runner, was second in team scoring with 40 points. Doucette was second in the 440 and set a school record in the 220 hurdles at the WSUC Indoor Conference Meet on March 6-7. Dan Doucette's outstanding performances earned him The Stoutonia's athlete of the week.

Coach's comments: Coach Steve Terry said, "Dan is a good one. He's the best hurdler Stout has ever seen. And he's also an excellent long and triple jumper."

"He scored the most points (24 of the 105, which was Stout's highest team point total ever) for us at the indoor conference. That makes him such an asset to us," Coach Terry said.

Coach Terry summarized Doucette as an individual. "He's a very hard worker. He's a team-oriented athlete. Dan fits right into the team mold. He's always helping, coaching and encouraging the younger hurdlers. What he has done as young as he is incredible," Coach Terry said.

Athlete's history: Dan Doucette has been running the oval (track) since junior high. He began in the hurdles and still runs them today. Dan says track is both an individual and a team sport, probably the reason he likes it so much. Doucette said, "The satisfaction that you did it yourself is great."

Would he be a different person without track? Doucette replied, "Sports and competition has done a lot. It has taught me to set goals and go after them. Track has also made me more disciplined. I always expect more out of myself."

Doucette commented on the indoor track season: "Personally, as well as the team, I'm very satisfied. Our second place finish at conference will carry us into outdoor. You can really tell everybody is excited."

Diligent Dan Doucette wants to win the 440 hurdles at conference for the second straight year. Dan also wants to qualify for nationals in the 440 hurdles and hopefully in the mile relay.

Netters win 3, improve to 15-9

by John Pelishek

Playing extremely well on their homecourt last weekend, the UW-Stout men's tennis team swept all three of its matches including their match against arch rival UW-Eau Claire to boost its overall record to 15-9.

Stout first beat Northern Iowa on a Chilly Friday afternoon, 8-1.

John Leehy at number 1 singles defeated Jeff Smith of Northern Iowa in straight sets 6-1, 6-2 as did Mike Friedman over Pierre Bernard 6-1, 6-1 at number 4 singles.

In other singles matches against Northern Iowa, number 2 singles player Tony Snoeyenbos, who recovered from an ankle injury last week, defeated John Hawley 6-1, 6-2 while Todd Trabant defeated Ed Maricinni 6-1, 6-2 at number 6 singles.

Tony Pheifer defeated Thad Lents at number 5 singles in three sets 6-7, 6-2, 6-4 while number 6 singles teammate Bill Johnson won over Jay Wicham of Northern Iowa 6-2, 6-4.

In doubles play against Northern Iowa, Tony Snoeyenbos and Mike Friedman defeated their opponents 6-2, 6-3 at number 1 doubles as did John Leehy and Mark Paine over Jeff Smith and Thad Lentz 6-3, 6-3 in number 2 doubles. Number 3 doubles team Todd Trabant whipped their opponents 6-3, 6-2.

On Saturday the netters had another good day as they won by taking 8 of 9 matches against arch rival UW-Eau Claire.

Eau Claire opted to play outside despite the cold 38 degree weather.

"It was a little too cold for effective shot making but we still played well," said Coach Bob Smith.

In singles play, John Leehy won over Kip Washburn 6-2, 6-3 as did Tony Snoeyenbos who breezed by Tim Rolfing 6-2, 6-0.

In other singles matches against Eau Claire, Mike Friedman defeated Tim Harmon 6-2, 6-3, number 3 singles player Mark Paine won 6-4, 6-2 over Tom McGuire and Tony Pheifer handled Scott Link 6-3, 7-5.

In doubles matches against Eau Claire where ten game pro sets were played, Mike Friedman and Bill Johnson overtook their opponents 10-7 while Tony Pheifer and Todd Trabant defeated Scott Link and Tom Mcguire 10-6.

"Eau Claire has some good depth and although we beat them good, I guarantee they'll be playing us especially hard the next time around," said Todd Trabant, Stout's number 6 singles player who went 2-0 in singles and 3-0 in doubles play.

On Sunday the netters came out with a 5-4 match victory over UW-Lacrosse in chilly 40 degree weather.

Leading the way were John Leehy and Mark Paine who won 6-0, 6-1 each over their La Crosse opponents. Tony Snoeyenbos defeated Matt Richards 6-1, 6-2 while Todd Trabant won over Craig Johnson 6-4, 7-5.

"We played our number 7, 8, and 9 players in doubles mathces so everyone got a chance to play," commented Smith.

This coming weekend Stout will play against fierce competition like powerhouse Augustana University on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday in the Augustana Invitational at Rock Island, Illinois.

Stout will also play Division I Northern Illinois on Saturday and Sunday in the Northern Illinois invitational as they hope to continue thier 5 game winning streak.

Prostitutes tolerated, city economy benefits

by Ben A. Round

After months of undercover work, Menomonie's Police Chief Warren Beatty, led a raid on a brothel in the Louis Smith Tainter House, Saturday night, March 28.

"We've thought for sometime that the Tainter house was the base for many illegal going-ons," said Beatty.

"My men put in many long nights and gathered sufficient, hard evidence to bust the brothel," he said.

Police officials said the Tainter House, known as the Mess Hall by those who frequent it, has been the base of a prostitution ring since early last April.

Arrested at the Mess Hall were nine prostitutes and 18 patrons.

"We encourage our young people to develop their entrepreneurial skills," said District Attorney Cal Lumpkins, one of two city officials arrested during the raid.

"It's a shame to see their developing skills go to waste," Lumpkins added.

"Ever since the drinking age went up, the Mess Hall has been the only place I can get in without a fake I.D.," said Stout student Thomas Longhorn.

The raid of the Tainter House was part of Chief Beatty's attempt to crack-down on house parties.

"The undercover work I did on the Mess Hall case was the most exciting work I have done in a long time," said Officer Dick Behrens. "The Chief led a successful raid."

Although the Tainter House raid was successful, the City of Menomonie has decided to drop all charges against those involved with the prostitution ring.

"After much negotiating with many city officials, Menomonie merchants and the Louis Smith Tainter House manager," said Chief Beatty, "we have decided to let the Mess Hall continue operating, but on a limited-hours schedule."

Beatty said that, since the Mess Hall began operating, the economy in the city has livened up. He said that an average increase of 25 percent has been noted in sales figures of local businesses.

Beatty maintained that pressing charges would only damage the economy.

"Since the Louis Smith Tainter House became a brothel, my business has increased 150 percent," said Lydia Marks, owner of Rosebud Lingerie in Thunderbird Mall.

"I'm relieved that the city isn't pressing charges," said one of the prostitutes working at the Mess Hall. "I have to pay for my college education somehow."

There are some people, however, who view the city's relaxed attitude toward the brothel as a disgrace to the community.

These citizens have formed BOTBG which stands for "Boot Out The Bad Girls," in response to Beatty's negotiations.

"I can't believe Beatty sold-out to a bunch of whores," said BOTBG founder, Annis Bickermann. "Those young girls have completely lost their morals and he is only worsening the problem."

What will happen with the Mess Hall and the women that work there, is still uncertain. In the meantime business will continue on restricted hours.

Mess Hall hours are 8 p.m. to 3 a.m. on Friday and Saturday nights and noon to 10 p.m. on Sundays.

Pests drawn to spills destroy books, students blamed

by Werm Krap

Sixty thousand dollars in books and media was destroyed last Saturday night when an estimated 5500 insects broke into the Library Learning Center to feed on food litter left by students.

The damage was discovered early Sunday morning by maintenance worker, Bob Sprout.

"I noticed several torn up books and other types of media on the lobby floor as soon as I entered the building," Sprout said, "I immediately suspected foul play."

Sprout said he was worried something like this would happen when he noticed students were not taking warnings from the library staff seriously.

The Library Learning Center began a policy in August of 1986, strictly prohibiting food and drink in the library. The LLC staff was hopeful that this would stop insects from being attracted to the library.

Students and other library patrons were informed by yellow paper warnings on all tables and study carrels explaining the rule and consequences if food litter was left behind.

Library Administrator, Louis Complainter said, "Students just simply have not been cooperating with our policy. I think a lot of Stout students thought we were just kidding around about their food litter attracting insects."

The food litter allegedly causing the break in was a half filled coca-cola container and a wrapper from a Hershey's chocolate bar found in a study carrel on the fourth floor of the library, according to Stout Protective Services.

Protective Services currently has no leads on the negligent student(s). An investigation is now underway. If suspects are discovered, they will be prosecuted and may even be asked to show their student IDs.

Menomonie Extermination Company was called in to clear out the problem.

According to Exterminator, Dr. John Locust, "It was a pretty routine job." "Most of our business comes from libraries," he said, "as food litter in libraries has always been a serious problem in insect control."

Student Mary Jones said she was shocked to hear about the insect break in. She admitted that she did not really take the yellow paper warnings seriously.

"You hear about these things happening," she said, "but you never think it will happen to you."

Lightheaded Biker—

An overzealous Stout student was observed as he ended his three-month stay on a motorcycle, smashing the previous record of 2 months 29 days and 10 hours held by Russell "Big Butt" Kowalski. When asked why he put himself through this ordeal he exclaimed, "It seemed like a good resume filler."

Lost City Discovered

While diving off the coast of Bermuda, Jock Coo⁸Strohs and the crew of the Coolispo discovered what they believe to be the ruins of a lost civilization. The sea floor was scattered with broken glass and crushed metal, Coo⁸Strohs said.

When asked about the significance of this find, Coo⁸Strohs just belched and threw his empty beer can over the side of the boat.

Alter Ego Troubles First Lady

First Lady Nancy Raygun's body has reportedly been taken over by an alter ego. According to the reports, Medusa, a mythological Greek woman whose gaze turned men to stone, has inhabited her body since last week.

The situation is apparently causing a strain on her relationship with the president. Amazingly, however, Raygun's presidential duties have not been affected by this bizarre episode.

"We thought he was sleeping," cabinet members were heard to say.

Recording Contract Signed

Menomonie's premier rock band, DCver, signed a multi⁸million dollar recording contract with VeeJay Records on Tuesday.

"I can't wait 'til we make our first video for MTV, man," said bass player Jef Maynard. "It's not going to make any sense at all!"

Guitarist Todd Welsch was excited about the contract.

"I'm going to go buy some new tights!" he said.

"Grand Illusion" Proves Fatal

David Nickelfield, the well⁸known master of illusion, died tragically yesterday in an attempt to perfect his newest illusion, sawing himself in half lengthwise.

Ironically, the incident occured on the same night as the appearance of the half moon.

One of his assistants reported that preparation for this trick was half⁸assed.

"But then, so is he, rest his soul," the assistant added.

Non-traditional drawing class

Mary-Lynn Chambers

In a dramatic effort to revamp the course offerings of Stout's Art Department, Life Drawing instructor, Doug Cummings has uncovered plans for a new drawing class to begin next Fall.

Laying bare his plans, Cummings revealed that the class would incorporate an unprecedented format in which students will draw in the nude, while the models will remain clothed. Asked to explain his reasons for the change, Cummings stated, "After Jim and Tammy Bakker pulled all that crap I figured this would look tame by comparison."

When asked why the floor in room 303 AA, where the class is held, had recently been repainted as a giant "Twister" game mat and a supply requistion for 25 cases of Crisco Oil had been submitted, Cummings expressed concern. "You're kidding? That was supposed to be done for the Fundamentals of Design class!"

Regardless of the slight confusion the change has caused, most of the students were excited about the new class. "Now my wool sweaters won't itch and distract me from my drawing." said "Bubbles" Hedd, a freshman in Graphic Design.

Another student, Dick Falluss, exclaimed joyfully "I hate drawing penises. Now I won't have to."

The Art Department will benefit financially from the change in format as well. Since willingness to remove one's clothing is no longer a requirement for modeling, nudity is no longer a valuable comodity. In fact, the office has been inundated with applications for modeling positions. The extreme surplus of willing models has, in fact, sent the model's wage rate plummeting from $6.00 per hour to $0.28 per hour.

Regardless of the measly wage rate, applicants have been swarming the Art Office. An unidentified Art Office employee bluntly remarked, "I wish they'd all just get the hell out of this office and let me get some work done. We haven't even had time to start processing mug shots for next year's building passes yet."

Students wishing to join the class will be disappointed to learn that it has already been filled. A waiting list is currently being compiled. As of news date 369 persons have been place on the list. Several fist fights have broken out in the Art Office between modeling applicants and students seeking admission to the class. The same unidentified office worker offered this theory regarding the furor. "I think it's mostly guys who want to see tits."

The 3 credit class will meet periods 6-9, Tuesday and Thursday in AA303. When asked whether he would join his students in disrobing Cummings replied, "What would any good Republican do?"

Spuds narrowly escapes slammer

by Cruisin' Steve

In a town infamous for party animals, Spuds McKenzie was given a lesson in Menomonie party style, during a pre-Parents Weekend bash.

Spuds, that most famous of party animals, blew into town late last Friday night and spent a few hours cruising for bitches. He then curled up by the fire to rest up for the Saturday night house parties.

After lapping up several bowls of brew at an east Menomonie location Saturday night, Spuds was nabbed by one of Menomonie's finest while relieving himself at the corner hydrant.

The three year old bull terrier ("That's twenty-three in dog years," Spuds barked) was charged with partying without a license and underage drinking.

"I find this treatment totally unfair," Spuds whined.

"I am employed by Budweiser to be the official party spokesman," Spuds explained.

"How is this going to look to all those kids out there who idolize my lifestyle?" Spuds asked.

When asked if he would ever return to Menomonie, Spuds replied, "Once I beat this rap, I'm out of here for good."

"People tell me that there is nothing to do in this town but party," Spuds said. "Now you can't even do that."

Bishops sing praises of pull and pray

by Weino Bedder

The Vatican, in an effort to appease disgruntled American Catholic, announced Wednesday that it is endorsing the "pull and pray" method of birth control.

American Bishops said they welcomed the plan because it would be much easier to teach in parochial schools than the rhythm method.

Archbishop Rembert Weakland of Milwaukee said that instructional videotapes of this method are readily available.

"You can get Debbie Does Dallas almost anywhere," he noted.

Bishops did note some concerns about the newly approved method.

Said one, "If Catholic males start praying as often as they ejaculate, the only response they might get is a busy signal."

The American Medical Association (AMA) condemned the method in a news conference that followed the Vatican announcement.

"Pulling and praying may have spiritual purity," said an AMA spokesman, "but it sure the hell won't stop those little buggers!"

Crazed stud assaults defenseless rock

by Maggot Factor

A Stout student is in intensive care at Myrtle Wirthless Medical Center after an apparent attempt to copulate with a boulder.

Doctors said Tuesday that they were at a loss to explain Sylvester "Rocky" Jism's behavior.

"My guess is he had one nasty case of the blue balls," said an ambulance driver who preferred to stay anonymous.

Witnesses said that Jism was running all over the place before the incident.

"I've never seen anything like it," said one hysterical co-ed.

Police are following up reports that Jism was on mushrooms at the time of the incident.

Police Chief Beatty is concerned that a highly potent strain of "shrooms" have found their way onto the Stout campus.

"There's no telling what these drugged up maniacs are going to screw with next," he said.

Until doctors are sure that this is an isolated incident, Jism will remain in Myrtle Wirthless.

Onslaught of fines depresses students

by Karen Reporter

Students at UW-Stout may be receiving unnecessary and overly costly tickets from the police force here in Menomonie.

Joe Officer, a retired policeman from Menomonie, is questioning whether or not some students have been needlessly fined for possibly ridiculous violations.

"We are a respectable police force, yet, I can't say that we are always fair to the student," Officer said.

"Sometimes I think maybe we tend to give more tickets than necessary, and with higher fines; not that it would have anything to do with the fact that part of our paychecks come from the money we receive from ticketing."

"Maybe it's hard sometimes for us to really understand what a "struggling college student" really means," Officer continued, "but I'm just not sure if charging a student $150 to get out of jail for something like urinating in public is reasonable."

"Okay, so it may not be a real tasteful thing to do, but have you ever seen the line for the bathroom in the Marion bar?"

"Of course some students may wonder how we caught them when they were behind 2 cars and buried deep into bushes. Not that we would ever be so sneaky as to stand on top of the bar to catch these awful violators. No, that would rotten."

"Parking is another problem," Officer added. "We sometimes like to trick the students, and draw a yellow line were there has never been one before. I usually make a few bucks that way. And hey, I just can't say if $20 is really that unreasonable to charge for the student who accidentally backed into his lot, can you?"

Officer continued by mentioning house parties. "Some kids may complain about us going undercover to catch them, but it's our job. I just have to question if it's right for us to get our $2 worth of beer first."

"We also don't believe in warnings. It doesn't matter if you were only going 5 miles over the limit. 30 in a 25 is completely uncalled for and out of hand," Officer said.

"That is breaking the law and we expect students to pay the fine money which they needed for tuition. Maybe when they can't afford to eat for a semester from all the fines they had to pay, students will learn their lesson, don't you think?"

Officer ended his comments by asking students to make their own judgements on whether or not the Menomonie Police force is fair to students. And by all means, remember, if it weren't for the students, they may not be able to buy their $250,000 homes, and drive in 1987 Cadillacs which we helped them buy. But hey, they deserve them, right?

Art supplies radically abused

by Hiasa Kite

It was recently discovered by undercover narcotics agents disguised as art students that art supplies are being seriously abused by students in search of cheap thrills and easy highs.

The undercover agents, after spending three days disguised as transfer students from Platteville, were able to uncover the horrific abuse art students make of their supplies.

"It's incredible. They're sniffing rubber cement right out of the jar during class. It's out of control," said one agent.

Another agent expressed concern over the practice of "Face Bagging". Apparently, the popular indulgence simply involves spraying "Spray Mount" or "Workable Fixative" into the black plastic bags in which they purchase their film.

The bags, once prepared with the mind altering spray preparations, can be toted discreetly around the art building, escaping detection.

The hub of this activity is in the infamous Camera Room located on the second floor of Applied Arts. There, the black bags are stored and distributed. "The Seniors run the whole circuit." revealed one Freshman. "They've got people guarding the place all the time. Sure, it LOOKS like they're working on projects, but mostly they're getting high and stuff."

Acting on this lead, the undercover agents learned that the design students were acting under the instruction of a message they had heard when they accidently played a country western tape backwards. Apparently, Willie Nelson's "On the Road Again", when played backwards reveals this message "Sniff noxious chemicals out of plastic bags, again and again and again, yee-ha!"

Blood relation found in zoo

by Gwon Ape

UW-Stout student Jackie Shakal discovered a long-lost ancestor while vacationing in Florida during Spring Break.

Shakal said she was on a routine tour through the zoo when suddenly, a large gorilla jumped out in front of her, beating it's chest.

"Wow! It scared the hell outta me," Shakal exclaimed.

Upon closer examination, however, Shakal recognized the gorilla as being a distant relative.

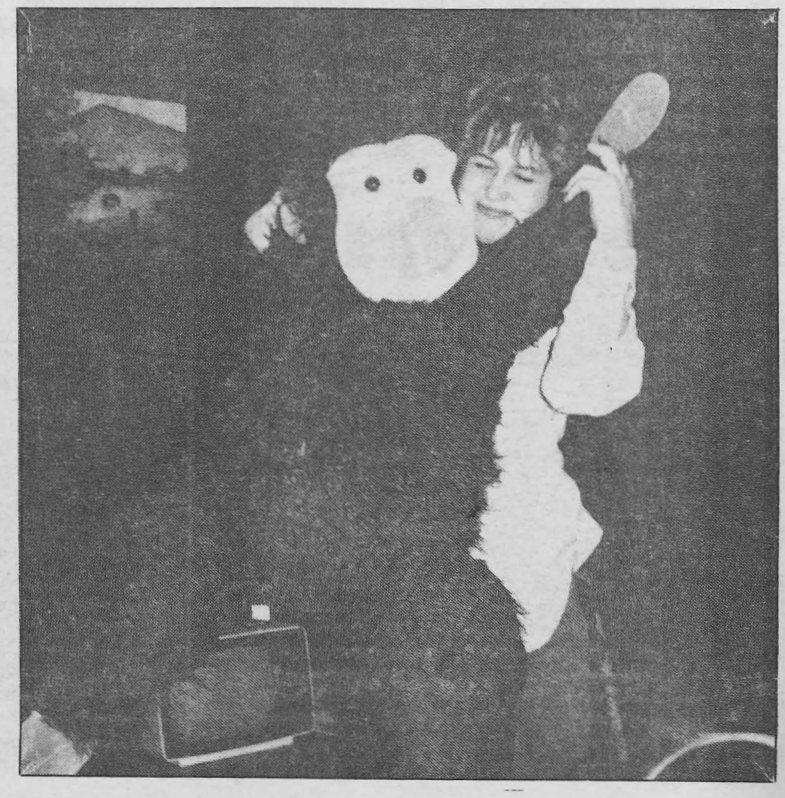
"I could tell because of his resemblance to me--the chubby, round face, the broad smile, the same hairdo..." Shakal remarked.

"The likeness was uncanny," she added.

Shakal named the gorilla Gory, and smuggled him home in a pet carrier.

Since moving into Shakal's apartment, Gory has become very involved at Stout.

His favorite activities are going to football games and visiting his girlfriends--Lynn O'Malley, Mary Bouchard, and Jenn Bickford in CKTO hall.



Opinions

Editorial

Paraphrastic casuistry

As UW-Stout grows without expanding, many supposed conflicts have arisen between the Stout Student Association and The Stoutonia.

Initially, The Stoutonia refused the SSA's offer of a seat at the table of honor where the elected and/or appointed student senators sit and discuss the items on which Stout turns.

We refused the seat of honor because we did not want anyone to think we support SSA activities with the love and devotion of SSA executives and senators.

If The Stoutonia appeared to like the SSA, what news would exist after the Bash on the Grass clean-up? Not to mention the major fund raising concert for Jill Weber. It is too bad hardly any students showed up for these major events.

Producing Bash on the Grass kept the SSA members out of trouble prior to the event, but house parties were the order of the day for Stout students.

The Stoutonia has done its best to divert attention from the misdeeds of the Nelson administration onto itself, focusing especially on the Amnesty International controversy.

With students hung up on the AI vs. SSA battle manufactured by The Stoutonia, The Stoutonia willfully suffers the accusation of bias against the SSA so everyone can forget about investigating the SSA's hidden agendas.

Students must remember they have a limited right to comment on SSA meetings when they aren't SSA members. Jef Maynard committed sacrilege by ridiculing an SSA meeting. Former Vice President of Financial Affairs Gary Harder pointed out Maynard has no place making fun of SSA meetings because it was Maynards's first meeting.

The SSA has a booklet for students wanting the SSA to listen to them. "Keep a tally sheet"tells how you can record the number of SSA meetings attended so your comments can be judged for credibility.

Freshmen need special assistance prior to attending their first SSA meeting so they have the chance to speak in a way that the SSA might listen to them. The SSA method of maintaining the status quo is refusing to listen to SSA initiates.

Quote of the Week

"Tim (Hopkins) has always wanted to scratch beyond the superficial in any and all issues, getting down to underlying causes that are not readily apparent." SSA President-elect, Paul D. Nelson.

Bottom Line

Fed Up

Denise Cain

" So give her inches and feed her well.
--Klaus Meine

She used to be so damn innocent. It was great. Not really. What is a good Catholic girl to do when she meets a maggot after her own heart? I guess surrender. You gotta do what you gotta do.

The question of whether or not to go all the way has been a dilemma for this poor unexperienced girl grasping for the values her parents have installed in her since her first communion.

For instance, in Milwaukee, they are trying to pass legislation under which teen-age girls would be paid as much as $10,000 each for college expenses if they completed high school without getting pregnant.

I completed high school without getting pregnant and embarrassing my parents to their graves. I didn't get shit for keeping MY zipper zipped; except a one way: a $10,000 loan to Stout so I could experiment with urine in Biochemistry.

The legislation includes taking 100 freshman girls in Milwaukee Public Schools who are "identified as those most at risk to become adolescent parents".

I am wondering, how do they identify these risky teens? The size of Milwaukee is about half a million. Do 100 girls in Milwaukee walk a certain way that allows them to be identified as fertile planting ground?

I can imagine wholesome parents suggesting tuition assistance to their daughters their Freshman year of high school. 'Now Sweetheart, we want you to pretend you're a slut and to walk around the legislators in a bull-legged sort of way so they will identify you as one of those.

Hell, my parents were the ones who did not bother to tell me about sex until I came home from Stout for the first time. I was totally confused about the concept of a brick falling out of Bowman Tower every time a virgin? graduates.

Fortunately, the tower of my high school tumbled to the desolate ground years ago. The girls in my class had nothing to prove.

Now I am wondering, if a girl is dumb enough to get pregnant her Freshman year of high school, how could she possibly make it through college? (Unless of course she went to Stout and majored in dietetics.)

Maybe I am all wrong. Perhaps these sex fanatics in Milwaukee have a good idea. In fact it is probably such a good idea that Stout will be the next to incorporate the zero birthrate to Freshmen gals.

I can just see hundreds of Stout Freshman girls meandering over to the Commons to get their free estrogen pills at Commons P.M.. It would put Planned Parenthood of Menomonie out of business.

I think they should have some sort of recognition for the guys in the eleventh and twelfth grade who don't get a Freshman girl pregnant. Maybe a gold plated rubber would be an appropriate trophy; something they could hang next to their locker-size Vanna poster.

I look forward to viewing the Freshman girls coming to Stout four years from now on a celibacy scholarship. Watch out Stout men, they could be trying to make up for lost time.

'Punker Steve' wins election

by Weiss Quispies

In a stunning political upset, the Stout student body shunned all three declared SSA presidential candidates in this week's election.

Instead, in an unprecedented write-in campaign, the electorate chose an undeclared candidate known only as "Punker Steve" to be the next SSA president.

Sweeping the election away from declared candidates James Falkofske, Mark Nickels, and Damon Smith, "Punker Steve" tallied 59 percent of the student body for a total of 4,003 write-in votes.

"This is remarkable," said outgoing President Paul D. "Pudge" Nelson, as he adjusted his clip-on tie. "This is the highest turn-out for an election in the school's history. We're not even sure who Punker Steve is."

Leading the regular voting was Damon Smith with 12 votes. Falkofske received five ballots and Nickels tallied three.

"It's a good thing I voted twice," Nickels remarked.

Dean of Students and Golf, Sam Wood, was pleased with the turnout.

Interviewed at Tanglewood Country Club, Dean Wood, described his position: "Feet spread about shoulder width, left foot a little ahead...Oh, the election...remarkable, we're not even sure who Punker Steve is...Look at that chip shot."

"This is a little irregular, but so am I," said SSA faculty advisor Bill Seidlecki. "I think it's the Terrace Cafe food."

"The election was valid," Seidlecki continued. "Punker Steve is SSA president-elect. We're just not sure who he is. If he attends Stout and has the accepted Stout minimum grade point, (0.75) he's our boy."

Punker Steve, a senior with an undeclared major, expressed his appreciation for the overwhelming mandate.

"Deny everything, deny everything, innocent until proven guilty," Punker Steve said, "deny everything."

Asked about his first acts as SSA president-elect, Punker Steve responded, "My first act will be to give Contemporary Music Productions (CMP) a $150,000 increase in the budget so we can get The Replacements, The Circle Jerks, Husker Du, Alice Bag, Black Flag and Scum for Sale for the graduation bash."

"After that, I think me and Brett and Mrs. Beasley are gonna trash the SSA office and have a big stinkin' party," Punker Steve added. "After that, I don't know."

The candidates Falkofske, Nickels, and Smith could not be reached for comments. (Actually, they said plenty but The Stoutstonia promised to stop making fun of them.

Asked to explain how he won the landslide election without the usual junior high school campaign tactics employed by past candidates, Punker Steve clarified, "How should I know?"

When questioned about how he expected to handle the likely SSA resistance to his new administration, "I'll probably have to kill 'em," he explained.

Student reps impress us all

by Embarrassed Byit

An elected representative of the students of UW-Stout told the governing body of the faculty of the university where to shove it yesterday.

"I'm tired of them jerking us around," said Big B. Wolf, president of the Huff-N-Puff administration of the Stout Student Association (SSA).

Wolf, as president of the SSA, is seen by the university administration as the figurehead of student interests in official matters of university policy.

"We don't need this crap," Wolf said. "I told them if they don't get off their duff in twenty days, I'd take it to the Board of Regents. We're not playing games here."

Wolf said that he would not tolerate the Faculty Senate delays on important student issues.

"I'm not the type of person who sits back and thinks things out tactically," Wolf said. "Why I'll just huff and I'll puff and I'll blow their house right down."

"They'll SEE that students are a FORCE to be RECKONED with," he emphasized.

Dr. Bea Kool, chair of the faculty governing body, which carries influential weight in decisions concerning admissions, grading policy, program requirements and the like, responded: "You know, I think there is some misunderstanding here."

"We intended to get to it," Kool said firmly.

"And we will," she added, "just as soon as we get to it."

Stout runners kicked off team

by Denise "Speed" Cain

Three UW-Stout men tracksters were kicked off the team last Friday for offensive behavior. It was the fifth time the athletes were warned about their lack of concentration on the field by Head Coach Grease Perry.

The offensive behavior included posing in obscene positions for any female who happened to walk by.

Head Coach Grease Perry said, "I was just sick and tired of stopping practice for those three individuals. Every single time they saw something with a chest, they were running over to the fence."

The three individuals removed from the team roster included Tim Salt-Peter, Chucka Kann and Bag'em Kohls. The three were the top scorers in team competition this year (both on the field and off).

Tim Salt-Peter, a pole vaulter, said he feels jilted by the coach's tough disciplinary policies, adding, "I don't see where we did anything wrong. We always ran back and forth to the fence. In fact I ran my best time in that event."

High jumper Chucka Kann is going to the athletic director to dispute his dismissal. He said, "There is no real reason I have to practice all of the time (at practice). I get plenty of practice jumping on the weekends."

Bag'em Kohls, a 220 high hurdler, is unmoved over his dismissal. He stated, "The only reason I was out for track is because I look good in tights. Being able to score was just an added benefit."

The rest of the men's track team is upset that the three individuals are off the team. Athlete Rusty Miller commented, "Boys will be boys. Is that any reason to kick them off the team?"

The female tracksters are threatening to quit the team because of the recent ruling. Speed Maukster said that the men were an inspiration to the women, adding, "Now what have we got to run after?"

The three men feel that they can bounce back from the embarrassment. They have been asked by the Women in Management Club to pose for the their new All-Devil Male Poster.

Perhaps the individuals most hurt by Coach Perry's affirmative action include the many women who were visually fulfilled by Salt-Peter, Kann and Kohls. One overweight, lonely female stated, "It was the only time any sober guys ever looked at me."

In any event, the Stout Blue Devils will be hurt by the absence of the three posers. For those people who enjoyed their display, Salt-Peter, Kann and Kohls have assured individuals that they will be available to perform at the Marion Bar upon special request.

Dangerfield is 'Back to Stout' to shoot film

by LeLand Timkins

Rumors have been circulating around campus that the "man of no respect" will be shooting a sequel to his first film at Stout.

The rumor is now a fact.

Rodney Dangerfield announced Thursday, March 26, that he will be filming the sequel to the box office smash, "Back to School," on our campus.

Dangerfield said the sequel, "Back to Stout," will be filmed here because he has always heard "it's a partyin' place."

"I've been waiting years to wear my funkiest duds and surf the Spot Bar," said Dangerfield, "I also hope to party with Brueckner and the Maggots."

Dangerfield's producer, Al Hoffman, said there will be minor parts in the movie for over 1,000 students, faculty and staff members.

"We will need kids for the bar scenes, house party scenes and as walk-ons," said Hoffman.

Not only will the filming of "Back to Stout" be great publicity, it will also be profitable. University officials have been negotiating a contract with Dangerfield's associates for $2.4 million for rights to use the UW-Stout name, facilities, buildings and grounds.

Students, faculty and staff have been brushing up on their Rodney lingo and impressions, hoping to be chosen at the May 1 auditions for a movie part.

"Rodney has always been my closet-idol, so I'm practicing for auditions," said Chancellor Robert "Bob" Swanson, "We just don't get no respect."

"I've been wearing my father's most gauche and disgusting polyester leisure suits to get in character for the auditions," said Jonathon LaDoucer,a fashion merchandising major.

"Back to Stout" is about Phillip (played by Dangerfield), a "tall and fat" suit salesman who goes back to school to prevent his son from dropping out of college. Because Phillip and his son party too much they got kicked out of school and transferred to Stout.

Phillip, an alumni of Stout, decides his son's education is none of his business, but wants to school his son in the way of classic party animals.

Dangerfield says he has special plans for a scene involving the Stout Centaurs rugby team.

"The guys on the team invited me to a rugby game and party early in the year," said Dangerfield, "I want to film it all and use it in the movie...especially the nude beer slides."

If everything goes well, Dangerfield hopes to begin filming in the fall of '87.

"I hope to give a 1988 New Year's Eve premiere party of the movie for the whole UW-Stout campus, faculty, staff and students if we get everything done on schedule," said Dangerfield.

Dangerfield said he would like to encourage anyone interested in a movie part to call 1-800-NO-RESPECT to make an appointment for auditions.

SUPERSTAR AND THE SLAM BAM BREAK A LOT OF BONES BAND Ouch

These guys just released their latest album after doing an extensive tour of Central America. One of the projects they've been doing is trying to raise money for the Sandinista army. Many of the proceeds from their tour have gone to the Sandinistas.

They have just announced a project they want to do by getting a bunch of bands together in order to raise money for the Sandinistas. The project is going to be called Sandinistaid. They plan on releasing a song called "Do they know its Groundhogs day".

The best song on the album is "Styrofoam doesn't feel good under your armpit". Ronnie James Frito, lead guitarist, plays by rubbing a chicken across the strings. This is what I call really original.

"This is song but there are no words" is a drum solo by Phil Colon. One thing I can say is that it would sound better if he used sticks instead of cucumbers.

If you ever get to go see them in concert its worth it. Some of the great things they do on stage are bitting the heads off gophers and taking members of the audience and shaving them, all of them.

THE COPS Every Arrest You Make, Every Drug Deal You Break

This was really a surprise to me. The Menomonie Police Department in affiliation with Stout Campus Security have released an album. It has some originals and some remakes. On some of the remakes they have changed the words. For instance, they did a remake of "We don't have to take our close off to have a good time" into "We don't have to go to the jungle to have a good time".

One of their originals is "That ain't your ID". This song was written by lead guitarist Officer Dwight Albrecht. It also has some good drumming by Police Cheif Dennis Beety. Some of the lyrics include "this doesn't look like you" and "no way are you 28".

The album also includes "Its not pot its oregano" and "Pull over". These are a couple of slower songs that sound like a cross between Jimi Hendrix and Run-D.M.C..

The album is only going to be released here in Menomonie. You can find it at the University Bookstore or stop a cop on the street. If you ask me I think it should be released nationwide.

One of their first apperances was going to be at the Great Hall this weekend, but, the Campus Security Chief, lead singer, backed into a german shepard. They do have

Cagers to participate in donkey basketball

by Paul "Wally" Emerson

UW-Stous Men's Head Basketball Coach Dr. Dewey Mincemeaty announced today that the Blue Devils will take to the road (dirt roads, that is) on a ten-game road trip that will travel out West as part of a donkey basketball fund-raising show.

For those avid sports enthusiasts out there, I need not explain just what donkey basketball is. But for the rest of you, here's a brief rundown of the rules:

1) There are four donkeys to a team, and each player gets his/her own donkey. (Sounds interesting so far, doesn't it?)

2) A player must ride, push or pull their own donkey wherever they go on the court, with or without the ball.

3) A player must be mounted (frontwards, backwards or sideways) on their donkey before attempting to shoot the ball at the basket.

4) Each player is responsible for "cleaning up" any debris their donkey excretes during the course of the game. A "Pooper Scooper" will be provided for the player's convenience.

5) Violation of rule number four by flinging such debris at the referee, or opposing team members, will mean automatic ejection from the festivities.

Now that you all know the extremely difficult, and sometimes humiliating, tasks the team will face on the trip, I will continue.

As the team was boarding Stout's very own deluxe motorvan early yesterday morning, Dr. Mincemeaty exclaimed, "Let's blow this popsicle stand!" as he headed out the front doors of Johnson Fieldhouse.

Dr. Mincemeaty stated that the team will cleverly disguise its true identity by going by the name of the "Menomin Muletrotters."

> "Once you get through the smell you've go her licked."
> —Coach Mincemeaty

Muletrotter team members are as follows: Brian "The Blond Bomber" Ellinger, "Rockin' Ronnie" Punter, Tom "Stretch" Lak, John "Curly" Peterson, Dan "Put me in coach" Shirley (why would they call him that?) and Rick "The Wild Man" Laveen.

The team's schedule will run through the month of April. Dr. Mincemeaty noted, "The money raised from this tour will be used to allow us to take part in the Great Alaskan Shoot-out basketball tourney next season."

Due much in part to the great interest and large audiences that often accompany the donkey ball shows, Dr. Mincemeaty noted that the ten-game schedule was given exclusively to the following eight metropolitan areas.

April 5 — Beaver Crossing, Nebraska
April 8 — Ten Sleep, Wyoming
April 10 — Antelope Creek, Wyoming
April 12 — Dull Center, Wyoming
April 14 — Buffalo Hump, Idaho
April 17 — Skull Creek, Colorado
April 19 — Bullfrog Creek, Utah
April 21 — Beartrap Meadow, California

In addition, the Muletrotters will go north of the border for the remaining two games before returning home. They will first travel to Skookumchuck, British Columbia on April 24, and then roll down the road into Manyberries, Saskatchewan for a game on April 26.

"I don't know who'll be easier to coach, the players or the donkeys," chuckled Mincemeaty. He also added that in order to save as much money as possible, the players will have some additional responsibilities on the trip.

Such responsibilities include washing and grooming the donkeys and the often enjoyable task of cleaning out the truck which is used to carry the donkeys around in.

"Once you get through the smell, you've got her licked," quipped Mincemeaty, referring to the sometimes unbearable stench one has to endure while cleaning out the mess. (Strange! It seems I've heard that phrase somewhere before.)

Graplers turn pro for Wrestlemania VIII

by Tim Nichols

The UW-Stout wrestling team competed in Wrestlemania VIII last weekend at the University of Bearville. A near-capacity crowd of 243 jammed the Spuddome in Bearville, Idaho to see some of their favorite wrestlers take on the Blue Devils.

Promoters of the event billed Wrestlemania VIII as the largest indoor sports and entertainment event ever to be held in Idaho, eclipsing the November, 1986 crowd for a live, remote "He Haw" show.

Blue Devil Keith "The Lobster" successfully defended his Wild World of Wrestling (WWW) title in the 126-lb. class. "The Lobster" warded off a final flurry of shin kicks by the midget tag team of Tom and Jerry in recording the victory.

With a series of devastating pile drivers, Blue Devil King Kong Burbach overwhelmed his opponent named Hillbilly Jack and pinned him in the closing minutes of the match.

Fans of the local favorite Potatohead Bob weren't disappointed as he narrowly defeated Blue Devil A.B. The Great. At one point in the match, hostile fans had to be ushered from the ringside as The Great held Potatohead in a headlock and repeatedly rammed him into the rails. The Bearville Police Department was well prepared to handle any crowd disturbances as they called in two county deputies from nearby Buffalo Hump, Idaho.

Hollywood Hendrickson continued his winning ways for the Blue Devils by defeating Grizzly Greg in a 167-lb. class bout. Hollywood stymied Bearville's pet mascot with an offense that consisted of full nelsons, figure four locks, knee drops, sleeper holds and dropkicks. According to local officials, this is the first time Grizzly Greg has been beaten by a human in over five years.

In the feature match, Blue Devil tag team members Rowdy Smith and Killer Rupp engaged in a heavyweight bout against Boss Hog and the Bone Crusher. Both Rowdy and Killer were injured and unable to continue in the early minutes of the match.

However, Head Coach Mike Late and Assistant Coach Ironman Coupland joined forces to replace the injured grapplers. Much to the dismay of the crowd, Coupland sealed a victory by delivering a body slam and a leg drop to Boss Hog and recording a fall at 5:50.

With the Blue Devils' success in the event, there are rumors that Wrestlemania 20, 25 and 32 will be included in next year's schedule. There are also rumors of a possible dual against the Minnesota North Stars, who will be giving up on hockey to try their hand at wrestling next year.

The Fabricator

Cosmas A. Whitten

Recently The Stoutonia has been accused of making up facts. After heated arguments and lawsuits, I have had to confess. I am the one who fills the paper with a large amount of fictitious facts.

I guess my anger towards The Stoutonia first began when Photo Editor Dan refused to take my picture for this column. Dan claims he refused to take my picture on the grounds that my ugly face would break his costly, state-of-the-art camera lens.

I in turn had to go through the archives and find a picture in the "Campus slant" of a student who had already graduated. I thought the person in the above picture looked normal enough so I picked her.

I will again confess another wrongdoing of mine. I have always dreamed of being ambitious enough to participate in a college athletic program. I thought gymnastics was kind of cool so I included my name in all the gymnastics articles without ever having gone to a day of practice.

Since I am the sports editor, I assigned all the gymnastics articles to myself. I just slipped my name into the article and made myself sound like I was good. Really I am a clutz — what gymnasts call the "Carolyn Syndrome." I cannot even do a front roll.

Anyway the cat got out of the bag when the gymnastics team complained about me to Editor in Chief Tim Hopkins. Tim is very upset with me and has refused to lend me any more money to buy chocolate chip cookies at the Pawn.

Although I am faced with felony charges, I am being backed by one of this country's top gossip newspapers. I have received fan mail from many journalists applauding me for my attempts to put my name in the limelight.

One letter read, "Way to go fatso. You sure had them fooled. More journalists should follow your style. If Arnold can be the terminator, there is no reason why you can not be the fabricator."

I have no regrets about what I have done. I have been offered a high-salary job with the gossip paper. According to the paper, enough people read it that the paper can afford all the lawsuits and still make a large profit.

I would like to thank all my fans in supporting my made-up articles and column. Remeber, when in doubt, tell a lie.

Murdered Artist lives to tell

by Emma Hizer

Thousands of students and staff gathered in 210 Applied Arts to pay homage to the resurrected artist, Peter Puller. Puller, A former Stout faculty member, claims to have been the victim of a vicious and sinister murder plot. He was kidnapped, tortured and murdered by jealous students and faculty from the U.W. Eau Claire Art Department he said.

Puller slammed a bottle of Leinie's bock before he began his two hour lecture. "Repeat after me." he said. "I am a winner", "I am an overcomer", "I am a child of Picasso." "I have been washed with a bucket of gesso."

The tale unfolded thus;

It all began one night at The Buck. The gang was there, slamming pitchers as usual and discussing really important things like metaphysics, Classicism versus Romanticism, and the female orgasm. I wasn't sure who saw it first, I think it was Don Verlon, but someone shouted, "It's trite! It's trite!", as a parade of Eau Claire art students and staff carried their work into the Buck.

The Stout party retaliated to the aesthetic onslaught by chanting DaDa poetry. A fist fight ensued. Puller, in his drunken stupor, was dragged out the back door, then beaten severely with a day old Domino's pizza.

Thrown into the back seat of a turquoise Pacer, Puller's unconscious body was subjected to continued abuse.

"I came to when I smelled macaroni and cheese fumes. I think my kidnappers planned on eating the stuff or something." said Puller.

"They heard me struggling to get free and kicked in the door of the room. One of them put on a Bee-Gees album. They made me listen to both sides twice. Then they put on Bon Jovi. I couldn't take it. I begged them to kill me."

"They stapled my fingers to the floor with a staple gun. Then they paper-mache'd my whole body and left me there to die" puller elaborated.

"That's when my out of body experience with Pablo Picasso happened. I felt myself floating up out of my body, I was walking on canvas and suddenly found myself in a huge gallery filled with light and nude models. It was great. Jackson Pollack and Rothko were shooting pool over in the corner and Andy Warhol was getting a perm." Puller related with enthusiasm.

Although he was having a kick ass time, Puller soon felt an empty feeling. He looked down to Earth and saw his kidnappers trying to frame his dead body. "It really pissed me off." he said. "They were using cheap pine. I knew it was going to warp. It didn't even fit together properly."

Picasso, in his wisdom, saw Puller's distress. "I am Picasso, do not be afraid, I'll get you out of this mess" he said.

"Cool." said Puller as he found himself once again smothered with paper mache'. In a sudden Picasso-given burst of energy Puller burst out of his bonds and beat his captors at their own game by slicing them to ribbons with the shards of the broken Bon Jovi albums.

Puller, wiping the sweat from his brow at the trauma of relating his amazing tale, invited everyone present to join him at the Buck for a drink.

Lady cagers finish shocking season

by Darron Vanman

You would really think after coming off a 2-20 season, a team would first probably die, but then would probably finish with about the same kind of record. But that is not case for our surprising women's basketball team.

First off the Lady Blue Devils surprised the WWIAC with a perfect 16-0 record. They whipped the conference champ of last year, Stevens Point, 85-60 and 70-52 in conference play. Scores that were in reverse order last year. The Lady Devils then went into postseason play and continued their domination.

In the end, Stout ended up with a perfect season, 28-0, and yes, a national title at the Division III level. You can get off the ceiling now. I know, as you now know, or should I say I didn't know, our Lady Devils had such a season, thanks to our sports editor who told us to ignore women's basketball this year. She said, "Don't even bother. I don't want you wasting your time." So the sports staff and most of the Stout campus didn't even know what happened until the Lady Blue Devils brought home the big trophy.

So this article is an apology to the Blue Devils for the lack of coverage and also to inform our readers of this quite spectacular season. I mean look at it — the ladies have never had a season with more than five wins. So why would this season be any different?

The players that made it happen were Shorty Katscan, Mary Alagator, Bar "The Bomber" Better, Short Order "on the court" Cook and Golly Zolly. The coach, in only her second appearance as coach at Stout, is Belinda "Legendary" Gee.

Katscan was the nation's leading scorer and rebounder with a 30-point scoring average (close to Michael Jordan's average). She averaged 20 per game in the rebounding department. What's interesting though about these feats is that Katscan is only five feet tall and she's Stout's center.

Katscan said, "This was the best team in my three years at Stout." Katscan is now eligible to play professionally. Look out Larry Bird!!!!!!

Hack-in-the-sack

by Slash

Name: Mike Hackworthy
Nicknames: Hackworthless, Hack-in-the-Sack, Hackstone hands
Sport: Rugby
Year: He doesn't know, maybe 1987
Recent accomplishments: Hack once scared a whole rugby team just by screaming that somebody had ahold of his leg. Hack has also been known to put boogars on ladies' sweaters just to annoy them. Hack is in such great demand with women that it is rumored that one young lady, who wishes to remain nameless except to Hack, once jumped his bones and muscles right in his living room.
Athlete's non-statistics: Hack has been known to sing "Hack's an asshole" at Endzone parties. He is the reigning nude beer slide champion of the Wisconsin rugby conference.
Athlete's History: Hack came to Stout as a 90-pound weakling. When Hack was born, the doctors dropped him on his head, causing him to become very mean. Since that time, Hack has become somewhat of a monster. He lifts weights so often that the athletic department is thinking of renaming the weight room in Hack's honor, calling it the "Suckless Room."

Hack is so mean that he once tried to help a man puke over the guard rail near the Spot bar. The man refused Hack's help, so Hack threw him over the guard rail. The man landed down near the lake and was never seen again.

Hack once climbed Harvey Hall, only to find out that the view from the roof costs $150. Hack has climbed many buildings throughout Wisconsin since that time. Once in La Crosse, Hack was pelted with rocks and garbage upon reaching his objective, the top of a big bull.

Hack likes to pretend. In Madison at a rugby party, he pretended that he was Errol Flynn and he swung from a chandelier.
Comments from players: "I'm glad that he is on our team. That guy is a lunatic."

"That clown should be outlawed How did he get so big? Where did you find that guy?"

"I think I've just been hit by a Mack truck!"

"No pal, you just got hit by a 'Hack truck!'"

Hack once said that he wanted to go through the whole directory page by page, and then when he go through with Stout women, he would transfer to UCLA He still isn't done here, so you gals that haven't met Mr. Hack-in-the-Sack you still have a chance.

As for Hack's personal goals, he is planning to get big enough to tackle William "The Refrigerator" Perry so hard that the Fridge ends up flat on his back. Hack also wants to kill this writer for writing this article. Remember Hack APRIL FOOLS!

'Vote 4' team elected to exec. board

Reflecting the mood on a sunny day, the newly elected officials of the Stout Student Association are enthusiastic about beginning their administration.

by Steven Lemire

Regardless of poor voter turnout, the students of UW-Stout have new Stout Student Assoication (SSA) representatives.

"I'm very pleased that after a long and hard campaign that the "Vote 4" team will be working together as executives next year," President-elect Falkofske said, after calling his parents.

Fewer than 30 votes gave Falkofske the edge over Damon Smith in this election, which focused mainly on the distribution of student segregated fees. Mark Nickels finished a distant third.

Smith commented that he was really disappointed with the low turnout of voters, especially since the polls were open for two full days. "In any case," Smith added, "I would like to continue to serve the students in any way possible."

Angela Bias won the vice-president of legislative affairs seat by a wide margin versus Ali Vazirabadi and Russel Thill. Todd Nelson defeated Jonathan Graham for vice-president of financial affairs and Dan Meyer, running unopposed, will hold the office of vice-president of academic affairs.

In other races, Laura Wolcyk narrowly defeated Denise Albrecht to become the new women's affairs senator. Even before the election, Wolcyk said that she and Albrecht would be working together any way it came out.

The minority affairs senator seat was filled by the last minute write-in candidate, Riaz A. Khan. "I will go to the international student organizations first," Khan said, "to see if they want me to represent them in the SSA."

The races for Inter-Residence Hall Association (IRHA) executive officers were uncontested. Juanita Mack is IRHA president-elect, vice-president/treasurer will be David Asp. Amy Abell will be the IRHA's national communications coordinator.

IRHA's representative to SSA is Steve Uslabar.

The off-campus senators for next year will be Lynn Anderson, Greg Aprile, Kent Below, Bonnie Cook, John Hilden, Karn Lindgren and Jay O'Neill.

Of the approximately 600 votes cast, only a handful for write-in candidates. A few people tried to vote twice and there were four unofficial votes for Punker Steve.

Successful bid by student in controversial city council election

by Rich Brueckner

Only one of the three Stout students who ran for the Menomonie city council was successful in Tuesday's election. Paul Kniesz, who ran unopposed in Ward VII, is now an alderman after being supported by a total of 22 voters.

SSA president-elect James Falkofske was defeated in Ward V by 31 votes. The winner, Laurel E. Hague, received 63 percent of the votes to Falkofske's 37 percent.

The third student candidate, Franz E. Kniesz, received 40 votes even though he dropped out of the race prior to the election.

Also defeated was former Stout student Jay H. Schroeder, an incumbant alderman in Ward IX. Schroeder lost to Robert W. Beyer by a total of 56 votes. Schroeder also lost the mayorial election to Charles Stokke last July.

Schroeder was just one of five unsuccessful candidates who sided with "Concerned Citizens for Responsive Government". The other defeated Concerned Citizens were Mitchell Green, Steve Wood, Doloris Shranklen and Beverly Waller.

Concerned Citizens led last year's successful effort to replace Menomonie's appointed city manager with an elected mayor.

The following candidates were also elected: Dennis B. Thorson, Bruce Myers, Robert Bossany, Albert F. Brockelman, Richard Hardy, Jeanette E. O'Neill, J. Richard Emmer, Richard Martinson.

The newly elected council will hold an organizational session on Tuesday, April 21.

Man charged in area slayings to undergo mental examinations

by Judy Weitzer

A Portage man was charged Monday in the recent slaying of Menomonie resident Timothy Hayden.

Alvin Taylor, 40, who is charged with first degree murder by use of a dangerous weapon, was arrested on a warrant on Friday, April 3. Taylor is being held in the Dunn County jail without bond.

Investigators found three spent .22 caliber cartridges near Hayden's body. According to the criminal complaint, cartridges test-fired at the Crime Laboratory matched those from a revolver Taylor reportedly purchased March 17 from Grant Guildner of Wisconsin Dells.

Taylor was also charged by the Eau Claire county district attorney Tuesday for the stabbing death of James Severenson in May, 1986. An appearance in the Eau Claire Circuit County Court has not been scheduled.

In a statement to the Eau Claire and Menomonie police Monday, Taylor admitted that he had killed Severenson.

First degree murder, the charge that was issued against Taylor by Eau Claire authorities, carries a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment. The Dunn County charge could add as much years to the sentence.

Dunn County Circuit Judge Donna J. Muza ordered Taylor to undergo mental examinations.

Taylor was found indigent. In the Dunn County charge, he will be represented by Michael Tobin of the public defender's office in Hudson. Eau Claire public defender Lawrence Dunring will represent Taylor in the charge filed by Eau Claire County.

Taylor had reportedly shared living quarters with both men prior to the incidents.

Tom Jacobs (No. 15) keeps his eye on the ball during the wheelchair basketball game, pitting the Eau Claire Wheelers against UW-Stout's varsity team.

Handicap awareness highlighted by events

by Julie K. Ragatz

Promoting handicap awareness was the goal of the Vocational Rehabilitation Club this past week as they sponsored a series of activities centered around the theme "Life's Transitions."

The week kicked off on Monday with a panel discussion which presented information about on-campus practicum sites for students in vocational rehabilitation.

In the evening, a basketball game took place between the Chippewa Wheelers and the UW-Stout varsity team. The catch was that all the players were required to use wheelchairs.

The Wheelers won the game by a score of 46-41 over Stout, despite the fact that the first point of the game was made by Tom Gomolak on a free throw and that the Stout team had a great rally with only minutes remaining.

Robbie Anderson of the Wheelers said that every game is a challenge. "We only play for fun. We're last in the conference."

Dan Shervey of the Stout team said that it was fun, but it would have been more fun if Stout would have won. Using the wheelchairs was not at all easy for the players.

In addition to having sore arms, their hands also got sore. "It takes the skin off your palms," Shervey said, "and it's hard not using your legs to shoot."

According to Shervey that's not the only advantage the Wheelers had. "They set picks and had plays, we didn't. They can go a lot faster, and it's frustrating when you can't catch the ball because you're so restricted."

Brian Ellingson, who also played for the Stout team last year, added, "If you know how to do it, it's not that bad, but those guys were good." He also said that it gets very tiring when you're not used to it.

> "The program is meant for everyone
> —Geno Pichette"

Dan Ponick of the Wheelers said that the Stout team was really good, despite the fact that they couldn't maneuver the wheelchairs very well. He described the game as "very interesting."

"They definitely had the reach on us," Ponick said. "We've never played guys that tall." He said it was still fun, even though it had been three months since he played last.

The game was greatly enjoyed by all of those involved. When asked if he would do it again, Shervey responded, "Yeah, but not for a couple of weeks."

A variety of other speakers and events were also on the agenda, including Warren Wesley, owner and operator of Med-Voc, who spoke on private rehabilitation. A presentation was also given by a group of handicapped individuals in the operation of ham radios.

One purpose of sponsoring the week was to make students, faculty and also the community aware of individuals who have disabilities and their attempt to create more of a job market for themselves.

"The program is meant for everyone," said Geno Pichette, advisor of the Vocational Rehabilitation Club. He hopes that the surrounding community will benefit by the activities as well as the people here at Stout.

The club had hoped to have more hands-on activities for those who don't have handicaps so they could more easily understand what it's like to be disabled.

As Pichette put it, the best way for people without disabilities to understand what a handicapped person goes through is for them to experience it themselves.

Pichette added that everyone, no matter who they are, must undergo changes. "The underlying notion behind the theme is to bring

Alfresco Outing Club sponsors skydiving program

by Judy Weitzer

The urge to soar like a bird was a longtime dream for some, and last weekend UW-Stout's Alfresco Club helped make it possible.

A group of ten students paid $96 each to participate in a skydiving training program offered by the Indianhead Sport Parachuting Club (ISPC), a nonprofit organization which uses student fees to update and replace equipment.

> "The hardest part was getting out on the strut (wing) because of the strong headwind
> —Brian Pook"

The instructor for the five-hour training session was Mary Bauer, a certified jump master who has made nearly 1800 jumps. Bauer is also a licensed pilot, rigger and instructor for the accelerated freefall training program.

Assisting Bauer in the instruction was Paul Hed, a Stout student who has made over forty jumps since he started with the Alfresco Club last November.

Hed is working toward his jump master certification, which is attained by making at least 100 jumps in addition to attending special training sessions. The jump master trainee must also be competent in giving freefall instructions to students.

When asked why he was so enthusiastic about the program, Hed explained about the euphoric feelings he's experienced while falling. "It's fun and it's a challenge," he said.

Included in the training were various phases of lecture, demonstration and participation, both in the classroom and outdoors.

The lecture phase of the training incorporated many visual aids, such as photos and diagrams, which showed how to spot the drop zone and how to use the reserve canopy in case of malfunction in the main canopy.

Demonstration were used to point out specific parts of the parachute and their purpose. They taught students how to detect the more common malfunctions where the use of the reserve canopy was not warranted. The methods of correcting those situations were also discussed.

Using a gutted Cessna, students participated in drills to show position in the plane and the line of movement as each jumper exited.

The class then practiced the proper arch position, the three stages of the actual jump and a sequence of other instructions to be carried out after the jump was made.

There were also drills on correct landing procedures, including what to do in case of a hazardous landing, such as falling in water, trees or power lines.

After the training session, the students were required to pass a written test. By this time, high winds prevailed, and students had to wait another two hours before the first load of three jumpers hit the air.

Brian Pook, the second student to come back to earth, said of the experience, "The hardest part was getting out on the strut (wing) of the plane because of the strong headwind."

All ten students from Stout successfully completed their jump, although most were quite a bit off course. On the ride home, anticipation of the next jump could be felt in the air.

Enrollment cuts decrease budget

by Tracy Lea Landis

Cutting back on student enrollment will cause a decrease in the collection fo activities fees, according to Paul D. Nelson, president of the Stout Student Association (SSA).

A cut of 200 students projected for the 1987-88 school year would reduce allocable SSA funds by a minimum of $5,800, Nelson said.

Allocable funds come from the activities fees that students pay with their tuition.

Nelson estimated that students pay an average of $29 per semester in activities fees, which the SSA senators eventually allocate.

The spring allocation by the SSA are made on the basis of a very conservative estimate of the student population provided to the SSA by the campus administration, in order to prevent overspending, he explained.

"They never let us overspend," Nelson said "That's why there's reallocations in October."

The SSA senators distribute allocable funds left over from reconciliations of the projected fees and the amount actually collected.

These budget proceedings are called reallocations and occur in the fall.

Nelson said that continued cuts in enrollment at the university will cause further reduction in allocable activities fees fund.

"We're looking at cuts of 469 students by 1990," Nelson said.

Antique Auto Club sponsors car show

The club sponsors the event to raise money and bring both Stout and the community together.

by Rose Shakal

Vroom! Menomonie community and Stout students alike enjoyed the 20th Annual Car Show and Swap Meet held at the Dunn County Fairgrounds last Sunday. The show was sponsored by the UW-Stout Antique Auto Club.

Chuck Schulte, an active club member, said that although they run the show professionally, it's mainly a social event for the community, the students, parents and the club members.

> "It's a fun time for the parents and the students
> —Chuck Schulte"

Schulte said that the auto club plans the event each year for Parents' Weekend in an effort to show the parents what the club is all about and what they are involved in.

"It's a fun time for the parents and the students," Schulte said.

The club tried something new this year by asking local businesspeople to sponsor the awards.

"We wanted the community, as well as the college, involved," Schulte said. He said they get a lot of input from the community and from people who attend the show.

Schulte said there were people at the show from Menomonie, Eau Claire, Hudson, Fond Du Lac and many parts of Minnesota.

There's no age barriers, Schulte said. They get folks all the way from "knee-high to a grasshopper to 70-75 years old," he remarked.

Anyone can show a car, and the classes go up to present (1987) models. The car show is just an opportunity to show off your car, look at the other cars there and talk to other people who are interested in cars, Schulte commented.

"Everybody likes a nice-looking car," Schulte added.

Another aspect of the show is the judging and competition. This year the Auto Club invited the Red Cedar Auto Club and the Old Beldenville Car Club to assist them in the judging.

The people at the show had an opportunity to cast their votes in the people's choice category. This award was won by a man from Hudson, Wis., with a 1939 Chevy.

George Reed, also from Hudson, won first place in the 1960-1972 class with a 1964 Chevelle.

"I've been interested in old cars for a long time," Reed commented.

Ed Miniatt, a student from UW-River Falls, entered a 1957 Buick in the swap meet.

"I just came for the swap meet, but it's always fun to look at all the other cars here," Miniatt said.

"The hot rods are pretty, but I go for the cars that are restored to original condition — the classic restorations," Miniatt added.

Schulte said the car show is the club's major fund-raiser. The Stout Antique Auto Club is the oldest club on campus, he remarked.

Some of the club's other activities include going to other car shows, having speakers come in and their annual Christmas party.

"We just enjoy cars," Schulte said. The club members like to get together to work on each other's cars, to learn and to help each other. Everybody has a knack for something."

Task force to fight alcohol abuse

by Jill Huppert,

An Alcohol Education Task Force has organized at UW-Stout to develop a campus-wide philosophy and policy for intervention on alcohol and other drug abuse problems.

The committee's first goal is to develop a "Student Assistance Program" model which would establish structured and consistent methods for education or intervention of students abusing alcohol and other drugs.

Allen Ebel, director of the Alcohol and Other Drug Education Program (AODEP), is coordinating the project.

"There is a high incidence of alcohol and other drug abuse by students at UW-Stout," Ebel said. "We need to start wrestling with our attitudes about the use of these chemicals."

Ebel is concerned that our society has begun to think of this destructive drinking behavior as "normal."

"If we simply compare Stout to other schools' chemical use problems, we may never set limits that are appropriate for our own environment."

Ebel estimated that students have paid $17,000-18,000 in alcohol and other drug-related fines during the first semester this year.

"It seems to me there is a better way of using that money," Ebel said.

In 1986 the Menomonie Police Department arrested 37 students for operating a motor vehicle under the influence of an intoxicant and 102 students for liquor law violations. The fine for a first offense liquor law violation is $67.50.

Thirty-three students were taken for detoxification during the first 70 days of last semester. A trip to detox may cost a student over $400 for room, ambulance and emergency medical treatment.

"Sometimes students have several experiences at detox," Ebel said. One student had three underage citations, one falsification of I.D. and two detoxes before the student was intervened on.

In the way the system works, "if a person goes to detox two or three times, even if it's life-threatening, there is nothing in writing that says where the university can intervene," Ebel said.

That is why developing a comprehensive system for intervention and prevention on this campus is necessary, according to Ebel.

At the first organizational meeting of the committee, Dean of Students Sam Wood said the task force will "form a nucleus of a group that will be able to assist a student to get to the correct place to get expert assistance."

"It's not just the student who's 18 years old and away from home for the first time that needs occasional assistance," Wood said. "The problem affects many more people."

Wood hopes the committee will form a core group network which will branch out into the whole city of Menomonie.

The committee was formed from representatives of organizations who have direct contact with students on a regular basis.

Faculty, staff, students and members of the community make up the committee of approximately 35 members.

The Wisconsin Office of Alcohol and Other Drug Abuse has made a commitment to assist the AODEP in writing for federal grants to fund this project.

The project will take a few years to complete, Ebel said. "We will have to build it into the fabric of the university so everyone is doing a little bit," he said.

Senior class gift program established

by Julie K. Ragatz

The Senior Class Gift Committee, in conjunction with the UW-Stout University Foundation, has organized a senior class gift program.

The Stout Foundation is the gift-raising arm of the university. Their forty-member board of directors governs the university and solicits gifts from corporations, alumni, parents and friends.

The program will allow seniors to support the university and a project of their choice by contributing an allotted amount of money over a three-year period.

At the first meeting of the gift committee, a goal of $20,000 over the three years was set. Graduating seniors would be asked to donate $10 to the university their first year out of school, $20 the second year and $30 the third year for a total of $60.

Of the money that is contributed, one half would go toward a university project and the other half may go to the department or project of the donor's choice. Included in this is long-term scholarships and short-term programs which will be decided on by the committee.

> "It is a way for students to say thank you for what the university has done for them
> —Pat Reisinger"

Pat Reisinger of the University Foundation Board commented that some students thought that the amount of money to be donated was too much but added that students spend just as much for beer on weekends.

Reisinger also said that while all future students will benefit, it is hoped that some schools will be able to initiate scholarships where funds have been too low before.

Paul Nelson, President of the Senior Gift Committee, said that because of cuts in education money, students pay more and get less. "Our program works to fill the gaps," Nelson added.

Nelson also pointed out that the money contributed is tax-deductible.

"It is a way for students to say thank you for what the university has done for them," Reisinger said.

This is the first time that a graduating class at UW-Stout has been given this type of challenge. In the past, there have been class dues for each class, but that no longer exists.

The class gift committee consists of twelve voting members, three from each of the schools. Chancellor Robert S. Swanson, who advises the committee, was greatly in favor of the idea and has also offered $500 to the campaign.

The Foundation Board was so impressed with the idea that they have agreed to match the first year's contributions dollar for dollar up to $5,000.

For example, if the seniors pledge $4,500 the first year, the foundation will also give $4,500 for a total of $9,000.

Brochures are being mailed out to all seniors between April 13 and 30. Any senior who is not contacted or has questions may notify Paul Nelson at 235-6194 or the University Foundation Board at x-1151.

21 schools compete in 16th Annual Applied Mathematics Conference

by Rose Shakal

Competition was intense in the 16th Annual Applied Mathematics Conference held at UW-Stout on Wednesday and Thursday.

Mr. Eino Maki, applied mathematics program director, believes that the conference is an opportunity for schools committed to computer science and math programs to receive recognition for their achievements in these areas.

"We've built a certain status and recognition with the state," Maki remarked. "We want to be aware of the potential high school students have in the area of computer science."

Twenty-one high schools participated in the computer programming contest, a day-long competition which included schools from Milwaukee, Wausau, Wisconsin Rapids and St. Louis Park, Minn., just to name a few.

High schools were encouraged to participate in the computer contest by companies such as NSP, American Family Insurance, J.C. Penney and Xerox, who provided bonuses including travel, lodging and meals for the students.

The contest was in two rounds in which the team members solved problems using different computer programs.

Other activities during the day included an artificial intelligence symposium put on by Texas Instruments and a speaker from Hewlett-Packard.

> "We want to be aware of the potential high school students have
> —Eino Maki"

A banquet held Wednesday evening for the participating high school students featured Steve Nelson, a speaker from Cray Research.

The second part of the conference was the sectional meetings pertaining to applied mathematics. Presentations were given by people from companies such as AT&T, Marshall-Ilsley Bank, IBM and Hewlett-Packard.

Also, six Stout students talked about their experiences in applied mathematics cooperative work experiences and internship programs.

A quiz bowl rounded out the conference. A total of twenty-two participated in the initial run-off. Sixteen of these moved on to the second round and four teams went to the finals.

The first-place school received a $500 applied mathematics scholarship opportunity for someone at their school to attend Stout. Also, the first- and second-place teams each received plaques for their schools.

Maki pointed out that smaller schools can and do participate in the conference.

"We're not elitist, but the conference is recognized as an area in which the competition is keen and the math problems are demanding," Maki stated.

Maki believes that the conference is career-oriented. He feels it's a good way to make prospective college students aware and to attract them into the applied math and computer science programs at UW-Stout.

IGC sponsors Wheel of Fortune night to kick off Greek Week festivities

by Karen Smith

Wheel of Fortune night at the Marion bar was the kickoff for Greek Week, which is sponsored by Inter Greek Council (IGC). Students were able to win prizes which were donated by various merchants in the area.

"The purpose of Greek Week is to promote a better understanding of Greek life," said Michael Browne, Chairman of IGC.

"It provides an opportunity for any of the independent students at UW-Stout to see that we do more than just sit around and get drunk all the time," Browne said.

"Also," Browne continued, "this is our way of showing the community that Greek life is not what the movie 'Animal House' portrays to you."

Carolyn Grzesiak, a student at Stout who participated in the Wheel of Fortune night, saw it as very successful.

"A lot of people showed up for the event, and everyone seemed to have a good time," Grzesiak said. "People get real enthusiastic when prizes are involved."

Brown said that another purpose of the evening's event was for the IGC to make money so they could donate it to a worthy cause.

Other activities in Greek Week included softball, bowling, volleyball, relay tricycle races, tug-of-war, dizzy lizzy beer contest, keg toss and a party at one of the Greek houses.

A.I. director Healey pleads for human rights

by Mary Raymond

The UW-Stout community was urged to take an active role in today's human rights movement.

The plea came from John G. Healey, executive director of Amnesty International (AI), in a presentation entitled "Human Rights in the 80's."

Healey's intensity and sincerity were felt when he expressed his belief that human rights issues "demand your attention, if not your compassion."

"Human rights abuses are common in every government of the world," Healey added, "and the horrors they bring on people are so harsh and wide that they affect all the world."

> "The power of Amnesty International is in its consciousness
> —John G. Healey"

"Two friends were toasting a drink to their friendship in a Portuguese restaurant when a couple of secret agents from that country noticed them and arrested them immediately," Healey said. "Their imprisonment," he added, "raised concerns and inspired people to write letters urging their release."

It is these initial actions and a number of other related incidents which gave birth to the worldwide human rights movement known today as Amnesty International.

Founded in 1961, AI works specifically for the release of prisoners of conscience: men, women, and children imprisoned for their beliefs, color, sex, ethnic origin, language or religion, provided they have neither used nor advocated violence.

AI also works to provide fair and prompt trials for all political prisoners and to end torture and executions in all cases.

Over 500,000 members and supporters in over 150 countries participate in various activities helping individuals whose rights have been violated.

Techniques include long-term adoption of prisoners of conscience, publicizing patterns of human rights abuses, meetings with government representatives and sending urgent telegrams indicating international concern in cases where torture or death are feared.

"The power of Amnesty International is in its consciousness," explained Healey. "We believe nobody should be tortured or go to prison because of their opinion."

"In the last 25 years, we have freed 22,000 with letters and telegrams," Healey said.

Healey also stressed the fact that prisoners of conscience exist in the United States and not just in far-removed Third World countries. Healey went on to say that the United States needs to decide to "either have human rights or don't."

In his closing remarks, Mr. Healey urged everyone to "at least stop and think and move away from that need to say kill because one day it could be you...your brother...your sister..."

A reception followed Healey's address, which was funded through a Cooperative Programming agreement between the Stout Amnesty International group and the University Speaker Series Commission.

an awareness to students, staff and other individuals as to their own transitions."

"As far as changes go," Pichette said, "we can either sit back and watch or be creative and help implement the new ideas and be progressive."

The Stout Rehabilitation Institute is one of the leaders in the field of Vocational Rehabilitation, not only because of the qualified instructors here, but because students who leave have a well-rounded knowledge, are hard working and get the job done, according to Pichette.

The week will be wrapped up with a banquet on Thursday night. The club hopes that the week's activities will help students get ideas of what trends and issues they will be facing as they enter the field of rehabilitation.

Pichette added that the club will hold a banquet in the spring. The featured speaker will be Altamont Dickerson, the director of rehabilitation services for the state of Virginia. His presentation will cover current issues in rehabilitation, primarily the transition movement.

Domestic minorities hope to become a separate entity

by Julie K. Ragatz

A motion was made that would create a new voice in the student government for minorities from other countries as well as the United States.

Current Minority Affairs representative, Adesola Adisa, expressed concern that the "international" students couldn't do the kind of job for the "domestic minorities" that should be done.

Adisa said that the "domestic minorities" should be represented better than what I can do for them."

An international student is considered to be a student who is from another country and not a naturalized United States citizen.

A domestic minority student is one who is a naturalized U.S. citizen, but is a member of a minority.

The motion brought forward was a constitutional change to remove the word "international" from the article as it now reads, and create a place for domestic minorities as well.

The point was brought out in discussion that domestic minority students and international students are faced with different problems.

The domestic students live here and care about the policies which affect them. The international students are only affected by those policies while they are here, not after they leave and return to their own countries.

Currently, the international students are not being represented at the United Council, and Adisa would like to see that changed as well as having domestic minorities represent themselves on the SSA.

Adisa said, "I don't want international students persuaded by any member of SSA to take over the Minority Affairs Senator because they are not concerned about the issues affecting domestic students. Rumors are going around that members of the SSA are trying to persuade them to take the job."

Lack of interest was brought up as a problem, and the possibility of paying them was discussed. Dan O'Neill, senator, said, "If they're not interested as it is, then I don't see the sense in it."

Lee Smalley, a professor of industrial and marketing education at UW-Stout, has been named the "Outstanding Technology Teacher Educator of the Year" by the Council of Technology Teacher Education.

The council is made up of representatives from two hundred twenty-five universities that prepare teachers of technology and industrial education.

Smalley is the fourth staff member at Stout to receive the honor. Past recipients include Chancellor Robert S. Swanson; James Benson, dean of the School of Industry and Technology and former Chancellor William J. Micheels.

Smalley received the award in Tulsa, Okla. at the annual conference of the International Technology Education Association, with which the council is affiliated.

Also at the meeting, Bensen assumed the presidency of ITEA for 1987-88.

Tax Law Changes

Students who have been exempt for withholding of income taxes in the past should be aware of a change in the tax laws.

The new law states that students cannot claim exemption from withholding if they can be claimed as a dependent on their parents' returns and if the total of their wages and unearned income, such as interest on savings accounts, is over $500.

A student claiming exempt status when not entitled to do so is subject to a $500 fine in addition to the estimated tax penalty.

The IRS advises students to carefully review their situation before completing a W-4 or W-4A.

Questions concerning this law can be answered by calling the IRS toll free numbers 271-3780 from Milwaukee or 1-800-424-1040 from elsewhere in Wisconsin.

Financial Aid

Educational Guidance and Financing, a Green Bay-based company founded in 1986, can help you finance your college education.

By utilizing computer networking and professional consulting, Educational Guidance and Financing can help you tap into unused money to apply toward your education.

Sources for the aid offered by the company include churches, corporations, philanthropic organizations and professional associations.

A majority of this aid is based on interests, qualifications and career goals rather than the needs assessment completed by other financial aid firms.

The company guarantees that they can find at least five possible sources of aid for each applicant, or they will refund your $39 processing fee.

The company also has a computerized assistance program to help students find a suitable college based on location, size, tuition and field of study. They can give professional, personal and financial guidance concerning a college education.

Task Force Named

UW-System President Kenneth A. Shaw has named a task force to keep the university system attuned to new and emerging technologies in telecommunications.

Ronald C. Bornstein, UW-System vice president for university relations and a veteran of radio and television management, will chair the thirteen-member task force. Luke F. Lamb, director of telecommunications, UW-Extension, is vice chair.

In appointing the task force, Shaw initiated action on a pledge made last month to improve interconnection of system universities, centers and county extension offices.

Vice Chancellor Wesley Face was also appointed to the task force.

Record Sales

The Burger King fast food lab, located on the first floor of the Home Economics building, is experiencing a sharp increase in business this semester.

Record sales have been established in the past several weeks due in part to the number of customers served each day.

Awareness of the restaurant's existence has been aided by the use of a coupon campaign, which will be continued until the end of the semester.

A restructuring of the class has been done to maximize operating efficiency and sales, resulting in increased effectiveness of the operation.

According to a survey distributed by the classes, the restructuring has also increased customer satisfaction.

Editorial

Let's review the facts

The Stoutonia congratulates James Falkofske, Angela Bias, Dan Meyer and Todd Nelson on their election as SSA president, vice president of legislative affairs, vice president of academic affairs and vice president of financial affairs respectively.

The Stoutonia staff has elected its editor-in-chief for next year, Lisa Young and the new editorial board will be decided within the week.

The SSA has the recognized responsibility to represent the Stout student body to the best of its ability. The Stoutonia has a recognized commitment to report the news in the UW-Stout community clearly, completely and accurately.

As the change takes place in the leadership of these two student organizations, The Stoutonia and the SSA ought to come together to discuss goals, objectives and priorities for next year.

Together, we will tackle the question of how to deal with rising tuition, declining enrollment and overcrowded classrooms to name a few issues. Many challenges lie ahead as we look forward to a new year at UW-Stout. The Stoutonia hopes that, working alongside the SSA, the next year will be a remarkably constructive one at UW-Stout.

Secret ballot a must

It is about time the secret ballot became a reality in SSA elections. Why must a voter in the SSA election have to enter his/her name, birth date and social security on the write-in ballot or directly onto the election computer to vote?

Voters in the SSA election must rely on the statement that their votes remain secret although SSA volunteers inputting votes write-in votes on the computer must inadvertantly link up each vote to the voter's name. And, who is to say that no record is kept on the computer concerning who voted for whom?

The students deserve secret ballots conducted by using an accurate computer printout of eligible voters in each SSA election. Volunteers could check off each voter as he/she matches up with the computer printout. Voters in SSA elections could then rest assured that their votes are made in anonymity.

The needed changes are easily within reach. Then voters would have no basis to question the secrecy of their ballots. Our hope is that the SSA makes the needed changes soon enough to avoid the same questions after next year's elections.

Fine Line

See ya'

Jef Maynard

The end is near; the future uncertain. Matriculation can lead to graduation, or is it: matriculation can lead to blindness? After what seems like eons in school, a college graduate I will be. Hi ho, hi ho, it's off to work I go.

Graduation can be a time of morbid and mawkish warmed-over tales of gags and glories. Reflecting on my sentence at Stout makes me think there is plenty of dust on the mirror; the reflection is smoky, like: on top of ol'...(the difference between myself and Rich Brueckner is that Rich would have followed "ol'..." with "what's-her-name.")

One of my favorite gags while here was to walk out through the library book detector with a nickel-plated tin whistle which I knew would inevitably set off that obnoxious alarm. Some unsuspecting library worker would have to fill out another crime-alert form and mark it "Accidental." I'd get off Scot-free with an arm-load of books. (Just kidding, Mr. Jax.)

Another funny thing about the library is the taped closing announcements: "The Library Learning Center will close in 30 minutes," and so so. The voice is the same guy that does those garbled Greyhound Bus Company arrival and departure announcements.

Speaking of strange taped messages, how about the recorded bell that rings every 15 minutes from Bowman Tower? True peals of a bell ring in your lungs and bones and heart. They ring to every bell that has ever rung. Bowman's over-amplified, ersatz Big Ben peaks at 189 percent distortion like a "bing-bong...Avon" bad dream. Screw the new fieldhouse...buy a bell.

The new Memorial Student Union and Really Big Boathouse is the only building to be constructed while I attended Stout, unless my memory is going the way of my final semester's GPA, (not failing but certainly selective.)

There are some nice aspects to the building. (The roof is not one of them.) The Great Hall is a pretty good hall, but not a long hall. I was in the first band to play on the Great Hall stage, (the amorphous, but always lovable Curbfeelers.) Some other, and probably better bands have played there since.

The Stoutonia office is located in the Union. Our office is a tribute to human compressibility. After two full years, we're still waiting for our shelves. No hurry...we like that heaped-up look.

The Pawn is located in the Union across from the bowling alley. There is nothing like a good 7-10 split to murder a folksinger. The Pawn Commission members deserve medals and monuments to their faith that someday The Great God of Good Audio will come and seal their tomb.

Subject: What changes do you anticipate as Editor-in-Chief next year

by Tim Hopkins

On her election as editor-in-chief at The Stoutonia for the 1987-88 academic year, Lisa Young looked forward to the expected improvements in the switch to desktop publishing next fall while stressing the need for effective team work and improved communications at the paper.

Young, a junior from West Allis, Wis., is an industrial technology major with an emphasis in graphic arts management and a minor in technical writing. She started as a copy editor last fall and became chief copy editor at the beginning of this semester. The editorial board staff will be hired by Young during the next week and the change over to the staff for next year will be completed by the end of April.

STOUTONIA: WHAT SIGNIFIGANT CHANGES DO YOU WANT TO MAKE AT THE STOUTONIA?

YOUNG: I think we need to introduce a feature section, it has been brought up at the editorial board meetings. We could run a feature section maybe every other week, something like the feature sections you see in the Sunday newspapers.

One of my hopes is for reporters, editorial staff, photographers, business and advertising people to earn credits for their time and effort put into the paper. These people dedicate a lot of their time to the paper and this time is not compensated for with money.

Lisa Young

We could attract more qualified applicants if they could earn credits for their work. There are so many qualified graphic arts students out there for instance.

STOUTONIA: WHAT CONCERNS YOU ABOUT THE PLANNED CHANGE OVER TO DESKTOP PUBLISHING NEXT FALL?

YOUNG: There will be a big change with the shift to desktop publishing and people always have an adverse reaction to change. People may not appreciate it now, but as time goes by, desktop publishing will make The Stoutonia run a lot more smoothly.

Letters

Justified punishment?

I am writing to you out of necessity of every student in the residence halls. This is a story of two people, both honor students involved in several activities each on campus. Their names are Tom Roth and Darien Schaefer and they have committed the ultimate crime of being loud and obnoxious. Their punishment...kicked out of CKTO Hall for the rest of the year.

Personally, I am always loud and obnoxious, along with 80 percent of the UW-Stout campus, so I feel that this is basically an epidemic of sorts. I wonder where we will get the quiet, perfect students whom the university is looking for!! A Bible college would be nice, but I doubt if they (the students) would have the academicstanding that Tomand Darien have. It is hard to understand their "crimes against society" even after looking at the allegations with which they were charged.

The first "incident" that I read about happened on 1/8/87...Sorry, I thought the dorms were closed until 1/11/87. The incident (report) contains a write-up by our R.A., Eric Rotvold, receiving a phone call and then hearing a loud stereo, both of which were from an unknown source. The incident (report) ends with "I don't know who made the phone call, or whose stereo was loud, but it is obvious to me that Tom and Darien were both involved."

Did Eric talk to Tom and Darien? No! Did Eric leave his room and confront whoever's stereo was loud? No! Did he do anything? Yes, he filed a report based on this evidence that "Tom and Darien were both involved." My question is, how can an R.A. be effective from behind a door? Before a write-up occurs, the R.A. should know exactly who he's writing up and not speculate about it.

Tom and Darien's files contain one incident after another about how bad they are. Given maybe they are noisy, and maybe they are disrupting the floor community, and maybe they are a discredit to the floor, maybe! This reasoning was posed to every person on the floor in the form of a petition which stated:

"I, as the signee of this petition give my total support to Tom Roth and Darien Schaefer of 294 Oetting Hall. As a resident of 2nd Oetting, I have no problems with Tom Roth and Darien Schaefer's community behavior or actions and would testify on their behalf if asked to. I believe these two gentlemen complement the 2nd Oetting community very well."

Every single person on 2nd Oetting signed the petition, except our R.A. It becomes difficult to respect a housing representative who lets personal feelings abuse his/her authority.

The authority of the R.A. amazes me. Tom and Darien spent a week talking to Joe Brown, Steve Remington and Dr. Joe Larkin, to no avail. It makes me wonder how an R.A. can override the testimony of an entire floor and (submit) reports proven to be unjustified.

Through his (R.A.'s) recommendations, a person who threatens his life can stay on the floor; a person who sets off the fire alarm by playing with a fire extinguisher gets second chances...while two people who unwind now and then get kicked off for the rest of the year. It is my belief that personal conflicts should be handled on a personal CAMPUS SLANT/ Why do you think your daughter or son goes to school at Stout?

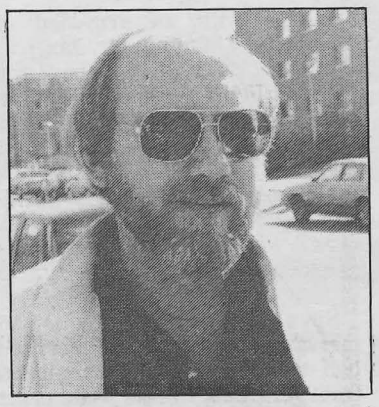
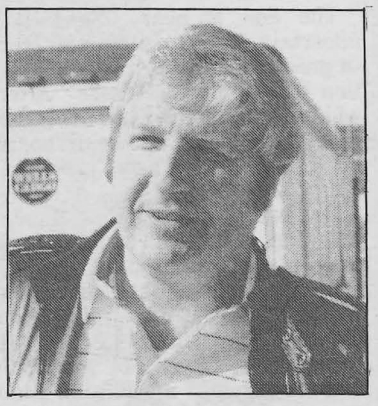
Meat cutter,

The Spot, Silver Dollar and The Tap. Well really we think he is getting a good education here. The facilities they have here are really outstanding for the subjects that he is covering.



Roy Boone,
Executive vice president,

We go back a long way here with the chancellor. He and my father were friends and we just had our daughter graduate last December. We just think that it is a good school. It is large enough to get a good education and small enough to get involved with the activities.



Bill Krueger,
Steam fitter,

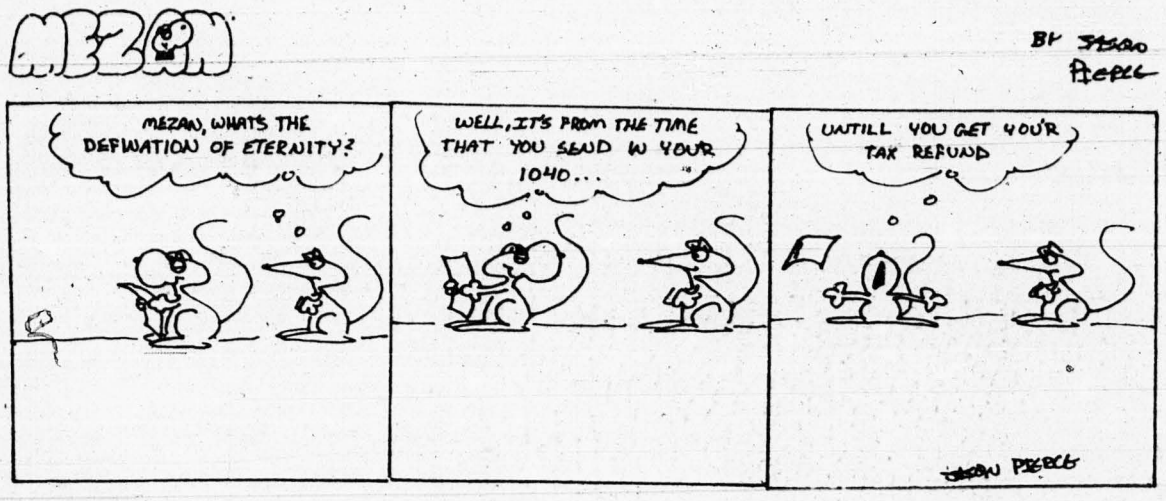
I never went to college so it is hard for me to compare UW-Stout to another school, but this school is impressive as far as that goes. I think the facilities that my son works in are super. The graphic arts building is really nice.

Norma Chounard,
Quality control technician,

The reason she is here is that since she was in high school she wanted to be in fashion merchandising. She graduated from Lothian, and tried to find a job, but soon learned that without a full degree she could not advance, and this is the best school around for her field.

Marlene Crowley,
Consultant and manager,

The real life experience and having them do field experience and that type of thing. The programs are focused on that approach here at UW-Stout. The reason she is here is that for her major, this is the top school in the state.



Seeds of Change

Faith

Gene Emahiser

If you had faith as the mustard seed, you could say to a mountain, "Be gone!" and it would be cast into the sea.

Jesus Christ

Faith. What is it? Where can we get it? What does it mean to have faith as a mustard seed?

Faith is something that everyone has. When we were created we had faith. As a little child, we all applied our faith more than we do now as adults. Children are able to walk in faith much more consistently than many of our great men of faith.

The apostle Paul wrote that faith was a gift of God. There is no other way to get faith other than from God. You can concentrate real hard and say your mantra 'till the cows come home and you still won't have faith, unless God gives it to you.

Paul's letter to the Romans says that every man has been given the measure of faith to believe that God exists. With that measure of faith, you can believe that God, the creator, exists or you can choose to apply your faith to some bogus theory like evolution. Since you can't prove either, it takes faith to believe in them.

In Hebrews 11, we read that faith is the evidence of what we cannot see and the substance of things we hope for. God wants us to know that when we ask for something and do not doubt it in our hearts, he will grant our plea.. He wants us to apply our faith to be able to receive what he has for us.

The Bible also says that faith comes by hearing the word of God. Faith rises up in the hearts of men when they hear God speaking to them. By the same token, your ability to move in faith is seriously altered if you are out of communion with God.

There is one misconception about faith that has spread like a poison through the church. There are some teachers that mislead the naive by telling them that if they had enough faith, they too would drive a new Cadillac and live in complete luxury. They use some twisted, half-baked, misinterpretation of scripture to back themselves up.

God is not your servant. You are supposed to be his. God is not some nebulous vending machine in the sky that is there to give in to your every whim. You can't just put in a prayer or two and expect God to spit out what ever you want. These are your desires, not his.

Faith does not move God! God has already moved. Faith puts you in the position to receive what God has already done for you. When you pray to God, examine the desires of your heart. Are you hoping to get all you can from God or do you hope to give all you can to God.

God wants you to be able to receive all that he has for you. To do that, you will have to stand on his word or his promise. That is why he gave you faith. Faith will allow you stand against whatever comes your way. Ephesians says that faith is our shield.

So, if you have a mountain in your way and it is hindering you from fulfilling God's plan for your life, tell it to be gone. Use the faith that God has already given you.

If you have your faith in something other than God, get your life in order by simply turning toward God. Ask him to restore that communion that you have walked away from. Ask him to restore you spiritually, physically, and mentally. Ask God to speak to you. When you hear him speak, faith will rise up within you to enable you to be and do all that God has for you.

Bottom Line

Campus Cuisine?

Rich Brueckner

"The pie in the sky turned out to be miles too high." --Roger Waters

Denise Cain wrote Bottom Line last week (she just won't admit it). The writing session was the most fun we've had together since we rolled around on the floor of the Marion last February.

It's only fair that I get to write a Campus Cuisine since the eating habits of Industrial Technology majors have long been an unwritten joke.

I knew I was in for a new world of eating habits my very first night at Stout. My roommate came home drunker than I was and proceeded to eat Hamburger Helper out of the box.

This probably won't disgust you as much as the fact that he's probably the guy who cooked the last hamburger you ate at Hardee's.

I firmly believe that technology will eventually produce a talking cookbook for drunks. I can just hear it, "Hey asshole, it smells like your pizza's burning!"

I live in a house where no one does dishes. There's no way to fix yourself a meal. This doesn't bother me because cooking sucks anyway.

Fortunately, I can afford to eat out a lot. I figure it takes way too much time to figure out what to eat without a menu.

Hotel and Restaurant majors offer us culinary illiterates a chance for survival. God bless you.

There is nothing worse than a refrigerator in a house of IT majors. It's strange, but we keep renaming various foods. I often hear the George Carlin question:

"Hey, what the frot is this stuff next to the fish cocks?"

"I don't know. It looks like...meat cake."

Then there are the endless arguments about who ate what...

"Look, I know I had two pot pies in there."

"No, no, one of those was his and he owed me one. If you're gonna be a prick about it, then quit drinking my diet coke, shit-lips."

Strange preferences in food have been known to drive roommates crazy. I would rather die than relive that semester with the guy who ate chicken every day.

I only know one recipe. It is the secret formula for Maggot Slush. What's in it? I'll have to take the Fifth Amendment on that one.

level instead of involving the Housing Department.

In conclusion, I believe that everyone on campus who lives in the residence halls, even incoming freshmen should be warned about the serious nature of being loud and obnoxious and simply having fun, because housing has the authority to move you at any time for any reason. Their control of your life is overwhelming. Looking back, I'm glad that neither my friends nor I were caught drinking under age in our rooms...as serious a crime as that is, we probably would have been stoned to death.

Sincerely yours,
Robert C. Kitten

Coverage appreciated

I appreciate the coverage The Stoutonia gave to the women's volleyball and basketball teams this year. The articles were interesting and surprisingly accurate! Katie Keran and Paul Emerson did a remarkable job and asked very thought-provoking questions during our interviews.

If there is anything in the future I can do to aid in the coverage of women's volleyball and basketball, please let me know.

Thanks again for your coverage of women's athletics!

Childish behavior

Last week, the Stoutonia's "Reports lead to ousting of two Oetting Hall Residents" was an obvious slant. I cannot believe you even printed it. The beginning sentence states the exact reason why the students were removed-"The issue of the University's responsibility to control the atmosphere in the residence halls..." Evidently the "men" upset the atmosphere of the hall and deserved the consequences they received. I wonder how they got Catherine Schneider to write it; I would have been embarrassed because the issue is so childish. Why should Brown, Remington and Rotvold comment when the issue is ridiculous? I live in CKTO and I am not ashamed to say that some people deserve to get kicked out -like Roth and Schaefer. The resident advisors have a difficult job maintaining floor atmosphere yet upholding the rules. I have heard of the childish things the floor has done and it is no surprise that two residents would carry it further and take their complaint to the paper. How can Schaefer and Roth gripe that they were not warned they were getting in trouble for their actions? How immature are they? Grow up!! This is college and you have to be responsible for your actions, if you are not - the residence halls are not for you. This applies to all the others like Roth and Schaeffer. Remember -other people live in the residence halls too. We do not always appreciate your actions.

Name withheld upon request

So-called men

I am writing this letter in response to the article about the "ousting of two Oetting Hall residents." I am also a resident of Oetting Hall and know of the situations that occur. The so-called "men" of second Oetting think that they can do no wrong. No matter what they do, if they get reprimanded by a resident advisor, it is always the RA's fault. If they cannot understand the RA's position, then maybe they should go back to high school so they can grow up. This does not go to only the members of second Oetting, but also extends to the Oetting Hall residents. This year there seems to be no limit to the amount of immaturity in Oetting Hall. Come on guys, grow up and learn some respect not only for the RAs but also for the other Oetting Hall residents.

M.M. Burchard

Grow up

I will start this letter by saying; in the four years I have attended Stout, I have never witnessed such childish arguments as the ones that have been going on between this paper (and I use the term loosely) and the SSA.

Whether or not you like the SSA does not matter. Telling people not to vote is not going to change anything. The SSA is still going to make decisions for all of us next year and long after we have all graduated! Grow up, Stoutonia!

In the past I have been accused of not taking a stand on the issues that are facing this institution and its programming. Well here goes...

The first issue I would like to address is Ms. Landis' (column) dealing with Cooperative Programming (CP). Just like the students who do not vote because they do not know the issues, Ms. Landis has trouble understanding CP because she does not use the resources available to her. Instead of working with groups like the SSA or the University Programming Board (UPB), she would rather be her own stubborn, self-centered, rebellious self.

Ms. Landis does not want to know how CP helps smaller groups get together with other groups and put on a quality program. She would rather believe that (CP) is some communist plot concocted by the SSA to take over the campus... But do not worry, Ms. Landis and her fine arts cronies will not let that happen to you, the student! Not as long as she can abuse freedom of the press.

She also writes that the UPB people "scare her." Well, having people like her and Jef Maynard at the helm of our school newspaper, scares the hell out of me! She comes off as a know-it-all, save the world, evangelist. Anything for the cause!

This is a woman who ran for SSA president last year and lost. Thank God! She does not even have enough responsibility to show up to UPB meetings on time. The strict attendance policies placed on "people like her," were to get permission to arrive late to the meetings. That is not much to ask since she probably has not been on time once.

I have heard of people holding grudges, but Ms. Landis takes the cake. All she has done so far is mud-sling the SSA because she lost an election last year. My advice to her is: keep your personal vendettas out of our student paper, it is really getting old!

I am sure I will be getting some sort of rebuttal from Ms. Landis either in this paper or in person. Do me a favor, Tracy, talk to me in person and save space.

Jay O'Neill
UPB vice-chairperson off-campus senator

A flagrant violation

Our nation's strength lies in the hand and power of people who freely and without opposition express their desires on a ballot. Freedom to vote must not only be recognized at the time the ballot is cast, but protection from future harassment by anyone must also be recognized.

Yet, in the SSA election, a student could not vote without identifying him/herself on the write in ballot, thus tying forever his name with his choice of candidates and leaving himself open from individuals or groups that did not like his vote.

What values is the University of Wisconsin-Stout teaching when it ignores the basic fundamentals of a free society?

I was told that on the computer the program did not tie a name to a ballot. But I do not know this. It would only take a few commands. There should be no doubt about the freedom and security of an election, especially at a university. I criticize any voter who did not stop and think about what system of government was being advocated by the SSA polling policies. I did not vote and will never vote at a place which ignores the heritage of our founding fathers.

A simple checking off of names on a student printout and the actual voting on a terminal would have been an easy remedy to this flagrant violation of voting rights.

Sincerely,
Andrew Jackson

Fine Line

I promised myself I wouldn't beef about the food at the Union. It did make being a vegetarian a lost cause, however. The salad bar was a running gag with me, (sorry about the pukey pun.)

This winter, I started putting the chopped ham on my salads. Every time I came to that part of the salad bar, I noticed the chunks seemed to be getting larger. From bite-size bits they gradually kept getting a little larger until finally they were jumbo ham-hocks. I fully expected to walk in some day and see a whole bloody hog jammed into the container.

The people who work in administration have always been good to me, as long as I had the right forms. They aren't slow, it is just the system. The motto at administration: "Delays created while you wait." (I should be careful, they still have my files.)

My favorite building is Applied Arts. Actually, it's not the building that I like but some of the people who work there. The building is just as nice as any hollow construction block cube without windows or wood could be.

Particular mention goes out to those saints of people who clean up the unbelievably messy studios. Art majors can be ferociously sloppy, I should know.

Some things about Stout still make me wonder. For instance, it is possible not to make the Chancellor's Award merely because you can't play badminton very well. It has happened. Taking "gym classes" pass/fail would make more sense, if you have to take them at all.

Another aspect of scheduling I find undesirable is that one minute I'm a painter, the next minute I'm a microbiologist, then an hour later, I'm something else. I'd like to see a upper-level program of two classes per day like summer school. It might give people the time to sink into that mentality it takes to work.

Like all institutions, most of the rules and regulations are for the convenience of the institution and not for the people involved. Try and make the best of it, but remember, changes are possible, (however unlikely it is that you will see them before you graduate.)

The note I would like to end my last column on is this: there is no institution in spite of what I just said. There are only people. The memories I have of Stout are not of anything called Stout but of the people I have known.

There aren't enough pages in this paper to list them all and tell them what they have meant to me. But to all of you, the band, the fans, the rockers, the writers, the readers, the art crazies and crazy art teachers, the party animals, the housemates, the long gone, and the too-soon-gone, and especially to the woman who refuses to marry me and have my twins, I say the last and finest line: See ya'.

THE STOUTONIA: COMMUNICATIONS PROBLEMS BETWEEN THE STOUTONIA AND CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS HAVE BEEN DISCUSSED THROUGHOUT THE YEAR. DO YOU HAVE A SOLUTION TO THESE PROBLEMS?

YOUNG: A lot of problems we are having stem from a lack of communication. I want to encourage people to come to The Stoutonia office, to tell us what they want, make suggestions and give us ideas. It is easy to criticize, but unless they offer a solution they have lost their credibility with me.

THE STOUTONIA: SINCE UW-STOUT LACKS A JOURNALISM MAJOR, WHAT REQUIREMENTS WILL YOU PLACE ON STOUTONIA APPLICANTS?

YOUNG: I encourage people to apply if they are willing to dedicate and commit themselves to the paper. You do not have to be professional because we are not.

I am hoping we can work as a team. If we can work as a team and work together to find a solution to our problems, people will be attracted to that.

Area artists selected for Wisconsin exhibit

by Gretchen Pemberton

Twenty-nine artists from Stout and the Menomonie area were among the 72 artists to have work selected for the Wisconsin ArtsWest Eight exhibit in Eau Claire.

The event is a jurored exhibit open to all artists living in the counties of Barron, Chippewa, Dunn, Eau Claire, Pepin, Pierce, Polk, Price, Rusk and St. Croix.

The juror, Robert Kanyusik, is an art professor at Nicolet College in Rhinelander, WI. Mr. Kanyusik holds a master of fine art's degree in printmaking. He is a sculptor and teaches painting, drawing and design.

Stout art major Stephane Molstre was honored with Best of Show for her acrylic, pastel, paper work entitled, "Frontal Division".

Molstre said, "My influences started with Dutch and Flemmish still-life. The stylistic influence came about through the West Coast Figurative artists and the use of the figure form." Vermeer, Thiebaud and Giacometti are the artists that influenced her work. Molstre is planning on taking graduate courses at the University of Minnesota after she graduates in December 1987, and eventually getting a master in fine arts degree.

Nancy Blum is an instructor in Advanced Design at Stout. Blum is a ceramist, which is a non-traditional sculptor.

Blum said, "The Eau Claire show is important because it is at a lower level. People will never understand Warhol if they don't understand the local artist."

Phil Delano is majoring in studio art with a concentration in art metals. Delano entered two broaches which were both selected for the event.

Delano commented on the instructors he has had at Stout. "Humphrey Gilbert technically taught me a lot about metal. Ron Verdon more in the idea and concept of metal, the abstract part of it." Delano is considering graduate school after Stout.

> "I was impressed with the high quality of work
> —Robert Kanyusil Juror"

Paul Delong, an instructor for printmaking at Stout feels it is, "Good experience for students to get involved with this kind of jurored exhibition."

Delong said, "It is important for artists in the region to support the event. The library sponsors the show giving the artists a chance to exhibit their work."

Joanne Lutzen entered a raku piece from the summer workshop, raku primitive firing, taught by John Perri.

Lutzen has graduated from Stout with a studio art major and a concentration in ceramics. Lutzen said, "It is a strong show to enter for a starting point. The show is open to art students and non-art students."

The juror said, "I was impressed with the amount of high quality work and the diversity of that work."

He also stated,"I then went through the show and removed one of the two pieces by the same artist, because of the space limitations of the show."

The student, faculty and Menomonie artists included in the show are as listed: Timothy Alberg, Michael Bauer, Gene Bloedorn, Rosemary Bloedorn, Jane Bloom, Nancy Blum, Jerry Bowker, Wes Bradford, Jean-Marie Dauplaise, Phil Delano, Paul Delong, Connie Feirn, Humphrey Gilbert, Diane Gill, Joanne Lutzen, Jef Maynard, Robert Meier, Rich Meredith, Christina Michels, Stephanie Molstre, Susan Morinville, Robert Neitzke, Rob Price, Mae Rens, Noreen Spraner, Marty Springer, Amy Thiel, Paige Thompson and Jeanne Wilkinson.

The Wisconsin ArtsWest Eight exhibit opened April 4th and is showing through the April 30th.The show is held and co-sponsored by the L.E Phillips Memorial Public Library and the Indianhead Federated Library system. The library is located on Farwell street in Eau Claire.

Stephanie Molstre works in her painting studio. Molstre was recently honored with the "Best of Show" award in the Wisconsin ArtsWest exhibition showing now at L.E. Phillips Memorial Library in Eau Claire. The show features work from 29 area artists. The show contains paintings, sculptures, metal work, drawings and ceramics. The show will run through April 30.

'Start Spreading the News': dance club presents a wide variety of dance

The University Dance Club presented a show titled "Start Spreading the News," parent's weekend. The show featured a wide range of dances, jazz, modern, tap and folk.

by Stephanie Weiss

The University Dance Club, with special guests from the International Relations Club, performed a Parent's Weekend show Saturday, April 4, for a full house in the Great Hall.

The show, titled "Start Spreading the News," included jazz, tap and modern dance by the University Dance Club along with traditional and folk dance by the International Relations Club.

All of the dances were choreographed and performed by club members. This year's performance featured considerably more solos and duets than the previous year, allowing greater individual interpretation of music.

The dance club showed much improvement over last year's outdoor Parent's Weekend performance. The dancers appeared much more at ease on stage, their movements smoother and better rehearsed.

> "...it was so intense it gave me goose bumps... —Maureen McCauley"

"The Undead," a modern dance choreographed and performed by Kathleen Beintker to Bauhaus' "Bela Lugosi's Dead," was the most notable performance of the afternoon.

Beintker began her dance lying on her back on the darkened stage floor as though dead. Dressed in black with a pallid face, she seemed to come back to life as the music progressed.

"I don't know a lot about dance," said Maureen McCauley, "but her dance was the only one that made me feel anything inside...it was so intense it gave me goose bumps."

The International Relations Club dancers performed a classical dance representative of the Island of Trinidad as well as a folk dance. Both dances helped show the role dance plays in different cultures.

The University Dance Club welcomes all forms of dance and encourages anyone interested in joining the club to contact Kaleene Kenning at x-1703; Kathy Noziska at 5-8629; Nicole Braun at x-3364; Michelle Barron at 5-4957 or any other University Dance Club member.

LIMITED WARRANTY

Limited Warranty played before a sizable crowd at the Great Hall, Thursday April 2. The band performed at Stout earlier in their Career so they were no strangers to Stout. The band came to fame by means of "Star Search" and with the help of several teenage fans. Limited Warranty performed a satisfying concert for those that gathered.

Tatters, out of Eau Claire opened for Limited Warranty, and their original music was a real crowd pleaser.

Models parade under spectacular "Carousel of Colors"

by Rhonda Olson

Carousel of Colors was a spectacular student presentation which took place on Parent's Weekend. The fashion show was organized by the Promotions class in the Fashion Merchandising major.

On Saturday, April 4, Carousel of Colors took place in the Great Hall of the Student Union. Six hundred seats were sold out prior to both the 10 a.m. and 11:30a.m. shows. Tickets were $2.00 per seat.

Approximately 100 children and adults paraded around a carousel stage which had a red and white tent top and four human clowns holding balloons within the carousel circle.

The Promotions class which created and hosted the show was headed by Mary Welch, the Promotions instructor and Executive Producer of the show. Welch said, "the class not only learned leadership skills, but also the skills of working with children."

The Show Directors were Mary Bollom and Christine Meyers. The Producer-Directors were Kristin Twombly and Susan Tomesek.

Tomesek said, "working with the kids was difficult, but they did a terrific job."

The two sections of the Promotions class provided a large staff. Positions included arrangements layout, merchandise selection, and publicity.

Kimberly Buchanen and Melissa Johnson were the two student commentators. The commentators began the show by speaking about childhood memories and the days when you too tumbled and played.

The Oshkosh B'Gosh segment featured many children, some holding pinwheels and others with balloons. The little girls wore jewel pastels and the little boys wore indigo denim.

The "Action Attraction" segment featured "nasty boys" in sweats from the University Bookstore, and physical women in bright, lustrous spandex jumpsuits from Body Language, Minneapolis. MN.

The "Sports Appeal" was a parade of trendy sportswear for people of all ages. Pastel peach and mint accented with silver were featured in the women's apparel.

"Out and About" was a segment which showed jackets from baseball to bombers, and stylish trench coats.

Another feature was "Carousel Classics" for career wear 1987. Fashions for those who know the difference between being dressed and well-dressed. Bright and feminine dressing included colors such as kelly green, navy blue, canary yellow, and red.

Fashion colors for men were khaki, salmon, and navy blue. Also the colors of smokey gray, washed-out blue, pastel yellow, and red.

"Tomorrow's Trends" gave credit to UW-Stout designers. Oshkosh B' Gosh agreed to take part in the design competition of sportswear/playwear. The designs were judged by two different sets of criteria and judges.

The judges of the preliminary competition were Dr. Donna Albrecht, Jean Sayer, and Dorothy Jensen. They rated each entry according to the following criteria: the overall design quality, the construction details compatible to design, the construction details compatible to fabric, and lastly, the quality of construction. A total of 40 points could have been earned in the initial assessment of the garments.

The judges of the final competition were provided by the Oshkosh B'Gosh Company. Michelle Fox, Judie Koeppler, Amy Polcyn, and Marty Smith rated the garments the criteria of aesthetics, creativity; innovativeness, and marketability. A possible 30 points could have been earned in this segment of the judging.

Both sets of points were added together to total 70 points. All the garments in the finals were rated in the high 60's.

Dr. Annette Fraser and Glenyce Peterson were the Design Competition Committee. Peterson complemented all the designers on the outstanding work they had done.

All of the winning designs were children's wear. The fourth place award went to Sandy Rosandick who received a $25 gift certificate from Northwest Fabrics.

The third place went to Amy Theil. The Apparel, Textile, and Design Association, (ATDA), awarded a $20 check to Theil. The third place winner also received a $25 gift certificate from Northwest Fabrics. The Second place was awarded to Sherri Nelson. Nelson received a $30 check from ATDA, and a $25 gift certificate from Northwest Fabrics.

The grand prize was awarded to Karen Teig for her design of a child's rainslicker and rain hat. Teig won a $50 dollar check from ATDA, and a $25 gift certificate from Northwest Fabrics.

Fraser commented that having people in the business judge the designs lent more credibility to the student work.

Sharon Casanova, Wakefield, MI, was a parent present at the fashion show. Casanova said that the show was very well done for a student production. "I like the idea of showing the student designers original designs, and seeing the winners."

Twist and Shout

You want a variety

Bill Krueger

PSYCHEDELIC FURS Midnight to Midnight

The Psychedelic Furs, I have heard the name before, but, I never heard any of their songs. I decided it's about time to expand my horizons just a little bit more. Besides, I was getting shit from people about how I said I was going to do a big variety.

The first thing that surprised me was that this band has been around for ten years. These guys have a very modern sound. It also sounds left over from the punk era.

All of the singing and lyrics are by Richard Butler. The singing is not what I would call great. He does have a good voice and what seems like a good voice range, but, he doesn't use it.

There are two guitarists in the band. One of them plays like U2 and the other one plays whatever he wants. The two guitarists don't really listen to what the other one is playing.

The band also has instruments they don't need. There's percussion and additional keyboards that are added and the only thing they do is produce unnecessary noise.

There isn't one great song. All of the songs sound kind of the same, however, there is variation within them.

The album isn't something that is totally wild like Black Flag or Dead Kennedys as I thought it would be. The guys in the band sound like they're good musicians. They just need to work on getting their instruments to sound good together.

This isn't an album I recommend that you rush out and buy. It's a sound like U2 and The Clash.

PETER WOLF

Come As You Are

Why did The J.Geils Band fire Peter Wolf? He was the band even though the band wasn't named after him. It turns out he beat them to the recording studio, twice.

The first single off the album is "Come as you are". This is the best song off the album. It has a good feel to it, but, you'll probably get sick of it after listening to it five times.

The only other song worth listening to is "Can't get started". This is a real upbeat song you can dance to.

The rest of the songs are either slow or plain. The lyrics sound like he is running out of talent.

There is one thing that confuses me. On the album sleeve it states "Each song is recorded in a specific combination of analog and digital to create a sonic digital weaving". I don't know what sonic digital weaving is. If anybody has any idea why somebody would do this please tell me. Also, any other comments would be appreciated by contacting me through the paper.

This week's stupid award goes to RCA Nashville for putting a limit of nine songs to an album of all its artists.

I would like to thank WVSS for letting me listen to their records. Otherwise, I would only be reviewing albums I like, since I have to buy them.

Fumagalli show attracts masses in Furlong Gallery

by J.M. Dauplaise

The Furlong Gallery was filled nearly to capacity on March 31 when Orazio Fumagalli's "Fifty Years in Art" show opened. The show will hang until April 17.

Although it was difficult to navigate through the gallery, impeded as I was by the mass of people who had gathered for the event, I was still able to enjoy the work.

On the south wall of the gallery a huge geometric, computer generated study hangs. Entitled "1001 Mondrian's", the work displays the computer output of an idea which Fumagalli had generated for a movie, the subject of which was a dance between a dot and a line.

Instead of hand rendering the sketches for the movie, Fumagalli become enamoured with the idea of computer generated image. He had a program developed to implement his concept. The computer's capacity to generate so many images, each of them different, is staggering.

Fumagalli pointed out that "even if only one percent of the 1001 images is significant and worthy, still, this represents more than several lifetimes of work." The computer's capacity, and man's ability to harness it, is overwhelmingly evident in the display of the computer generated images.

Also displayed were the figure fragments for which Fumagalli is well known. The plaster casts taken from the human figure capture a tranquility and serenity of the form. Some parts of the body are included, while others are excluded, decisions made with the intent of capturing precisely a certain spirit of peace.

Although the fragmentation of the figures recalls the sculpture of antiquity, drawn from the ruins, Fumagalli's work displays intentional, not accidental fragmentation. Fumagalli also, in casting directly from the body, strays from the idealized forms of antiquity. His works display a unique peace and beauty.

In addition to the individual figure fragments was a frieze of figures which became the evening's center of attention. For those familiar with Fumagalli's sculpture, the frieze gave a renewed sense of depth to his work. For the unindoctrinated, it was an amazing revelation.

The frieze is not a narrative there is no beginning or end. It is to be read as a whole
—Orazio Fumagalli

"The frieze," said Fumagalli, "is not narrative; there is no beginning or end. It is to be read as a whole."

The frieze conveys an introspective look at womanhood. The most prominent figure, that of a pregnant woman, conveys a serene portrait of impending motherhood. The surrounding figures celebrate the beauty of the female figure and add dimension to the many faces of woman.

A solitary male figure on the periphery of the main grouping, provides a contrast to the female figures which comprise the rest of the frieze. Fumagalli's work with a male figure is a first and was done, as was the frieze, especially for this exhibition.

"The figure," said Fumagalli, "is removed by his maleness."

The tension between the male and the female figures in the frieze is then intentional. Yet overall, the frieze provides a comforting celebration of human life and beauty.

Students view the fragmented figures that are somewhat reminiscent of ancient sculpture ruins, but these sculpture are intentionally fragmented. Orazio Fumagalli is the sculptor who creates these pieces from human body casting, his show "Fifty Years in Art" will be showing through April 17 at J. Furlong Gallery.

Theater arts graduate Scott Keeley to give "devilish" performance

by Jennifer Tooley

In the second of alternative productions presented this spring by the Performing Arts Commission, Scott Keeley will perform in a one-man show entitled "The Devil, You Say?" on April 14 in the Great Hall.

"The Devil, You Say?" is a powerful production in which Keeley becomes the Devil via elaborate make-up and costume. The Devil then converses with the audience, presenting a unique self-portrait as created by the works of classical authors such as Dante, Twain, Milton, and Dostoevsky. Keeley also works in the tales of folklore and the interpretations of the Bible into his creation of the Devil.

Keeley is a graduate of St. Cloud University, with a degree in Theater Arts. His first one-man drama began in 1973 and was based on the life of Edgar Allan Poe. By 1977 he had completed the production which was entitled "Goodnight, Mr. Poe".

This is a portrait of the Devil that requires some thought —Patrick Jay

After well-received workshop productions, he began to tour with the show to various Midwestern colleges and universities. Keeley added a new one-man act to his repertoire entitled, " The Shanachie: an Irish Storyteller" and performed both in sold-out performances at the Smithsonian in 1986.

Keeley's agent, Patrick Jay of Avatar Productions, described the show as a "look at the question of what we conceptualize as evil as seen through literature." He added that, "this is a portrait of the Devil that requires some thought."

"The Devil, You Say?" will begin at 8 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

Scott Keeley graduated from St. Cloud University with a degree in theatre arts, and has since been performing one-man drama's. April 14th in the Great Hall Keeley will appear as "the devil", in "The Devil, You Say?"

One Point Perspective

Of Men & Machines

J. Dauplaise

As an arts columnist, I have on occasion been accused of straying from my subject, sometimes wildly. Well, I have good news for any person bothered by my occasional straying from the subject of the arts. I, or rather my column, will be moving to the front of the paper, in the Opinions section.

For the time being however, I will diligently stick to digressions pertaining to the arts. This week's feature; the art of driving.

Out of necessity, the art of driving requires two givens, those being machines and motorists. Most of the problems I have incurred are due to the latter, myself included.

Because I know little about the mechanical aspects of motoring except the meager shards of information that I've gleaned from significant male figures in my life, I will refrain from exploring the topic of vehicle maintenance.

I know slightly more about the outside of vehicles than I do their insides. My young but wise sibling once carefully explained to me the vast and important difference between Fire Engine and Candy Apply Red. My life has never been the same.

I also take great pride in my ability to categorize cars by their make, and sometimes their manufacturer. Pacers are easy. They're one of the ugliest cars ever to be marketed in my lifetime. Gremlins and Dusters are also on my official "Out" list.

I can spot a Buick, any Buick, a mile away. I was raised in a Buick family. I learned to drive in a Buick. I hope to soon be driving (present tense) in a Buick once again, as soon as my benevolent father returns my car and keys to me.

I will not enumerate on the cars which are highly impressive in nature. Their drivers are already well aware that they are driving status vehicles. Personally, persons driving cars which cost more than five years tuition, rent, food and entertainment, make me mildly suspicious.

Persons driving cars valued higher than the cost of building the new Union make me jealous. It is fun to park a beater next to these expensive imports, leaving just a centimeter or so of space between the two cars. Drivers of such cars live in constant fear of their cars being doored, scratched or dented.

If you really despise a car lover there are multiples of terrible things one can do to inflict injury upon their prize possessions. Because I do not wish to encourage vandalism, I will not elaborate on such misdeeds. If you're dying to know, you can send one dollar and a self addressed stamped envelope and I will furnish the details.

In the interest of saving space, I will move on to the subject of drivers and driving. I first learned to drive on the old dirt roads near our cabin. I was thirteen. Dad wasn't very happy with my progress and eventually abandoned me as hopeless.

I then entered into the official driver's education program in Duluth, Minnesota. Imagine navigating through San Francisco in a blizzard and you'll come close to capturing my driver's ed. experience.

My teacher always wore loud plaid pants. It is my contention that my peripheral vision, in being so preoccupied with the blaring Tartan weave, distracted me excessively causing me to turn the wrong way on a one way street. It's a good thing the car had two sets of brakes.

Last summer I repeated my earlier exercise in stupidity, this time encountering a City of LaCrosse squad car in my directional experiments. Thankfully, I was not incarcerated or fined. I was mildly admonished. I think he felt sorry for me.

I am not, however, a really awful driver. Menomonie is a good place for me though. My infractions are mild compared to some of the vehicle operators here.

A major Menomonie trend I've noticed is not signalling one's intentions. On countless occasions I have been slowly racing to school (terminally late as usual), only to have the driver ahead of me slam on the brakes by Don's parking lot and whip in to do some shopping.

Another Menomonie trend involves male high school students piling into the biggest car they can find, then driving up and down the street shouting original and innovative lines, such as "Nice tits", at passing females.

Last weekend was enjoyable. I find it highly amusing to see the same car with Illinois plates circle the block seven times in search of their kid's house. Maybe I'm easily amused.

A prime spot to observe drivers and driving behavior is on the highway. There is a constant struggle between people like me, who want to get where they're going ASAP, and those who, for whatever reason, really seem to enjoy holding up traffic for miles by driving 17 miles per hour under the speed limit.

Other fun encounters on the highway are with drivers that can't stand to be passed. They enjoy speeding up to warp speed when anyone attempting to get around them enters the passing lane. If one succeeds in passing them, within ten minutes they'll race around the former 'passer' doing 75, then, once they've regained their position, slow back down to 55. Urge to kill.

Then there's the 'curious driver', usually with passengers, all of the same sex. The main mission of the passenger(s) is to scope out a car with an equal number of passengers of the opposite sex. Once a target is spotted, the driver is alerted and then must proceed to pass the target vehicle immediately.

If the occupants of the target vehicle are not acceptable, the 'curious' car's passengers are obliged to scream obscenities (weather permitting), or make obscene gestures, which may include mooning.

Likewise, the target car, upon spotting the 'curious' car may retaliate with obscene gestures of their own if the driver and passengers of the approaching vehicle are not sufficiently attractive.

I am often able to avoid this problem because, I've been told, my head is not visible above the edge of the seat, thus leading driver's following me to believe there is no one in my car at all. Maybe that's why everyone avoids me on the road.

Banner week for Blue Devil baseball team

by Chris Riba

It was a banner week for the Stout Blue Devils' baseball squad winning all six of their contests. The Devils have now won seven in a row and are 2-0 in the conference.

The 6 game weekend started on Friday in Winona, Minn. with a double header with St. Mary's. The Devils took the first game 6-5 and completed the sweep with a 8-2 victory in game two.

In game one freshman Chris Larson lead the way offensively going 3 for 4 with a solo homer. Rob Effinger, senior designated hitter, also knocked in 3 with another round tripper. Lionel Gaston picked up the victory, pitching 4 2/3 innings while only allowing 2 earned runs on 6 hits. Joe Schopp went 2 1/3 innings in picking up the save.

Pitching has been the strength of the club this year. "We're getting good pitching this season. I don't think our pitchers are going to lose by giving up hits. If they pitch strikes and don't make mistakes we will win," said Coach Terry Petrie.

In game 2 it was Effinger and Larson again providing the punch. This time Jay Thompson joined in on the long ball hitting aiding in the Devil's 8-2 win. John Schmitt started and gave 5 strong innings of shut out pitching on his way to the victory. Trent Caswell and John Rademaker each pitched an inning of relief.

After some early arm problems Caswell has started to come around. "Trent did a nice job," praised coach Petrie.

On Saturday the Devils moved into first place by sweeping the Eau Claire Bluegolds, 3-2 and 9-0. In game 1 Effinger continued his hot streak by hitting still another home run, his third in three games. Jeff Kloes went 2 for 3 with a double. Mike Charbonneau picked up the first conference victory by pitching 6 innings and only allowing 2 runs on 3 hits. Tim Fuerst and Brad Resch made relief appearance with Resch picking up the save.

"Brad Resch did an excellent job in relief," said coach Petrie of the junior right hander.

In game 2 junior righty Dave Crabtree pitched a 4 hit shutout, leading the way to the 9-0 win. Kloes and Karl Drezek each had two hits in three at bats. Freshman Dave Niehoff, Mike Dukat, and Kloes all had 2 RBI's.

"Defensively we are doing the things we need to do to win. We're making the routine plays," coach Petrie said of the young squad.

On sunday in St. Paul the Devils took it to Hamline beating them 15-3 in the first game. Greg Osowski and Karl Drezek each hit home runs. Kloes added 5 RBI's, Niehoff had 3, Osowski and Drezek each added 2. Jay Yoder a sophomore left hander went the distance allowing only 3 runs on 4 hits while striking out 5.

Game 2 was considerably closer with the Devils' pulling out a 6-5 win. Niehoff and Effinger each had 2 hits. Niehoff also added 2 RBI's. Trent Caswell was the starter and gave up 5 runs but only 1 was earned. Drezek came into the game in the fifth, closed the door and picked up the win.

The UW-Stout Men's and Women's Track teams traveled to UW-Stevens Point to compete in the Colman Invitational April 4. In an invitational no team scores are kept but athletes compete for conference placing and national qualifying times.

The Colman Invitational was an early season preview for Stout as they faced big guns in the conference including: Oshkosh, Stevens Point, Eau Claire and La Crosse.

Head Coach Steve Terry said that the meet had some good performances individually, especially for the first outdoor meet of the season.

Leading off for the Blue Devils was Senior Randy Miller who set a new school record in the hammer throw. Miller threw the hammer 135 feet, 8 inches breaking the old school record by 1 foot, 6 inches.

Coach Terry commented, "Randy has really worked hard both in the weight room and on the field for the past three years. His dedication has enabled him to place high in the conference."

When asked his goals for the rest of the season Miller stated, "I want to work hard throwing the hammer this Spring. I have set a goal to place second at the outdoor conference meet."

Dan Doucette had another fine day as he qualified for the outdoor national meet in the 440 intermediate hurdles with a time of 53.38 seconds. His finish earned a first place finish in the 440.

Doucette, who was one of the five athletes who competed in Florida said, "Florida had a lot to do with me qualifying for nationals. The competition I ran against in Florida pushed me to get a good time in the Colman Invitational."

Jamaican sprinter Kenute Connell had a personal best in the 100 meter dash with a time of 10.9 seconds. His finish in the 100 meter placed him third overall while he placed fourth in the 200 meter with a time of 22.4 seconds.

Two Stout 110 High Hurdlers, Zack Adams and Brian Kohls had another successful showing in this event as Adams finished second with a time of 15.10 seconds and Kohls finished third in 15.49 seconds. respectively.

A Blue Devil that continues to show dominance in the middle distances is Stout Freshman Jeff Fimreite. Fimreite finished third in the 400 meter run with a time of 50.75 seconds.

For the women, Sophomore Lisa Heimmerman broke the school she set last year in the half mile. At the Colman Invitational she ran the event in 2 minutes, 22.56 seconds, cutting her time by 4.04 seconds and earning her a third place finish.

Head Women's Coach John Miller said that Heimmerman ran

I used to walk at a very brisk pace but now, I walk slowly and observe my surrounding. No longer am I freezing.

I took a long walk headed nowhere. I stopped at a park and sat down on the top of a picnic table. I looked around and realized that my usual gray cloudy skies are now clear and blue and at last, I can feel the warmth of my sun.

My sun is so far above me yet I finally feel the presence of its generous beating rays. Below me, the snow has melted and the earth turns to a mossy green. To my right, the children play and I realize spring is here to stay.

I left my gaze upon the children as I slipped into my deep thoughts...Someday one of those little boys playing ball could be the next Babe Ruth and I, a witness to his early beginnings.

I remember a childhood friend who grew up to be a dancer in a Paris ballet, little did she know that was what she would someday be.

When I was young I always wondered what I would grow up to do. I never would have guessed that one day I would be sitting on a picnic table in Menomonie, reminiscing on that childhood thought.

I focused in my stare and realized there was but only an empty field. The children must have gone home for dinner; I decided I would slowly walk home too.

Later that evening I began my spring cleaning. I came across a box full of photographs. Through the eye of the camera lens a moment in time is captured to someday be shared; or never forgotten.

I examined the faces of the people I once knew and the places that I was once at. I suddenly could remember the day as if it were yesterday.

Isn't time wierd? It can drag out to seem like a moment will never really be, yet it can also fly by so quickly.

The next day I walked to class wondering what yesterday meant. I thought of the young children sitting in their classrooms. Somewhere, unknowingly, one of them to be a future baseball star.

I suddenly turned to the soon-to-be college graduate and asked, "Do you really know where you are going? Or like a child is your destination unknown?"

Basketball team to miss six seniors; year was: "A tale of two seasons"

by Paul Emerson

When one will look back on this year's version of the UW-Stout Men's Basketball team, they could very easily describe it as "A Tale of Two Seasons."

The Blue Devils stormed out of the gate by opening the season with a school-record 12 straight victories, before suffering their first defeat to UW-River Falls.

But the second half of the season saw injuries plague the team, as they struggled through the meat of the rigorous WSUC schedule. In addition, the scrappy defense that worked so well in the first half of the season faltered.

"We played very well on defense the first twelve games holding our opposition under 40 percent (shooting)," stated men's head basketball coach Dwain Mintz.

"But in the second half injuries hurt us the most, even up to the last game," added Mintz. The Blue Devils "second season" saw the team post six wins against seven losses, including suffering losses in the last five of six games.

"Rebounding was our strength all season," stated Mintz. "Platteville won the conference (Stout took second) in rebounding, but both times we played them, we out rebounded them," boasted Mintz.

"Our strong defense and winning the first 12 games was probably the high point of the season," said Mintz. "Being ranked in the (NAIA Div.II) top twenty was also a high point," added Mintz. The Blue Devils were at one point ranked as high as 11th in the top twenty poll.

"The loss at Stevens Point was the low point of the season, they outplayed us much of the game, yet we only lost by three points," said a subdued Mintz.

"For the kids, I'd say the loss the following night to Oshkosh had to be their low point, (a 111-110 overtime loss)," said Mintz.

"The season as a whole was much better than we expected, it's a tribute to the players that we ended up third, (in the WSUC)," said Mintz.

Six seniors will graduate later this spring from this year's Blue Devil squad. They are Brian Ellingson, Tom Gomolak, John Patterson, Ron Hunter, Rick Wynveen, and Dan Shervey.

"Their teamwork and dedication was the key to our record. Without that we would've been far below where we ended up," stated Mintz.

Ellingson, from Milwaukee, Wis., was the team's quarterback on offense from his point guard position. He set two school records for assists, (14 in single game, and career assists.) While averaging 11.0 points and 5.0 rebounds per game.

"Brian was the glue that held us together," quipped Mintz on Ellingson. Who also noted that four of the six seniors this year were redshirted as freshmen, (all but Hunter and Shervey.)

In addition Ellingson was named to the All-WSUC first team, and also named to the NAIA District-14 team. Joining Ellingson on the all-conference team was Tom Gomolak, who earned honorable mention honors.

"Stout's a really nice place, the people are great up here," said Gomolak, a 6'8" forward from Westland, Mich. Gomolak led the team in scoring and rebounding, 14.0 and 7.8 per game averages respectively.

"Without his tremendous improvement, we wouldn't have had the season we did," said Mintz.

Ron Hunter, a 6'0" guard from Dayton, Ohio, averaged 12.3 points per game and also led the team in freethrow accuracy with a 71.9 percent average.

Mintz called Hunter a "great press breaker, who could handle the ball very well."

A Brooklyn, NY, native, John Patterson averaged 8.6 points and 5.5 rebounds per game from his starting forward position. "A great penetrator who had a strong winning determination," praised Mintz on Patterson.

Rick Wynveen, from Baldwin, Wis., played a strong role off the bench while averaging 4.4 points and 2.5 rebounds per game.

"A loyal Blue Devil who came through with some clutch fireman roles throughout the season," said Mintz of Wynveen.

The one senior who played just one year for Stout was Dan Shervey, a 5'10" guard from Chippewa Falls, Wis. Shervey played the role of the tenth man on the squad, and was used sparingly throughout the season.

"He had the guts to stick it out, and give us a lot of good practice competition, said Mintz.

"It was a lot of fun in the beginning," said Shervey. "When you win everybody likes you, but when you lose things are a little different, and people start pointing fingers," added Shervey.

In describing the atmosphere here at Stout, Shervey spoke for the rest of the seniors stating that, "The people here are great, it's a little more easy going than other schools, Stout is a super school."

"It's going to be difficult to replace these six guys," said Mintz. "It's been an honor to have these guys play for me, and for the university."

UW-Stout rugby club improves record, 2-0

by Slash La Freniere

The UW-Stout rugby club improved its record to 2-0 last Saturday with a 17-9 victory over Carleton College. It was not a pretty win. Said player John Wangen, "We didn't play as a team, we played as individuals, and that caused our general play to become sloppy."

Both teams were to blame for the sloppy play, as many penalties were called on each team. Player Brian Bohne said, "We tend to play up to the level of our competition. Carleton wasn't very good."

> "It was a good hard hitting game and we played well
> —Todd Stinchfield"

The scoring for the Centaurs started off very fast. Jim Mcguine took the ball from a maul and rumbled in for a try in the opening minutes of the match. The conversion kick was missed and to the delight of the large parents weekend crowd, Stout had a 4-0 lead.

Following a successful penalty kick by Tim Anderson, Which gave the Centaurs a 7-0 lead, Mcguine was awarded a penalty try. Stout had penetrated deep into the Carleton zone with Mcguine running the ball from a scrum. Mcguine would have scored on the run, but the last man for Carleton made a dangerous and illegal tackle.

Said Mcguine, "It (the tackle) was a cheap shot. He threw his shoulder into my hip and he didn't wrap. Plus he put his fist into my future family area, but that wasn't what the penalty was for." When players make tackles in rugby, they must wrap their opponent with their arms. No spearing is allowed.

Anderson made the two point conversion kick, which brought the Centaurs scoring to 13. Carleton had scored on a penalty kick earlier to make the overall score 13-3.

Carleton had the Centaurs pinned down deep in the first half, but the Centaurs denied them the try zone. Numerous penalties were called on the Centaurs and Carleton finally made the penalty kick. Carleton also made good on another penalty kick late in the first half, bringing the score to 13-6 at the half.

The second half saw mostly lose play and many penalties on both teams. The penalties ranged from off-sides to dangerous play.

The dangerous play penalty was called on Centaur player and primary kicker Anderson, who was ejected from the match because of the penalty. Dangerous play is called when a player hits his opponent after he has gotten rid of the ball. Anderson hit a Carleton player after he had kicked the ball and was off balance, and was very susceptible to injury, causing the ejection.

Stout was not permitted to substitute for Anderson, and they had to play the majority of the second half short handed. Despite that fact, Mcguine scored another try, upping his personal point total to 12 and Stout's point total to 17.

Carleton added a three point penalty kick to round out the scoring. Carleton did not penetrate the Centaur try zone all day, the one positive point in the Centaurs play.

In the B side match, The Centaur " Killer B's" simply dominated Carleton, winning 20-0. This was the second shut-out for the Killer B's on the season. Centaur player Todd Stinchfield said, "It was a good hard hitting game and we played well."

Try's were scored by Brad Heidel, who had two, good for eight points. Shane Behlendorf, Brian Hess, and Wayne Perriwinkle added four points each. No conversion kicks were made after the try's.

Next weekend the Centaurs have a rare Sunday match against Bloomington rugby club at River Heights Elementary. Rugby club President Todd Johnson said, "We are holding our third annual _____ What the Ruck' rugby fest on Saturday. You can get tickets from any rugby player."

Coach Early says "communication key to success"

by Darron Vanman

In athletics if a team does well then attention is on the athletes, but on the other hand, if the team does poorly then the coach is usually to blame. In reality to the coach and athletes at least they know its a joint effort, win or lose.

To Mike Early, wrestling and an assistant football coach, in his first year at Stout believes communication is the main ingredient for success. Coach Early says, "I don't discuss on the field. If one of my athletes has a problem, my door is always open. A lot of problems will be solved if communication is open."

Coach Early relaxing in his office chair says that it is very important that a coach keep an athlete-coach relationship. "I'm their friend, not their buddy. Two separate entities," Early said with a question of you know what I mean?

Early says he knew he wanted to teach and coach since ninth grade. "I didn't want to be in any other occupation. But I did want to coach at the high school level for about ten years and then move to the college level. I was in the right place at the right time, and got a coaching job at Loras, a small, private college in Iowa," Early said.

Coach Early combines the authoritarian and participative types in his coaching. "I take input from the captains concerning discplinary or other problems, but I make the final decision on everything and stick by it," Early said with a slight smile.

Early related that his coaches throughout his career used mainly the authoritarian approach. As Early said, "You did what the coach said, no questions asked."

When it comes to the money factor of a job, Early said, "It's not a real motivating factor for me. I make a decent living. I'm motivated by winning. Always striving to be the best. Coaches as a whole are very egotistical (that means they have big heads)."

Early added, "But you are only as good as your last outing, and the W's certainly out weigh the L's."

On the downside of coaching, Early said, "I don't mind the long hours. I don't believe in punching a clock. I believe in getting the job done. I have a wife and two-year-old that I don't get to see as much as I would like to."

> "Whenever a coach can see his work pay off, that is the ultimate.
> —Mike Early"

When it comes to motivation philosophy, Coach Early says, "Motivation is making people aware that they want something and in wrestling, not a real visible sport and very demanding, this becomes very important. Wrestlers can't eat big meals after workouts like football players."

Early says motivation is also knowing what you want to accomplish, starting with setting goals. "A first goal for a wrestler may be to make the starting lineup (which Early says isn't that tough at Stout), and then on to something like winning the conference to winning the national meet at their weight class."

"People react differently. Some you have to raise your voice to, and others you just need stern leadership. Each kid is motivated differently. My job as coach is to find that way to motivate each athlete," said Early.

Coach Early says he tries to create a family type atmosphere for his wrestlers. He likes the individual coaching, the deep caring coaching he can give his wrestlers. Compared to when he is coaching football.

Early said, "In football there are 11 people who form a machine, and my job is to get the gears of the machine sychronized."

Early commented on his first year at Stout, "I knew I had to start someplace, (referring to the wrestlers record of 3-8), and also there were only part-time coaches here before. I knew we weren't going to have a successful year, but all the guys did a tremendous job, very good attitudes."

Early continued, "We need more recruiting for next year, but we achieved the respectability as we are now viewed as a bonified sport program. The athletes are treated as such, and I like the way Dr.

Men's tennis team 5-2 in Division I play

by John Pelishek

Responding to tough competition like Division I Austin Peay, the UW-Stout men's tennis team gave an impressive showing by going 5-2 in both the Augustana and Northern Illinois Invitationals last weekend.

Leading the way for Stout were players like Tony Pheifer at number 5 singles who went an impressive 7-0 and number 6 singles player Bill Johnson with a 6-1 match record.

Pheifer has won 12 matches in a row to raise his season record to an outstanding 23-7.

"Tony plays with tremendous heart and determination. He has improved so much its kind of scary," exclaimed Coach Smith. "I can't tell you how proud I am of his improvement and competitive courage on the court."

"Bill had a terrific weekend and should have gone 7-0," said Coach Smith of Johnson who's 18-11 for the season.

"Our number 5 and 6 men are really doing a fantastic job," quipped Smith.

Mike Friedman and Tony Snoeyenbos at number 2 and 4 singles respectively, both went 5-2.

"Tony beat a very good player from Austin Peay and is starting to play the way I hoped he would," said Smith of Snoeyenbos. "He played the best tennis of his career."

On Thursday the netters breezed by the University of Platteville 9-0 at the Dubuque racket club in Dubuque, Iowa to record a 1-0 conference record.

Characteristic of Stout's play against Platteville were that they won all sets within at least 9 games.

In the number 1 singles match, John Leehy surpassed Joe Kallay of Platteville 6-0, 6-1 as did number 2 singles player Tony Snoenyenbos over Monte Kahl 6-2, 6-0.

Number 3 singles player Mark Paine won over Pat Schneider 6-0, 6-2 as did Tony Pheifer over Ron Weber 6-1, 6-0 of Platteville. Mike Friedman handled Mike Schap 6-0, 6-2 and Bill Johnson won over Tony Gwuin 6-3, 6-0.

In doubles action against Platteville, number 1 doubles team Snoeyenbos and Friedman easily handled their opponents 6-2, 6-1 as did number 3 doubles team Todd Trabant and Tony Pheifer at 6-2, 6-0.

In the Augustana Invitational at Moline, Illinois, Coach Smith had his 1st team play against Augustana, Principia and Wheaton college and the 2nd team against St. Ambrose and Central Illinois.

Stout dominated Augustana with an 8-1 match victory. The only loss was by John Leehy in a close 3 set match 6-7, 6-0, 7-6.

"John lost some heartbreaking matches," quipped Coach Smith of Leehy. "He played the best tennis of his career but just couldn't pull out a victory in the close ones."

"We played well considering the long drive and it being the 2nd match," said Smith of the Augustana matches. "None of the matches were very close with the exception of the Leehy - Morkin match."

Principia University, winning in a close 5-4 match, was a tough loss for Stout mentioned Coach Smith. Winning their singles matches against Principia were Mike Friedman at 6-1, 6-1 and Tony Pheifer at 6-1, 6-3.

On Friday evening the netters defeated Wheaten college in 39 degree weather by a 6-3 score with 3 doubles matches finishing in the dark.

"We rebounded well from the Principia loss and played much better mentally," exclaimed Coach Smith.

Against Wheaton college, Tony Snoeyenbos breezed by Tom Lindquist 6-2, 6-2 as did Mike Friedman over his brother 6-0, 6-2. Pheifer won in a close 3 sets 2-6, 6-4, 6-2 as did Bill Johnson at 6-4, 6-4 over their opponents.

In the Northern Illinois Invitational held last Saturday and Sunday in Dekalb, Illinois, Stout took 2 of 3 matches against tough Division I schools.

Stout on Saturday surprised Austin Peay University with a close 5-4 match victory. "This probably is the best win ever. Austin Peay is a very good Division I school," said enlightened Coach Smith.

Against Austin Peay, Tony Snoeyenbos overtook number 2 singles Brad Moss 6-0, 7-6 as did Bill Johnson over Rick White 6-4, 6-3. Tony Pheifer won in a close 3 sets at 5-7, 6-3, 6-3.

In doubles, Snoeyenbos and Friedman won 7-5, 6-2 as did Johnson and Pheifer 6-3, 6-4 over their Austin Peay opponents.

The netters on a windy 40 degree Saturday took all 6 matches against the Univiversity of Illinois - Chicago. Snoeyenbos won easily 6-0, 6-2, as did Johnson 6-0, 6-1 and Friedman at 6-0, 6-0 against their Chicago opponents.

Despite playing hard, the netters lost to Division I Northern Illinois University 2-7 on Sunday after a long weekend.

Tony Pheifer won in a close 5-7, 6-3, 6-3 match as did Tony Snoeyenbos and Mike Friedman 7-5, 5-7, 7-6 over their opponents.

"It was a great match and we played them well," said Smith who also mentioned that Northern Illinois had beaten Wisconsin twice.

Stout ranks 2nd in the Midwest with a 21-10 record and hope to overtake Gustavas Adolfus Sunday who currently rank 1st in the Midwest. Stout needs to win if they are to receive a NCAA ranking and a bid to the NCAA tournament.

Number 6 singles player Bill Johnson said, "We need to win Sunday and to do that we must raise our level of play a notch and give them hell."

This weekend Stout will play host to Eau Claire at 3 pm on Friday and on Saturday against St. Thomas at 9 am and La Crosse at 1 pm. Sunday they will play a crucial match against Gustavus Adolphus at 1 pm.

"We are playing extremely well and I invite everyone to come see us play here this weekend," commented Coach Smith.

Coach's comments: "Steve is a tremendous leader. One of the hardest working individuals on the team. Combine that with his consistency and that has brought the success for him," said Coach Terry.

Coach Terry added, "Steve is the kind of guy you want to build your program on. He gives his all."

Athlete's history: Interesting, Steve Hoeschele started running track events because of the Presidential Fitness Program. The 50 and 600 yd dashes back in fifth grade propelled Hoeschele to where is today.

Hoeschele says his best friends are on the track team. "I spend so much time with them. I got to know them better as people, and I know pretty much how they think," Hoeschele said.

Hoeschele played football in high school until his senior year when he pinched a nerve in his back. since then he has tossed off his shoulder pads for a couple laps around the track. Hoeschele said, "I was recruited for football out of high school, but I did not want to get hurt again."

Hoeschele says he has really enjoyed his four years at Stout. "I enjoy the school because the people here are great. Visit another school and you'll see what I mean." commented Hoeschele.

Steve Hoeschele has set his sights for the top three at conference in either the 400 or 800 yard runs. He would also like to see the mile relay qualify for nationals.

Bowlus let's me build the program myself."

So what has been Coach Early's finest moment so far in his young coaching career? "When my 126 lb wrestler at Loras won the NAIA National meet. I could feel his exuberance. Whenever a coach can see his work pay off, that is the ultimate. I love to see young people succeed."

On the other end, in terms of win-loss record this season was Coach Early's worst. "I really enjoyed this season. I enjoyed working with these people. We couldn't of done better. We did as well as we could. I've had seasons where nothing felt right. When I couldn't communicate (remember communication is Early's number one thrust now), and when I made mistakes as a coach were the lesser points of my career," said Early.

Coach Early finds the college level in his liking because he can do more things with the kids since their maturity level is greater, but Early says, "Being evaluated on W's and L's is not always fair, but at the college level you have control of your destiny. You must go out and recruit the good athletes to have a successful program. Recruiting gets drawn out sometime, but (in the Early spirit) it's fun competing for athletes with other coaches."

So now you understand a little more about athletics, win or lose, the man or woman behind the team has a pretty heavy hand in the outcome. Take it from Coach Mike Early's mouth, "I love to win."

her best half mile since high school. He added, "She's worked very hard and does a good job."

Kristin Mauk continues to lead the women devils as she ran the 400 meter in a time of 1 minute, 1.07 seconds. Her run gave her a second place finish at the Colman Invitational.

Two woman shot putters, Sue Schaefgen and Renee Leffel also had a good day at Stevens Point. In the shot, Schaefgen hit 37 feet, 1 inch earning her a fourth place finish. Leffel followed close behind Schaefgen as she tossed 36 feet, 6.5 inches and took home fifth place honors.

Overall, Coach Miller is pleased with the performances of the women but added, "They have a long way to go. It is a small team with only 18 athletes competing but larger than past teams."

Jim Solie presented information about the NASA project he is working on with Mary Strause, Doug Cook, and Cheryl Hesselink.

The project, which involved designing software for a NASA radar system, was presented at last weeks' Math Conference.

Stout students designing radar system for NASA

by Julie K. Ragatz

As a part of the Math Bowl projects, a National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) Doppler radar display presentation was given last Thursday by students of the software engineering class.

Students in the class are currently working on a program for the radar system at the request of NASA, which will then be sent back for research purposes.

The program reads tapes from Doppler radar and displays the contents on a screen with as much detail as the user wants or needs. Colors can be changed and more detailed accounts of subregions can be produced.

Doppler radar is a system that could be used by NASA to predict weather. Since certain conditions are required to launch a space shuttle, the predictions must be very accurate.

One of the main reasons for developing the system is because too much precipitation can harm the space shuttle.

The Doppler radar can accurately predict weather 90 minutes in advance and within a 50 kilometer radius.

> "It's something that I'll probably use some day
> —Doug Cook"

One way this type of radar differs from others is that no precipitation is needed in the air to get the required data.

Bruce Johnston, course instructor, did some research for NASA last summer and thought the Doppler radar project would fit into the class.

Johnston then wrote up a proposal for the project and presented it to NASA, who paid for all the equipment that was needed for the development of the system.

NASA then gave the specifications for the project, and it was turned over to the students here.

The project started last semester and carried over into this semester. The students may put in as much as eight hours per week per person working on the system.

"It's a better learning experience than just going to class and taking notes. You get the experience of being involved in the project from the beginning to the end," said Mary Strause, one of the students who gave the presentation.

The students had an engineer from NASA come up before spring break to give them a design review and to see how the project was coming. He liked what they had done, and told them what would happen to the project when it returned to NASA.

"He was really positive and he left a lot of the decisions up to us," said Strause.

All of the students thought that the project was great recognition for the applied math program at UW-Stout.

"It will help the future students if it is well received," said Jim Solie, another student involved in the presentation.

The radar system is still in the experimental stages, and NASA does not yet know how successful the project will be.

Said Doug Cook, the third student in on the presentation, "It's a good opportunity for math majors to get a software engineering class like this because it provides techniques that you'll really use out in the world. It's something that I'll probably use someday."

The project is scheduled to be delivered back to NASA in May, and it will then be determined how the system can be used most effectively.

Sperry Corp. donates electron microscope to be used in microelectronics study

by Mary Raymond

A microscope capable of magnifying objects up to 75,000 times their actual size and valued at approximately $115,000 is being utilized by students in the applied technology program and other specialized majors at UW-Stout.

Although the microscope arrived last summer, it was not fully assembled and put to use until this semester.

The Coates and Welter Scanning Electron Microscope was donated to Stout by Sperry Corporation and is so powerful that it can make the inside of a wire 1/1000 the size of a human hair look like a road map.

According to Thomas Baldwin, chairman of the energy and transportation department at Stout, "one of Sperry's initial reasons for donating it was because of our development in the area of hybrid microelectronics."

> "We want to show people how industry uses this equipment.
> —Thomas Baldwin"

Baldwin said another reason why Sperry donated the microscope is to give Stout the capacity to work on interactive projects with Sperry. "We want to show people how industry uses this equipment," Baldwin added, "that's what industry was after, too."

The microscope remained wrapped in boxes and plastic until representatives from Sperry arrived to set it up and train people to use it. The training program given to Baldwin and an associate was videotaped due to the complexity and length of the operational procedure.

"It's quite a unique piece of equipment and not just anybody knows how to use it," Baldwin added.

Sperry used the microscope for failure analysis in hybrid microelectronics, and then replaced it with a new microscope. The donated microscope is less than 10 years old and is being used at Stout for failure analysis also.

Although the microscope's use is not limited to strictly hybrid microelectronics, its main functions consist of working with combinations of complete integrated circuits in making different complex circuit arrangements.

Baldwin said the microelectronics students will use the microscope to examine the failures of materials such as impurities in circuits in the construction of hybrids.

One of the microscope's special features is an x-ray analyzer which can penetrate material and enable the user to examine an object's

Arson fires disrupt travel

Coaches on 10 trains that serve Johannesburg's huge black township were set ablaze Monday evening, and fires were started on three more trains Tuesday. Striking black railroad workers of the government transport company in Johannesburg were blamed for the arson attacks, which reportedly disrupted travel for tens of thousands of Soweto residents.

Doctors at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh turned off the respirator of patient Ronnie DeSillers, a Miami boy who had undergone two liver transplants. Hart endorses tax increase

On his first day as a declared candidate for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination, former Senator Gary Hart advocated a $20 billion-$25 billion tax increase to pay for domestic programs and reduce the federal budget deficit. It's irresponsible to say that we can balance the budget without additional revenues, Hart said at a press conference in Denver. Hart's campaign will now swing toward Texas, Iowa, Pennsylvania, and California.

State

Bill to standardize fines

A $50 assessment would be added to the fines of domestic abuse offenders in Wisconsin under a bill introduced by Barbara Notestein, D-Milwaukee, and Senator William Te Winkle, D-Sheboygan. The money would be used to provide shelter for battered women and other domestic abuse victims, Notestein said.

Under existing law, a 10 percent domestic abuse surcharge is placed on fines of convicted abusers. The bill, if passed, would change the fee to a flat $50, and could raise as much as $200,000 a year, Te Winkle said.

Campus radio (WVSS) converting to cable

by Rose Shakal

WVSS, Stout's campus radio station, plans to convert to cable beginning next fall.

The station will simulcast on the FM band and on cable, and will be available in the residence halls as well as through cablevision. Commercials will be broadcast on the cable version of WVSS.

Right now WVSS is a public service radio station and one seventh of its programming must be dedicated to public service, according to Brad Knigge, co-manager of WVSS.

The station fulfills that requirement now by playing one hour of classical music every day, Knigge explained.

The Federal Communications Commission regulations allow public service radio stations such as WVSS to have sponsorships, but they're not allowed to actively promote a product or service, Knigge said.

"We can't tell the consumer to take a particular course of action," Knigge said.

Ace Matthews, general manager of WVSS, made the initial decision to go cable. Knigge and his co-manager Scott Smith backed up the decision.

The approximate cost of the conversion to cable will be $4000. Funding for the transition will be provided by the school of liberal studies, $1100; RHN, the residence hall cable network, $1000; the Stout Student Association, $800; and the speech department, $300.

The conversion to cable stereo will mean an extra source of income for WVSS through the commercials it will be running, Knigge said.

They will be doing tests and surveys this summer in an effort to determine the exact income the commercials will be bringing in, according to Knigge.

Knigge said merchants in town have already told him that they would rather advertise on WVSS as opposed to any other local station because they would like to reach the students.

The popularity of WVSS is steadily increasing. "WVSS was the fourth most listened to station last year," Knigge said.

This is an improvement over the sixth place position they occupied the previous year, and an overall rating of ninth the year before.

"Last year we ranked last with women, this year we're number seventh," Knigge added.

Possible reasons for the station's increased popularity are that the deejay's formats have been changed to include pop hits and classical music, Knigge remarked.

The station also plays more compact discs (CD's) now. Matthews, said that CD's are easier to cue up, and the listeners prefer the sound.

Using three pioneer CD players, each of which can hold six discs, we're going to be able to offer 24-hour a day service, Matthews added.

WVSS is in the process of getting the necessary equipment for the transition approved, Knigge stated.

Stout and Virginia State exchange students/faculty

by Nitin Nadkarni

The birth of a student-faculty exchange program between two universities was highlighted by a recent visit of students and faculty from Virginia State University.

Together with this southern Virginia institution, UW-Stout was chosen by the Holiday and Marriott Corporations to participate in the program.

According to Leland Nicholls, administrator in the department of habitational resources, these two schools were chosen because of their leadership position in hospitality management education.

> "This visit was a first of its kind in the area of hospitality education."
> —Bob Ritz

Jeffery Cava and David Murphy, directors of college relations for the Holiday and Marriott corporations, respectively, approached Nicholls about coordinating and developing a model for inter-university exchange.

Funding for the project was provided by the two organizations, who contributed $2000 each for the program.

The model had three phases : general planning, on-site visits, and review of results with the industry representatives.

One of the goals set for this mission is to develop an appreciation for the educational delivery systems at the two uniquely different universities.

The program is also intended to exchange ideas, concerns and observations with the faculty and students from each of the universities, and to assist each university and the hospitality industry in meeting and understanding special equal opportunity employment and educational needs.

The Stout team consisted of Nicholls and Thomas Phillips from the department of habitational resources, and two students from the hotel and restaurant management program, Kathleen Daley and William Karrmann, who visited the Virginia State University last February.

Bob Ritz, director of the hotel, restaurant and institutional management program, and the chairman of the department of home economics, together with students Ed Morgan and Monica Givins of the hotel, restaurant, institutional management program, comprise the Virginia State University exchange.

The visiting team attended classes, visited the food laboratories and actively participated in various social meetings.

"The hospitality and the courteous treatment by everyone at Stout was something that we all liked and appreciated," said Ritz.

"This visit was a first of its kind in the area of hospitality education and we feel this is a way to accomplish better understanding of each other as well as the hospitality industry," said Nicholls.

The project coordinators are working towards continuation of the project with other short term visits and exchanges.

The project is presently in the third phase and the feedback received by both the teams from their respective staff, faculty and students was positive.

"Killing Fields" survivor speaks of holocaust

by Masha Roberts

Students and Staff piled into the Great Hall of the Student Center April 9, to see and listen to a survivor of the Cambodian holocaust, Dith Pran.

Pran is working on a book entitled "Death and Life of Dith Pran." He spoke mainly about the making of the film "The Killing Fields", an autobiography about the time he spent in Cambodia during the war, helping and being helped by other American journalists.

"I am no hero; just a survivor of the Cambodian holocaust," were Pran's first words when he started off his presentation.

Cambodia used to be a land of peace, where the people were taught not to kill, he said proudly. Pran believes his people are very religious and have strong faith in Buddhism.

"They are not very rich but they have their own land, home and food," he emphasized.

Pran related that many terrible and unforgetable events took place during the war in his country. People were killed, tortured and arrested. Pran said what shocked him most was that during that time patients were even chased out of the hospitals.

When the Kairus came into power, approximately two to three million people were killed, almost half of the Cambodian population.

Pran expressed concern that his country is still at war and that people are caught in the middle, being used and abused.

"The movie 'The Killing Fields', is not easy to watch," Pran continued.

Pran stated his feeling that those who looked at the movie have heart and mind because it shows that they care about the Cambodians, even though they live so far away.

Although Pran was pleased about how "The Killing Fields" turned out, he said that the movie does not show the whole story as compared to what the Cambodians really went through during the war.

"I survived three fields," said Pran. "The first was the war, the second, starvation, and the third was the killing fields.

He believes he survived the war because his life has been protected by the Lord Buddha, who wanted him to tell his story to the outside world.

There are other situations similar to this still going on, Pran said, and he wonders why it happens, and hopes there is no repeat of a holocaust in any other country.

"This event was a cooperative programming project sponsored by the Cinema Commission, which brings movies to Stout and the Speaker Series which hires speakers on political and controversial subjects," said Tracy Lea Landis, student chair of the Speaker Series.

The Cinema Commission showed the movie "The Killing Fields," three times during the two days before Pran made his presentation, said Landis.

Microscope

molecular structure.

"It has capacity that we didn't have," Baldwin said. "Basically, the other microscopes we have with any power work only with surface things."

Because of its special features, which also include a video monitor and a screen picture for photographing magnified objects, the microscope must be in a relatively clean environment.

Baldwin said that a speck of dust would show up as a giant spot on something magnified so many times, so extra precautionary methods have been taken to insure that it is correctly used.

The only real disadvantage Baldwin foresees with the microscope is its operating cost. The microscope requires liquid and dry nitrogen gas for operation and a single cylinder of nitrogen costs approximately $60.

Considering the fact that about three to four cylinders will be utilized each week, Sperry estimates they yearly cost for gas to be $1000.

In order to expose students to the microscope's capabilities, the materials and processes departments such as chemistry and physics will eventually be using it.

In addition to the microscope, Sperry also donated a hybrid screen press this past summer.

Counseling on nutrition feature of conference

by Steven Lemire

Nutrition professionals and students learned basic skills for counseling people about nutrition and eating disorders last Friday in the Great Hall.

"Nutrition Consultation: A Helping Relationship," was the theme for the 17th Annual Continuing Education Conference for Dietitians.

The conference, sponsored by UW-Stout's Food and Nutrition Department of the School of Home Economics, hosted 170 nutrition professionals, interns, and students from the Wisconsin and Minnesota area.

The morning session featured Heinz USA nutritionist Idamarie Laquatra's "Nutrition Counselling Workshop." Laquatra discussed basic skills for nutrition counselling.

One of the important points brought out by Laquatra was that the counselor must find out about the client before proceeding with a treatment program.

The nutrition counselor should let the person talk; in that way the counselor finds out more than if he were asking questions. Counselors should also avoid giving advice, let the client work out the solution and choose the diet that is best for him.

Four main steps were emphasized when working with a clients. Help them identify positive, concrete goals; make sure that the goal is important to the individual.

Identify any potential obstacles to the achievement of the goal and then plan the steps that are necessary to achieve the goal.

...companies are striving to improve the health of their employees

Nutrition counseling is a fairly recent development in the dietetics field according to Margaret James, conference chairperson.

"Some of the facets of nutrition counseling include work site fitness and nutrition programs, where companies are striving to improve the health of their employees, as well as working with patients who have eating disorders," said James.

In the afternoon session, "Helping Clients with Eating Disorders and Weight Management Concerns" was presented by Laurie Meyer, a dietitian for Mount Sinai Hospital in Milwaukee.

Meyer discussed the history, causes, and symptoms of eating disorders and explained how a dietitian, who doesn't see a lot of this problem in a regular practice, might recognize the problem.

Along with giving dietitians an outline of symptoms to look for, Meyer discussed ways of approaching these people. They have a very distorted self image and must be handled carefully.

Meyer develops diets for people with eating disorders after they have worked with a psychiatrist and realized that they need help.

She has made numerous presentations and has appeared in many articles on topics ranging from heart disease to healthy eating and fitness.

"Most psychologists, when working with eating disorders, don't have the background to really do a good job in the nutrition area," said James.

"Nutrition and dietetic professionals are required to take 75 hours of continuing education over a five year period in order to remain certified," said James. "This conference satisfies six of those hours."

Local residents go the distance to raise March of Dimes' funds

by Steven Lemire

Forty-three Menomonie area residents went the distance for charity last Saturday, as the annual Walk America, sponsored by the March of Dimes, took place.

Volunteers for the event walked 25 kilometers after getting sponsors, including family, friends, and businesses, to pledge a certain amount of money per kilometer walked. $2,200 in pledges was raised.

$2,200 in pledges was raised

Members of OASIS, a group for non-traditional students at UW-Stout, helped Walk Coordinator Christy Aasen register walkers.

At 9 a.m., Duane Bauer of the Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce gave a short speech thanking the walkers for their energy and committment.

Hundreds of balloons were released to signal the start of the walk. The walkers traveled along the twenty-five kilometer (15 mile) route in four and one half hours, a group from K-Mart brought up the rear.

Oasis members were on hand at several check points along the way to record names and numbers of walkers in order to insure that no one cut corners or got lost.

Communication between the check points on the route and walk headquarters in North School was provided by the Menomonie Amateur Radio Club and the St.Croix Valley Repeaters Club.

Several area businesses were involved in sponsoring the walk including Dick's Red Owl, Don's Super Value, Rocky Rococos and K-Mart. Domino's Pizza provided lunch after the walk.

Regional Conference

Congressman Steve Gunderson will be bringing a "dream team", headed by U.S. Labor Secretary Bill Brock, to La Crosse on May 4 th take part in his one-day economic development conference, "Western Wisconsin--2000".

The purpose of the conference is to focus attention on the changes that will be affecting western Wisconsin's economic, demographic, and social aspects from the present to the year 2000.

In addition to Labor Secretary Brock's address on the changing structure of the workforce and the need to prepare today's youth for the job market, Governor Tommy Thompson will be speaking on western Wisconsin's role in the state's economic development program.

The conference is open to the public and Gunderson encourages all residents of western Wisconsin to attend. For more information, call Gunderson's Black River Falls office toll free at 1-800-472-6612.

Education Planning

An education planning session for people interested in exploring the possibility of receiving college credit for life experience will be held from 6:30-9:30 p.m., Monday April 20 and May 4-18 in the Maplewood Room of UW-Stout's Memorial Student Center.

The sessions are sponsored by Stout's graduate college and Metropolitan State University's adult learning services network. Fees are approximately $125. Registration deadline is April 15.

These session are designed to help adults assess prior learning experiences that may be substituted for college-level credit. It is intended for persons who are either beginning or completing a interrupted bachelor's degree or for individuals who wish to obtain college credit for career advancement.

Additional information can be obtained by calling (715) 235-2452.

Budget Proposal

Governor Tommy Thompson's budget proposal for the UW System for 1987-88 includes a provision for the creation of 480 new faculty positions system-wide.

Of the new positions, 200 will be funded by a combination of general purpose revenues and tuition, the standard means of funding; 100 positions will be filled by transfers from academic staff to faculty; and 180 will be funded through tuition revenues alone.

Student Regent John Schenian expressed concern that accepting the proposal would set a precedent of funding such additions solely through tuition revenues.

George Lightbourn, of the State Budget Office, said that funding for the positions would only be for a six month period, with the understanding that there is a full commitment from the governor that full funding will be provided through general purpose revenues and tuition in next year's budget package.

Meter Reader Helper

Meter readers in Northern States Power (NSP) Company's central division (including Menomonie), have begun using hand-held computers to record information from electric and natural gas meters.

According the the central division's general manager, Bob Metzgar,these computers will replace the reader's paper documents by storing and displaying route information. They are also easier to handle in cold or wet weather, Metzgar said.

If a number that's entered into the computer is outside customary ranges, the device will beep to alert the reader. The person then re-reads the meter and verifies the entry. The collected data is unloaded into a personal computer and automatically transferred to NSP's central billing computer in Minneapolis. The device also warns meter readers about dogs and other potential hazards along the route.

Minority motion focal point of meeting

by Gretchen Eke

Minority Affairs Senator Adesola Adisa resigned his post during Tuesday night's Stout Student Association (SSA) meeting after a motion he had been pushing for was ruled out of order on a technicality.

The motion was a constitutional change to strike the word 'international' from the current job description for the minority affairs senator, and to create a separate seat for international minority students.

Senator Todd Nelson requested President Paul Nelson to rule the motion out of order because he said it was "really rushed and poorly written". He said that a constitutional change should be clearly written so that the reader is not required to interpret it out of context.

President Nelson said that he would give them a second chance to amend it for clarification. After a few minutes, he ruled it out of order, since "no appropriate amendment was offered in time."

At that time, Adisa announced his resignation and left the room.

When asked why he left, Adisa said, "I don't want to be in an organization where the president takes sides. Nelson has already taken a side. He doesn't want to create the international senator. He used other senators to say yes on his side."

Nelson responded to these charges Wednesday saying, "I never stated for the record during senate my preference on that issue. Nor did I lobby the senators."

Nelson said he was concerned about creating a problem by establishing special seats such as the domestic and international student minority seats proposed by Adisa. Nelson asked, "Where do you stop? Do you also have to create seats for Catholics, Protestants, Jews and Muslims?"

Nelson also said he wanted to keep the senate format as flexible as possible for the new senate. SSA President-elect James Falkofske has said that "a total restructuring of senate has been discussed."

"Obviously, international students must have no desire in being on senate," Nelson said in reference to the fact that only one international student ran for senate and that was for the minority affairs post. He indicated that an international student could have easily won any of three off campus senate seats by collecting as few as four votes.

At the SSA meeting, Off-Campus Senator Henry Oboh moved to reconsider the motion and the motion was brought back on the floor for discussion.

Senator Dan Meyer moved to amend the motion to strike out the portion which created the position of international senator and left a single minority affairs senate position just as it existed prior to the amendment.

> "Do you also have to create seats for Catholics, Protestants, Jews and Muslim?"
> —Paul Nelson

"International students are eligible to run for one of the off-campus senator positions," Meyer said, "There is no need for a separate position for these people."

The amendment passed and the motion in its new form was tabled for two weeks. It will be read next week, and additional amendments to it can be brought up at that time.

In other business, a motion passed to redefine membership to the SSA to include only students, excluding faculty and staff members. This was brought up out of the concern that faculty already has a voice on campus through the faculty senate.

Meyer said that we should work toward unity between faculty and students. He was concerned that this motion would jeopardize relations between them.

"I too, am in favor of building faculty and student unity," Todd Nelson said, "but this is not the vehicle to do it in. We are the Stout Student Association."

"We are representing students," Vice-President of Academic Affairs Julie Weiss said, "Teachers don't pay segregated fees."

In other business, President Nelson reported that at the faculty senate meeting, the SSA's request for student representation on the Positive Action committee was "tabled for an unspecified amount of time."

Nelson said that he wrote a memo to Chancellor Robert Swanson asking him to rule on the request. Previously, the chancellor said he would rule on it if the Faculty Senate did not consider it in a 'timely manner'.

The reason the Faculty Senate gave for tabling the request was that the entire process for reviewing cases was being reviewed by the senate. They said that since they are changing the process for evaluation, they do not want to start changing membership.

Another motion passed that would provide $3,000 out of the segregated fee reserve for next year's Bash on the Grass. The motion also created a permanent account entitled "Senate Homecoming Activities" for this event.

Vice-President of Legislative Affairs Mark Nickels gave a presentation at the meeting which showed the results of a survey he had taken regarding this year's Bash on the Grass.

"Overall, the feelings of the groups I talked to were positive," Nickels said, "They generally thought it was a good thing."

Committee of peers advises EHS school

by Masha Roberts

The School of Education and Human Services (SEHS) has formed a dean's student advisory committee that will act as a liaison between the dean and the students.

The committee's primary purpose is to provide the intermediate step needed for interaction between the dean's office and the department's students.

"The Advisory Committee was designed mainly to have a student representative in each program in the SEHS," said Debbie Lee, co-chairperson of the committee.

"Both undergraduate and graduate programs with the SEHS are being represented by the ten students who have been appointed to the committee," said Lee.

The idea of forming the Committee was brought up by the acting dean of the SEHS, Paul Hoffman, said Lee.

In a newsletter released by the SEHS, Hoffman stated that there has not been much interaction between students and the dean's office. However, with the creation of the student advisory committee, this is a big step in closing this gap.

At the committee's first meeting, Dr. Hoffman indicated that the focus of the group is two-fold.

Hoffman said that the first function of the committee is to provide a platform for reciprocal communications between the SEHS student body and the department administration.

The second function, Hoffman indicated, is to provide assistance to new and transfer students especially in the areas of choosing classes and registration.

Also, the committee will be keeping all students informed about special events and professional issues of particular concern to the education and human services student communities.

Lee further stated that students should contact the SEHS in order to get the name and phone number of their respective representative.

Students are encouraged to use the committee's services to get answers to pertinent questions or just to discuss any related issues about which they might be concerned.

Need to grow together

The Stout Student Association's (SSA) work to create greater student representation in the Menomonie City Council has been admirable. Significant strides were made when three students ran for election to the council.

The SSA needs to remember that this was the first city council election in history in which UW-Stout students made a concerted effort to get elected. Students need not feel discouraged that only one student candidate won.

There will be many more city council elections in the future and the opportunity remains for UW-Stout students to play a significant role in Menomonie politics.

In fact, if the students who ran for the aldermanic posts were genuine about their committment to represent student concerns to the council, they need not stop now because they lost an election.

The job of bringing the Stout community and the Menomonie community together to understand the goals and problems facing each group remains before us.

UW-Stout has expanded greatly the past few years and the Menomonie community has had to adjust to these changes along with the university. It is important that the UW-Stout and Menomonie communities recognize the challenges created by the ever increasing impact of the university on Menomonie and work toward achieving agreed upon goals while reducing the conflict between the two communities.

Student participation in on campus activities is needed just as badly as participation in Menomonie. The opportunity to take a leadership role in the Stout community is there for any student wishing to take on the challenge.

The opportunity remains for students to become integral parts of the Menomonie community. The transition into leadership roles is long and difficult requiring daily attention.

Now is the time to assess the reasons why students continue to pass up their opportunities to vote and determine the issues affecting the majority of voters in the community and act accordingly.

This past election may have been lost due to a lack of voter participation but students have a clear chance to start now at making a significant difference in Menomonie.

One Point Perspective

What's a name?

Jean-Marie Dauplaise

Human obsessions are an interesting phenomena. One of these is naming anything and everything with which they come in contact, including planets, plants, and each other.

Would Adam and Eve have been any different if they had been called Biff and Bunny? Personally, I don't think nomenclature has much to do with one's actual existence. That hasn't stopped anyone, however, from calling me Duplex or Hi-Jean, get it, Dental Hi-Jean. Ha Ha Ha.

Naming things and people can actually cause a lot of trouble, even if you're not looking for it. For instance, a short story which I wrote has been printed in the creative arts journal, The Prometheus. Little did I know when I wrote the story that it would cause untold emotional trauma.

It seems that a character whose name I fabricated, along with the entire story, has a Stout counterpart of the same name. I didn't have any knowledge of this, but some people assumed it was some sort of ominous revelation about this person whom I do not know.

Personally, if I happened to be reading a Harlequin Romance, (actually, this is a preposterous 'if' since I don't read trash) and saw my boyfriend's name, I would not immediately assume he was carrying on clandestine affairs in literary circles without my knowledge or suspicion.

Sure, its an unlikely coincidence, but stranger things have happened. Regardless of the problems involved in writing, I will not resort to using the names John and Jane Doe for the duration of my writing career.

Scientists, I believe, are the most adept practitioners of naming things. I'll give them credit for it too. I haven't run across ANYONE lately named Salix babylonica, and I doubt if I ever will.

Scientists should also be given credit for impressing their names upon the brains of untold millions of students. I'll never forget crawling through the underbrush with Dr. James and 20 classmates from my botany class while gathering scores of plants whose names haunt me in my sleep.

In addition to scientists, the people who write letters to "Penthouse Forum" should also be given a creativity award for their amazing ability to create zillions of euphemisms for the human sex organs, not to mention sex acts. I will not elaborate on the details of this practice in the interest of perpetuating the unblemished reputation of this publication.

And, lest the great marketing wizards of the 70's go unacknowledged, I would like to commend Ronco for their great brainstorming effort involved in tacking their product with the eternally memorable name of "Veg-A-Matic" and Popeil ought not to be overlooked for its "Pocket Fisherman." They should have been comedians.

I feel a great empathy towards the billions of household pets throughout the world who have been the unwitting victims of their owner's naming schemes. Such names as Fluffy, Muffin, Snookums, Binky, and Tiny should be banned forever.

Then there are the family's so ingrained in their pet naming habits that all of their pets are given the same name. We have had three dogs in my lifetime named Brandy. The first was a Dachsund, the second a Brittany Spaniel, and the third, and most recent, a Cavalier King Charles Spaniel. I'm surprised, actually, that my brother wasn't named Jean-Marie given my parent's penchant for perpetuating a name endlessly.

They did, however, at least start his name with a 'J'. This practice made him easy to identify as my sibling on his first day in school and for every year thereafter. Because of his misfortune of having to follow me through 12 years of school, he usually had to sit in the desk right next to the teacher so that he'd be easy to watch.

It's a good thing for both of us though that we weren't named Adam and Eve.

Subject: The SSA and what they have done this past year.

by Brian Kraimer

As the Stout Student Association (SSA) president, Paul Nelson is the leader of the student government. A 27 year-old non-traditional student, Nelson graduated from high school in 1978 and went to technical school for one year. After receiving a degree in welding, he worked in industry for three years. He decided to come back to college and selected UW-Stout. Among his reasons for doming back here were all of the alumni who told him what a fine institution Stout is.

The first extra curricular activity he was involved in was as the energy representative of HKMC Hall when he was a sophomore. The following year, he became the SSA senator for HKMC. At the same time he was a news reporter and opinions columnist for The Stoutonia. The year after that he became editor-in-chief of the school newspaper and this year he is the SSA president.

STOUTONIA: WHAT DO YOU FEEL THE SSA HAS ACCOMPLISHED THIS YEAR?

NELSON: I think the largest success of the SSA this year is not just one activity or initiative, it is just the fact that we got some things done. The problem with previous student governments was that they tried to get too much done in one year. I have concentrated on a few goals and worked on them. My goals were to establish a non-alcoholic activity at homecoming for the growing number of students who cannot legally drink.

My second goal was to increase student involvement in city politics, and we were successful with this up to a point. We moved a polling place onto campus for the city elections, and we passed the landlord/tenant initiatives. On the down side, we failed miserably in this last city election. As an organization we are embarrassed and I am personally embarrassed. The students did not participate in

Tabled indefinitely

Dear Editorial Staff,

I am writing to you about my concerns with the views and actions of the faculty senate in relation to student involvement on student governance committees on this campus.

In the early 1970s, the State of Wisconsin passed State Statute 36.09(5). This law states that "students have the primary responsibility for the formation and review of policies concerning student life, services, and interests." It continues by stating that "the students of each institution or campus subject to the responsibilities of the board, the president, the faculty and the chancellor have participation in the immediate governance of and policy development (sic)."

Since student complaints against faculty members seem to be of interest to the students, the S.S.A. sent a letter to the faculty senate on September 8, 1986 which asked that the Positive Action Committee include two students from the university. The PAC deals with complaints brought against faculty, and when students have concerns over faculty members, they have no peers to give moral support in their testimony to the committee.

Although I can understand why the faculty senate might not want student representation on this committee, the request of the SSA is not to form a witch-hunt. It is to represent students and their concerns in an academic-related area.

For the last seven months, the faculty senate has refused to decide on the SSA request. At their April 14 meeting, they once again tabled the motion (indefinitely). My largest concern was when a faculty senator, Marian Marion, stated that "this whole issue has me scared of the students. Students scare me." Considering that students in essence employ her, my question is, if your boss scares you, why don't you leave and find another job?

I hope that the faculty senate can be more cooperative and efficient in dealing with student senate requests in the future. As the duly elected leader of the student senate for next year, I plan to make a priority issue out of resolving this request once and for all. Stalling for time might work for other groups' requests, but not the 18th Congress of the Stout Student Association.

Sincerely,
James Falkofske
President-elect SSA

Getting rich quick

On page six of the Thursday, April 9, 1987, issue of The Stoutonia in the "University Notes" section, an "ad" for a scholarship search organization was listed as a news item. First, the content of that subheading entitled "Financial Aid" is strictly a classified advertisement and not news. Second, by classing it as news, The Stoutonia should, in my opinion, be of reasonable certainty that this scholarship search investment is a legitimate business entity.

This "professional consulting" firm, as do others, leads one to believe that there are large sums of untapped funds going unused and with an investment of $39, they will give the applicant "five possible sources of aid." There are not

CAMPUS SLANT/ What do you think of the health service provided on campus?

By Brian Kraimer

Betsy Hansen,
H&R Management,
Senior,

We need the health care center. In case someone on campus needs health care. If we did not have the service, then people might neglect their health needs.

Debra Walker,
Industrial Technology,
Freshman,

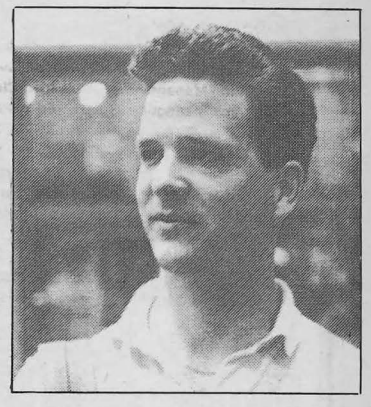
When I was there, they were pretty good. They helped me a lot. I think the health care center is really important because if you have a problem you can just go there, and they will help you. You do not to run to the other side of town and you do not have to pay anything for the help.

Jim Wagner,
H&R Management,
Senior,

I guess that they are adequate. I have always had good service at the health care center. I guess that I am happy with them. The only hassles I have ever had there is that you had to go there early if you wanted to get in without an appointment.

Roxanne Hayenga,
Clothing Textile and Design,
Senior,

I think they give drugs out too freely. I have been there twice and they have just handed me drugs and sent me out. They just give whatever they think you need. In one instance I had some bad side effects, which they never told me about. I think the center needs improvement.



Steve Wright,
H&R Management,
Senior,

The health care center is a good idea, but it is too far from the campus for us to get really good use of it. I think that the center should be located on the south campus. I know people who just go up to the Red Cedar Clinic when they need help.

Bottom Line

Dormbusters

Rich Brueckner

"I woke up in my clothes again this morning."--Gordon Sumner

Recent events have brought back bitter memories of dorm life. I, too, was cast out of the garden for the heinous crime of being obnoxious.

My first RA (we called them "housefellows" at UW-Madison) was pretty cool until he was kicked out of school for cheating on his Ethics mid-term.

To our dismay, he was replaced by a Bible thumper with a disdain for fornication. You'd feel the same way if your girlfriend looked like a carp.

Oddly enough, we did call him "RA". He never figured out that this was short for "rat's asshole".

RA couldn't relate to secular residents. Of the two people on our floor who liked him, one was his brother and the other was a homosexual Quaker.

The only joy RA seemed to get from life was derived from reporting the misdeeds of those who despised him. The housing office must have pictured our hallways as being constantly littered with piles of beer cans, dead roaches, and wrecked women.

RA had the habit of hiding behind his door and witnessing our behavior through his peep hole. His right eye bulged to twice its normal size as a result of this practice, which probably explains why carpface was attracted to him.

RA spent a lot of time building his case against us. We never found out what he was writing us up for. We admired his imagination although it was a rather poor substitute for integrity.

The University required him to give us three warnings before our day of reckoning. We managed to get all three in one evening for damming the showers with a table and having a Jacuzzi/baptism party.

RA was the star witness for the prosecution. We appeared before a balding grouch who didn't seem to have much use for disruptive types such as ourselves. He asked us if we had anything to say in our own defense.

We figured that smooth talking would do the trick. Fortunately, my co-defendant was in pre-law and had a tactful manner:

"We never got in any trouble until dickless here showed up."

"Is this true?" asked skinhead.

"Yes, it's true; this man has no dick."

We bid RA and dorm life farewell forever. We never belonged there in the first place. As for RA, well, he was killed in a farm accident the following semester.

Seeds of Change

Ban the Bunny

Gene Emahiser

On April 19, Christians around the world will celebrate the resurrection of Jesus Christ on Resurrection Sunday. This holiday, like many others, has been clouded by humanism. Most children are taught about the "Easter bunny" long before they are introduced to what Jesus Christ did for them on the cross.

Why do we pay all of this attention to some dumb bunny and some colored eggs? What does he have to do with Easter anyway? Why do we celebrate the risen Christ by hunting for baskets of candies and eggs?

I researched history books, encyclopedias, and reference books on festivals and holidays. I found that there is not an agreement as to the origins of the Easter bunny or the Easter egg. However, all of the resources conceded to one thing. They have nothing to do with the fact that Jesus Christ rose from the dead on this Resurrection Sunday. So, again I ask, why all the hoopla? Why the games, balloons, cards, posters, candies, and, of course, sales, to commemorate a rabbit that lays eggs.

I submit to you, whether intentionally or not, that the Easter bunny has successfully stolen much of the attention that Christ deserves for himself. Whatever justification you use, however rational, whatever trivial piece of history you have, it all falls extremely short as a reason to create a holiday around one small bunny. The Easter bunny, by stealing attention away from God and substituting itself in place of God on this holiday, has effectively made itself an antichrist.

Now again, I realize that by taking a shot at the Easter bunny, I am not exactly going to make the list of the most loved writers in America. There aren't many people in America that like to hear bad things said about something so near and dear to them as their Easter bunny. If you feel as though no one should say anything harmful about something as "sacred" as the Easter bunny, then that feeling alone should tell you who the real god of your Easter is.

I can just hear you pseudo religious, 3-Sunday-a-year-Christians out there screaming, "Why can't you just take it as a joke like everyone else? Why do you have to take everything so seriously?"

Well, I'll tell you why. Jesus Christ didn't have to die for us; He didn't even have to come to earth if He didn't want to. But God, your creator, loved you so much that He came to earth in the form of a lowly man to die in your place and give you the privilege of being able to stand blameless before God.

I count this privilege as a high honor and of great value. I've placed all of my faith in this one event. I cannot and will not make light of what God has done for me, nor will I sit idle while the rest of the world mocks Him and His people.

I want to encourage each Christian that reads this column not to fall into the trap of consumerism and idol worship set by the secular humanists. Don't let anything dilute the power of the resurrected Christ. Let this Easter be a time for you to learn more and experience a deeper understanding of who God is and what he means to you. Let this Sunday be the Sunday that your faith is resurrected.

Let God challenge your heart. As you begin to accept the challenges of God, you'll walk in the newness of life that He intended for you to have.

If, this Easter, you choose to continue to celebrate the Easter bunny's return to your home, you need to understand that you are spitting in the face of Jesus. His free grace was never intended to be used as a place to wipe your feet. I wouldn't want you to remain so deceived as to think that God has a big sense of humor and that He enjoys our celebration of Easter using the Easter bunny.

The Bible clearly says in Exodus,

"You shall have no other gods before me... for I, the Lord your God, am a jealous God punishing the children for the sins of the fathers to the third and fourth generation of those who hate."

God takes it very seriously when he isn't the main attraction and the one in charge of our lives. I you choose to live your life any other way, you, your children, your children's children, and your children's grandchildren will pay the consequences.

This Easter, let's celebrate Jesus; not the Easter bunny.

this year's election and so I feel that they deserve whatever happens to them.

Another one of the goals was to get student representation in the positive action process. This power was taken away from us, but the jury is still out on whether we will get this power back.

The last of the major goals was the Senior Gift Committee. This is a way for graduating seniors to leave a gift to further the education of future students here at Stout.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE THE FEELINGS BETWEEN THE CITY AND THE STUDENTS IN YOUR OPINION?

NELSON: There are people in town who view us as equals and feel that we should be a part of the town beyond spending our money here. There are people, however, who see us as the proverbial child who should be seen and not heard. I think that now the latter group is again the predominant force, after this last election.

I also think the relationship between the students and the community is a bittersweet one. They need us for economic survival and they recognize that, but they hope that we would be content to be nothing but a student. I do not know how to change that now. The students had the chance to vote-in three members to the city council, but they decided to lay in the sun that day or (do) whatever else they did.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE YOUR FEELINGS TOWARDS THE STUDENT NEWSPAPER?

NELSON: I was once a member of the media. I am aware of the media's role in our society. I fully support the media's right and prerogative to criticize the SSA and say what they want about us. The only problem I have is when letters get edited or are not published in the paper. The only recourse any of us have when we disagree with the paper is to submit a letter to the editor. When this right is taken away, there is a monopoly with the news, and this should never happen.

STOUTONIA: WHAT WOULD YOU LIKE TO TELL THE STUDENTS?

NELSON: I think we, as students, play a great part in the governing of this campus, as allowed us, through statute 36.095. We can only exercise our right if we participate. If a student sits in on a committee and knows the facts, the faculty will listen to them. But first, you must get people to sit in on those committees.

STOUTONIA: DO YOU THINK THAT YOU, AS THE PRESIDENT OF THE SSA, HAVE CONTROL OF THE SSA?

NELSON: I believe that a leader should be a leader. My job description is very general, so I can make this job whatever I want it to be. The SSA members made the decisions on their own. Whenever I suggested something, there were always questions and opposition to the suggestion, which is good. I would like to think that people followed my direction because they agreed with me. I had a whole year as the editor-in-chief to think about what I would want to do with the SSA this year. If you're going to be a leader, be a leader. If you want to be a leader and you are not a leader, you are a follower. You can not be both. Either be a leader or a follower or get out of the way; that is my overall philosophy. Perhaps some of the senators did not want to be followers and so they got out of the way. This is fine, or else they slow down the process.

huge untapped reserves available. These firms do not return the processing fees because they have an automatic group of at least five sources that any student might qualify for. Any student who reviews any high school or college publication on financial assistance will, free of charge, find information on at least 10-20 possible sources. The UW-Stout Foundation has been for years been perplexed that our own students do not even apply for our own scholarships. A minimal amount of effort by a student to inquire at the Financial Aid Office, the UW-Stout Foundation Office, School Dean Offices and a number of directories of resources available at the Library Learning Center will generate far more accurate information and be far more comprehensive. Also, it's free.

I would ask that The Stoutonia staff ensure that these services are legitimate investments for our student body before publishing this type of solicitation. This "Get-Rich-Quick" scheme is benefitting only one individual - the Educational Guidance and Financing company of Green Bay, Wisconsin.

Unselfish giving

Thank you for allowing me to use The Stoutonia as a means to publicly thank three students who have given many hours of personal time to help fellow students.

Bob Karmann, Jason Huebner and Nany Veloon, members of the Hotel Sales Management Association student club volunteered over 50 hours of time to coordinate 25 open houses and receptions associated with campus interviews.

It is this continuing kind of unselfish giving that makes UW-Stout such a good place to learn and work.

Thank you Bob, Jason and Nancy.

Guest potter presents ceramics workshop

by J.M. Dauplaise

Artist Randy McKeachie-Johnston demonstrated his pottery techniques Wednesday April 8 to UW-Stout students, faculty and area residents. His visit also attracted students and faculty from other UW-System Universities.

McKeachie-Johnston received his MFA in Studio Arts from the University of Minnesota. He also spent a year in Mashiko, Japan studying with Shoji Hamada, a well known Japanese potter.

His demonstrations included techniques in both throwing and hand building pieces. Especially interesting were his techniques in assembling tiered ceramic boxes. He worked in a very precise and methodical manner, yet his pieces appeared to be effortlessly contructed.

Ceramics instructor, John Perri, commented that "Randy represents a very sensitive approach to the material. In a period when garish displays receive attention as good ceramic art, such sensitivity can be lost in the shuffle. I think, however, in the long run, work such as his will be considered to be good ceramic art."

Later in the evening, McKeachie-Johnston gave an informal talk and slide show of his work. He discussed his background and his life as an artist.

Travel appeared to be a key element in McKeachie-Johnston's life. He has taught workshops throughout the U.S. and in Canada, Norway and Japan.

He now lives near River Falls, Wisconsin with his wife and two children. There, he has built his own kiln and pursues his life as an artist.

"If you want to make art, make art." He said. "But make it good art."

He also stressed that it is not necessary to support oneself solely on the income of selling art. He works part-time building fireplaces to support his lifestyle. He also suggested that a large overhead is more of a burden than a benefit to an artist.

The most important thing that he stressed was doing whatever made one happy and satisfied. He first decided to become an artist he said when "I fell in love with making pots."

Studying in Japan had a strong influence on his work. It posessed "a timeless quality" that is often lacking in ceramic work. He stressed that the mark of the artist on his work could provide a vital link between the artist and the work.

He spoke of a pot he owns which is thousands of years old. "You can see his fingerprints where he held it during glazing. I can tell how big his hands were and exactly how he held his work. It's amazing."

It is this quality of the human touch that McKeachie-Johnston instills in his own work which gives it the sensitive and timeless quality which instructor John Perri spoke of. "It's an integral part of his work," Perri said.

Students participate in Randy McKeachie-Johnston's Ceramics workshop. Johnston resides in River Falls, but he has done workshops across the globe. McKeachie-Johnston also presented a slide discussion of his previous works. The workshop took place on April 8.

It's fun working with people who are fired-up," says Bill DeHoff, of his graphic design students. DeHoff has worked for advertising agencies, and has done architectural renderings, sign painting, and has had a wide range of teaching experience.

DeHoff's views on Graphic Design

by Gretchen Pemberton

The Graphic Design program is the newest and largest art concentration. William DeHoff teaches Graphic Design 1 and 2 and also a letterform class. Along with his three years of input for the design area at Stout, he also does work in printmaking, drawing and painting.

DeHoff graduated from Valparaiso University, Indiana with an Art major and a concentration in painting. He received his Master of Fine Arts degree from Tyler School of Art in Philadelphia concentrating in printmaking.

Returning to Valparaiso to teach, DeHoff taught painting, graphic design, drawing, foundation design and surveys in art history, on and off for eight years.

DeHoff feels, "There is a definite link between design areas and the fine arts. In design areas you have to communicate some idea that is handed to you from elsewhere. When you're working for yourself, the questions you choose to deal with are your own. The way you go about solving these things use the same tools."

While teaching at Valparaiso University and Purdue, DeHoff also worked for an advertising agency doing freelance, architectural renderings, sign painting and other work covering a wide range.

"If I'm doing an advertisement, I have to take that information and give it a certain order so it is perceived in a certain way. If I'm a painter and I'm composing a picture it is very much the same."

> "There is a definite link between design areas and the fine arts
> —William DeHoff"

DeHoff said, "All the design elements that people use, color, contrast, rhythm and scale, whether they're going into design or studio, are the tools that are used for the way people see."

Commenting on his artwork, DeHoff feels it "is pretty sporadic during the semester with my teaching." DeHoff said when he was at Valparaiso teaching more courses, it had a definite impact on him.

With moving studios various times, DeHoff feels, "The images of my painting very much come out of where I am, once I kind of get settled into a place."

Recently obtaining an Amiga graphics computer, DeHoff is excited to find out if it will, "take things away from my drawing and painting or be a device sort of thing that can split it, parallel it, or compliment it."

He said, "With the switch of teaching exclusively Graphic Design, some of the techniques and approaches that are involved with that, I think are winding up or beginning to show up in my work."

It has only been a couple of years since students have graduated from Stout with the full four year concentration. DeHoff credits Susan Hunt for "being chiefly responsible for the success of the program."

"There are a number of Stout grads working at first rate design studios in Minneapolis and across the country." DeHoff said. Various business cards from previous students have been sent to him revealing the strength of the Graphic Design program.

There is nothing DeHoff would rather do right now than teach. "It's fun working with people who are fired-up, got their whole life ahead of them, they want to do things, they're ready to go. There is a lot of energy I get back from that."

by Stevie Voll

It's time again!!!

Yes, it's time, again!!!

Get out those photographs and enter them in the Photo Design contest that is being held for the eleventh time at UW-Stout.

If you haven't entered yet, it's too late and you missed the boat this year. Entries were due Wednesday, April 15, 1987 at 4 p.m.

You saw the posters up all over the campus and you still didn't enter?

For information's sake, there are two categories; they be the old infamous black and white category and the old infamous color category. The sizes of these photos could range from 5" x 7" up to 15" x 18". From little to big.

Big, big, big cash prizes will be awarded winners in each category. A big $100.00 for first, a big $50.00 for second, and a big $25.00 for second. Winners will be notified. If you don't win any of the big cash prizes, you will be overwhelmingly filled with joy to see your photos on display in the Student Union's display cases.

The contest is a fine opportunity for students to see their prints on display

A reception will take place for the Stout student amateur photographers April 20 at 11:00 a.m. in the Concourse Lounge of the Student Center. All are invited to attend.

What kind of photographs could you have entered or did you enter?

How about a grand shot of the Grand Canyon?

A shot of some punks with those crazy crazy outrageous outfits sitting at the McDonald's bus stop on Lake STREET IN MINNEAPOLIS?

A shot of your girlfriend?

A shot of your boyfriend?

A shot of people partying down at The Marion?

The Rugby team doing beer slides at The Spot?

Great.

To be serious. The contest is a fine opportunity for students to see their prints on display and last year's show proved that there is some fine talent running around on this campus and they are taking pictures,too.

A panel of judges will be judging the prints on the basis of impact (art word), composition (art word), creativity (art word), and overall technical quality (art word).

What then is a snapshot? What is the difference?

PHOTO DESIGN CONTEST, THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL. It's here and it is coming in a couple days. Seeing is believing.

Computer controlled loom developed by Dr. Heintz

by Stephanie Weiss

"Normally a hand loom uses human energy, both mental and muscular. There have been developments to ease some of the muscle work, but not many to ease the mind work," said UW-Stout professor Dr. Kenneth Heintz.

Dr. Heintz, a professor of apparel, textile and design, has combined the age-old art of weaving with computer technology. By attaching a small computer controller to the loom, one can weave "without using the mental energy of selecting patterns."

A traditional hand loom requires the weaver to step on a combination of six treadles to raise the harnesses (wooden frames). These frames hold pieces of yarn, called warps, lengthwise over the loom. The number and combination of harnesses raised will determine which warps the crosswise piece of yarn and pick will go under, as it is carried by the shuttle. This movement forms the pattern in the cloth.

The controller Heintz designed can hold up to 280 patterns. Its main advantage is to cut down on the number of treadle combinations one has to remember. The mechanism leaves only two treadles to work.

Heintz, who grew up in a woolen-manufacturing family in Massachusetts, has been weaving since he was a young boy. He worked on power looms and became familiar with the idea of programmable patterns.

"When I was a textile designer, I ran sample looms that had the mechanical means to run patterns, so I was exposed to the ideas of mechanisms selecting patterns and could see the possibilities with a controller on a hand loom," said Dr. Heintz.

"I do have mixed feelings about a controller on a hand loom. You're dealing with ancient technology," he said, "the first archaeological evidence of a hand loom is from 6,200 B.C. and I'm hooking hi-tech onto it."

The programmable mechanism Heintz made has no significance in the mechanized textile industry where loom patterns are already controlled by computers. They are, however, in demand for hand looms.

"Some handweavers have hooked up Apple or IBM computers to hand looms...but it would cost a couple thousand dollars," said Dr. Heintz, "with a controller, you can have the whole thing–the interface and controller - for about $600."

Made of wood and metal, Dr. Heintz's harness loom connects the loom to the controller. Dr. Heintz, who was awarded an $890 grant from the Stout Faculty Research Initiative Award Program, designed and constructed the controller himself.

Dr. Heintz has been teaching at Stout since 1970 and said the controller could be hooked up to a sewing machine and programmed for embroidery patterns.

Dr. Heintz hopes to use the new loom controller in his advanced weaving classes.

"I just want to test the student's comprehension of the instructions I wrote for the loom," he said, "then I'll turn the loom over to the department and get on with something else."

Menomonie Theater Guild

"The Mouse that Roared," a play adapted by Christopher Sergel from the book by Leonard Wibberly, will be presented in the Mabel Tainter Theatre.

The play actually contains two stories. One is about a fairytale romance between a forest ranger and a beautiful young duchess. The other story pokes fun at the President of the United States who is very confused by what is going on, the Secretary of State who pops pills, his two WAC (wacky) daughters and an American nuclear physicist who has invented the Q-bomb.

Although the characters have weaknesses and strange quirks of nature, their intentions are good.

Tickets for this satiric comedy can be obtained by sending a first, second and third choice of dates (April 24, 25, 30, May 1 and 2 at 8 p.m.; April 26 and May 3 at 2 p.m.), a check ($5 for students, senior citizens and groups of 20 or more; $6 for others) and a self-addressed, stamped envelope to MTG, Box 325, Menomonie, WI 54751. Starting April 22 the Mabel Tainter box office will be open from 11 a.m.- 1 p.m. weekdays and two hours before each performance. For more information call 235-0001.

Campus Cuisine

Table Manners

Denise Cain

I was sitting in the Terrace Cafe one fine day with a rare, male, dietetic student Gerry Meysman. While I was focusing on other male possibilities, a group of upperclass men caught my attention as they were eating their unbalanced, undescribable meals.

I was not so horrified with their food choices as I was with their disgusting table mannerisms. Incidentally Gerry has developed impeccable table manners from eating with hordes of dietetic females the past four years.

Included in this week's Campus Cuisine are the choice manners to use while eating. The recipes are for having a good time with food and a social drink.

TEN WORST TABLE MANNERISMS SEEN AT THE TERRACE CAFE, UW-STOUT

1. Talking with mouth full of food
2. Chewing LOUD, with mouth OPEN, and spitting food ACROSS the table
3. Taking food out of serving dish with fingers
4. Playing farmer Bill by holding fork in pitchfork position, ready to feed the steer
5. Eating food off other people's plates as they run to the bathroom
6. Licking all ten fingers with tongue after each succulent bite
7. Pretending to be dog Bouser by "sniffing out" food before devouring it
8. Eating meal face flush with the plate, chest resting on edge of table, elbows in driving position
9. Pulling once engaged food out of mouth with fingers, and resting it on the edge of plate for everyone to view
10. Blowing nose at the table with dinner napkin shredded Mozzarella or longhorn cheese

Roll the tortillas and place them seam side down in an ovenproof dish. Pour more sauce over the tops and sprinkle with: shredded Mozzarella or longhorn cheese

Heat thoroughly in oven for about 15 minutes. Twelve enchiladas.

The Best Margaritas

Dance Dimension

DANCE DIMENSION

No, Dance Dimension is not an album. It's a non-alcoholic dance for the students. It's put on just about every week in the great hall.

Usually I put out a review of albums that have just come out. This week I thought I'd review something different. I'm still sticking to music though.

Last friday I was bored. The bars have become boring and house parties are diminishing. I was invited to go over to the great hall for Dance Dimension.

The first time I went to this was about two months ago. The dance was set up like a night club, which was really nice. The reason I never went back was because of the music. All of the songs they were playing was black music.

I'm a fair guy so I decided to give them another chance. This big event set me back a whole $1.50. Which isn't bad. I'd probably spend more than that the first five minutes at the Meet Market.

I was first approached by a guy in a suit who told me I was underdressed. I think he didn't like the fact I was wearing shorts. I didn't like the thought of dancing in a 90 degree hall in a suit as I'd dehydrate in five minutes.

I'd dehydrate in five minutes

As I walked in, there was a Beastie Boys' song playing. This was the only song I recognized all night. The rest of the dance it was all rap and funk music. I find it really hard to dance to a song that sounds like a guy with an asthma attack.

I not putting down rap or funk. I just think the people at Dance Dimension should play different kinds of music. A guy scratching a record over and over gets annoying after about seven seconds.

I think it would be a good idea to have a different theme to the dances than the same thing all the time. I would like to be able to wear my shorts to a beach party dance. I think they'll agree with me that the women of Stout would look better with shorts on too instead of long dresses.

I was told by some people that they do play better music other weeks. One person said that she thinks the music played is decided by the DJ.

Another thing is that in the four hours I was there they only played one set of slow songs. I guess they figure after you get all sweaty from wearing a suit you're not going to want to get too near another person.

I think Dance Dimension is a great idea for having something for people to do without drinking. It's also much easier to meet people. With some changes I'll probably go there more often.

Dehoff

"It gets crazy after a while," DeHoff said. "There are so many ideas that people bring to you as students. They bring you things you didn't expect, or never thought of. That is a much more interesting way to live than when you have the same people dealing with the same problems."

DeHoff said sometimes he can come off like preaching, but he feels it is important to take advantage of these years. "If you blow off a semester or a year, you can never get it back."

"A lot of students don't realize what they've got." DeHoff said, "The quality of what you do right now, if it is an excellent portfolio, if you want to live in San Francisco, New York or anywhere, you can do it."

"If you come out with good work, that's your freedom for the future, that is your opportunity."

Men's track hangs tough in St. Thomas meet

by Denise Cain

On April 11, the UW-Stout Men's Track Team traveled to O'Shaughnessy Stadium at St. Thomas College in St. Paul, Minnesota. The Blue Devils competed against three other top-notch teams: College of St. Thomas, Mankato State, and Macalester College. No team scores were kept but individuals competed for times and places.

Senior Paul Bons thundered through the stadium in the 5000 meter run as he set a new stadium record and defeated last year's national champion. Bons completed the race in a time of 14 minutes, 33.7 seconds earning him a first place finish and an invitation to compete in the outdoor nationals.

Bons felt very happy about his performance. He said that going into the race he was not sure how he was going to do because of the tough competition. He added, "But the competion was probably the main reason I ran well."

The hurdle crew continued to dominate the track Saturday as Stout had the first three finishes and a sixth place finish in the 110 high hurdles.

Dan Doucette took first place honors as he ran the 110 high hurdles in 15.5 seconds. Close behind Doucette and tieing for second place were tracksters Brian Kohls and Zack Adams who both finished the event in a time of 15.6 seconds respectively. John Zastrow won his heat with a time of 16.6 seconds and placed sixth overall.

> "We have changed our form from last year. Our practices are a lot harder."
> —Brian Kohls

When asked what he attributes to the continued high finishes in the hurdles, Brian Kohls stated, "We have changed our form from last year. Our practices are a lot harder." He added that he is happy with their success but sees room for improvement.

Hurdler Zack Adams stated that he has more confidence this year in his hurdling. He feels a large part of his achievements are because Coach Terry has been working hard with them. When asked what his goals are for the season Adams said, "I want to qualify for outdoor nationals by cutting my hurdle time four-tenths of a second."

Out in the field, the Blue Devil men showed their strength in events such as hammer throw, long jump, javelin and pole vault.

Randy Miller set another school record this week in the hammer throw with a toss of 140 feet, 3 inches which cut the school record by another 4 feet, 5 inches. His finish placed him second overall.

Gary Klopp flew 6.17 meters in the long jump which placed him third in the event.

In the javelin, two Stout tracksters placed including Scott Romenesko who finished third with a throw of 160 feet, 1 inch, and Chris Hagen who came in fifth with a toss of 144 feet, 1 inch.

John Zastrow tied for second place in the pole vault with a height of 14 feet, 2 inches. Derrick Bridley hit a height of 12 feet, 6 inches in the pole vault earning him a tie for sixth place.

Next up for the Blue Devil Men is the Eau Claire Metric which will be held at UW-Eau Claire April 18.

Power-laden Devils set records, but still lose ground to River Falls

Junior Michael Charbonneau puts one hundred percent concentration into his pitching. Charbonneau had strong outings this week, helping the Blue Devils win four of six conference games.

by Chris Riba

The Blue Devil baseball team put some impressive numbers on the board despite losing two games and ground on the first place River Falls Falcons.

Three school records were set and another was tied in the Devils' 4 victory and 2 loss, 6 game series with conference foes River Falls, La Crosse and Eau Claire. The first record fell last Tuesday at home when they split a double header with division leading River Falls. Despite losing the first game 2-5 the Devils set a school record for most runs scored in a single game with the 19-4 victory in 5 innings.

In game 1 Bob Effinger continued his destruction of opposing pitching by hitting his 8th homer of the year. Lionel Gaston went the distance and pick up the loss.

"We had opportunities to win but we didn't get the hits we needed," said coach Terry Petrie of the loss.

Game 2 was a different story. "We blasted them," Petrie said of the 19-4 blow out destruction of the Falcons. Offensively, Effinger continued his hot streak by smashing 2 of the 5 homers hit by the Devils. Greg Osowski, Jeff Kloes, and Karl Drezek each added one. John Schmitt pitched all five innings on his way to his second victory of the season.

Effinger's second home run of the day gave him a grand total of 10 for the season which tied the record for homers hit in a single season. He is currently tied with Tom Armstrong who set the record in 1985. With 10 games left in the season he has a very good chance of establishing a new home run mark.

> "We have outscored Eau Claire 34-3 in the four games we have played them
> —Coach Petrie

At La Crosse on Friday, a strong performance at the plate from Tim Buswell allowed Stout to give Karl Drezek a lead when he came in the game as relief for starter Mike Charbonneau. Charbonneau had strong outings with Drezek picking the win after entering the game in the fifth inning. Buswell was 4 for 2 including a solo homer.

Going into the first game Friday, senior catcher Jeff Kloes was unofficially tied with Duane Ruff for the Stout career RBI record. He recorded 2 on Friday to give him sole possession of the record.

In game 2 the defense broke down allowing 2 unearned runs to score as the Indians rallied and held on to beat the Blue Devils in extra innings 6-5. Joe Schopp was stuck with the loss after coming in the game as reliever for starting pitcher Dave Crabtree.

The Saturday double header with Eau Claire was played on Sunday due to rain, but that didn't cool the red hot bats of Devils' offense.

Buswell and Drezek ignited the offense in the first game with homers. Buswell and Effinger both went 3 for 2 in the 7-1 victory. Gary Busch pitched 5 solid innings for the victory then turned the reins over to reliever Brad Resch who picked up the save.

It was destruction time for the Bluegolds in game 2 as the Devils swept the double header and swamped them 17-0 in a five inning affair. Freshman Jay Thompson spearheaded the offensive by hitting the only home run of the contest while going 3 for 4 and knocking in 3 runs. Effinger and Chris Larson each had doubles and combined for 7 RBI's between the two of them.

John Schmitt went the distance on the mound picking up the shut out victory over the 1-5 Blu golds.

"We have outscored Eau Claire 34-3 in the 4 games we have played them," said coach Petrie of his potent offense.

Athlete of the week: Effinger

by Darron Vanman

Name: Robert Effinger
Year: Senior
Sport: Baseball
Positions: Designated hitter, first and third bases
Major: Business Administration: Transportation
Coach: Terry Petrie
Latest Accomplishments: 1985-All conference and All district teams
Athlete's statistics:

Robert Effinger tied the school record with 10 home runs in Stout's first 27 games, with about 12 games to go before post season play. Effinger is hitting a brilliant 588% in conference play, and he has a very satisfactory 370% for the whole season. Robert Effinger's superior hitting has powered him to this week's Stoutonia's athlete of the week.

Coach's comments: "Yes I would have to say Effinger was player of the week, but Jeff Kloes was close behind. Robert had a super week. We hope he can keep it rolling," Coach Petrie said.

"He's coming off a knee injury (reoccurred last year after the previous summer). He's having a good year. Rob has made some timely hits, and he's tied the school record in homers," Petrie continued.

Coach Petrie added, "Rob plays third base when he's not at DH. He plays adequate defense, he's not a threat on base stealing, and his arm is not so good (three attributes which it takes according to Petrie to be drafted which he says Jeff Kloes has a good chance at being drafted)."

Athlete's history:

Robert Effinger came to Stout after working for three years to prove to himself he could play college baseball. Besides proving himself as a player, Effinger has plans to move into truck fleet management when he graduates next December.

"I felt like I cheated myself out of college baseball, and I wanted to further my education from the experience I had gained," Effinger said.

Robert (which he wanted to be called in this article, to make it more professional in his words.) started playing America's game when he was eight. He played through high school and then took off time to work. He injured his knee after his sophomore year here, and under went extensive reconstructive surgery.

"The doctors said it would take 16 months, but with the help of Ramaeker (Stout's athletic trainer) I was back training in six months. But that was too fast as I was injured most of last year's season," Effinger related.

Effinger made a funny comment, "Yeah, the guys give me a hard time sometimes for being the oldest guy on the team. I can't believe some of the guys are six years younger than me."

Robert says he struggled down South during spring break, and played an awful game in the Metrodome, but has turned things around since thanks to a video tape made by his girlfriend.

"I didn't want to watch the tape, but my family urged me to so I did. I noticed a few flaws from the tape, and from there went to the gym and worked on the flaws. I'm doing those things right, now and I have a good mental attitude too," Effinger said.

Hard driving Robert Effinger is more concerned with his team winning the conference title than improving his personal record. "The homers will come. I just think we have the talent to win the conference," Effinger said.

Packers trade Lofton

The Green Bay Packer's all time reception leader James Lofton was traded to the L.A. Raiders for the 15th pick in the third round of this year's draft and an undisclosed conditional choice of the 1988 draft. Lofton was recently accused of sexual assault.

Brewers currently undefeated

The Milwaukee Brewers were predicted to finish poorly this year because, like the Packers, the Brewers are a young team. Wednesday night the Brewers beat the Baltimore Orioles 7-0 to up Milwaukee's record to 9-0, the current best record in the major league and the best start in the team's history.

Clemens re-signs contract

Roger Clemens, the 1986 American League Cy Young winner and the Boston Red Sox's MVP (most valuable player) has re-signed his contract with the Red Sox after sitting out of spring training. Clemen's contract is reportedly worth over $2 million for a two year time span.

Bons sets new Stout record

Stout senior and Co-captain of the men's track team, Paul Bons, defeated the 1986 national champion in the 5,000 meter run (approx. 3 miles) with a time of 14 minutes and 33.7 seconds at the College of St. Thomas, O'Shannassy stadium. Bons took first place in the race and has set a new Stout record.

by Slash La Freniere

UW-Stout Centaur player Billy Ries scored the only try for the Stout ruggers last Saturday as a tired and hung over squad defeated Bloomington Minnesota city side 6-4. Said Ries, "It was just a matter of me being in the right place at the right time."

Tim Anderson set up the try by Ries with a grub kick while he (Anderson) was running the ball. A grub kick is a short kick on the ground. The idea behind the kick is to advance the ball a short distance, hoping that your team can regain possesion of the ball.

> "If Cal's foot would have been drinking Saturday, we would have lost
> —John Wangen"

The grub kick trickled into the try zone and Ries smothered the ball for the try and four points. Anderson then made the all important conversion kick, giving the Centaurs a 6-0 lead.

Player John Wangen said of Andersons' conversion kick, "Everybody played hung over as hell from our rugby party Saturday, but if Cal's (Anderson's) foot would have been drinking Saturday, we would have lost."

Neither team could mount a serious scoring threat before the half ended. Play by both teams started to get rough and numerous penalties were called on both teams, although fewer of these penalties were called on the Centaurs than in previous weeks.

One of the goals of the Centaurs this season, besides cutting down on penalties, is to work new players into the "A" side line up. One of these new players, Brian Hess said, "I could really tell that there is a difference in the experience level between "A" side and "B" side matches."

In the second half, Bloomington mounted an offensive into the Stout zone. Bloomington's deep penetration was aided by consecutive penalties that were called on the Stout ruggers. Due to these penalties, Bloomington was able to score an easy try. The conversion kick was missed and the Centaurs had a 6-4 lead.

Later in the second half, Centaur player Earl Radonski had to leave the match due to leg cramps and he was replaced by Brian La Freniere. The Centaurs then finished the half to gain the victory 6-4 and they improved their record to 3 wins against no defeats.

Next Saturday the Stout ruggers will face Northern Michigan University at 1 p.m. at River Heights school. Player Mike Hackworthy said, "I think that we can kick their butts." Last fall, the Centaurs defeated NMU 14-9.

Get in shape for the beaches with aerobics

by April Whitney

Does fitness and good health interest you? If so, how about parading around on the beaches this summer with self co n fidence? Aerobics might just be for you.

Many people at Stout stay in shape by doing aerobics. It is one of those exercise programs that is good for many different systems of the body. Aerobic exercise improves endurance and is excellent for the cardio-vascular system. It gets the blood flowing, increases oxygen intake and improves ones mental well being.

Tami Berique and Mary Malloy aerobicise to stay in shape. They are concerned with physical fitness and feel it is very important to health and a long life.

Berique is an aerobic instructor here at Stout who feels a sense of "responsibility" in showing up at all practices. It keeps her involved and relieves her of her school work. "It's my way of getting away from the pressures of being a student." said Berique.

Mary Malloy is one of the aerobic participants and sometimes helps instruct the class. She enjoys aerobics because she can stay in really good shape throughout the year.

"Aerobic exercise helps you learn the responsibilities of developing good eating habits. Although you gain a little weight from aerobics, it is all muscle weight instead of fat, and that is a good feeling knowing that you are developing muscle and toning your body," said Malloy.

> "It's my way of getting away from the pressures of being a student
> —Tami Berique"

Berique and Malloy really enjoy aerobics but both agree that it is not fair to the students that the new field house does not have a proposal for an aerobics room on their agenda until 1991.

The aerobics class is in the commons and the floor is concrete. Shin splints are one of the drawbacks of working out in the commons. "It's just not fair that the students who aerobicize get the worst facilities avaliable for such an exercise," replied both Mallot and Berique.

Aerobics is becoming a very popular form of exercise. The aerobics classes three years ago on campus were very small and not many people were interested in aerobic exercise. Within the past 3 years, the program is growing rapidly and there is a definite need for better facilities.

To get involved with aerobics, take note of the pamphlets and posters that are posted throughout the year. The classes fill up quite quickly but are generally offered each semester for a five week period.

Register for them early, next fall will be the next chance to participate. Remember, the benefits of cardio-vascular endurance and doing something for yourself for a change and not for some instructor or class. Aerobics is a great exercise program and it makes you feel good about you.

Staying in shape by pumping iron at Stout

by April Whitney

Did you ever think that a health craze would flurish throughout this country? Students in college, high school and many families, are working out, trying to form the perfect body. One of the most popular forms of exercise in the 80's is lifting weights.

> "Body building relieves a lot of stress, I meet many new people.
> —Tim Kinney"

Stout students spend most of their Thursday evenings hopping from the Marion to the Meet Market then eventually the Tap. Well, the next time you venture into the Marion take a look at the massive pectoral muscles on Tim Kinney, Marion bouncer.

Kinney spends just about every day at the field house preparing for competitions. He plans on competing in the Mr. Madison body building contest next week in Madison and later, the Mr. Collegiate U.S.A.

Kinney has competed in other contests before, taking first place in the Mr. Four Lakes contest. He says, "Body building relieves a lot of stress, I meet many new people, and it is a hobby for me here at Stout."

Women body building is becoming the "in" thing to do for women in this decade. Kinney thinks that it is just great and says it really takes away from the stereo typing of body building as being just a man's sport.

Lifting weights and body building is very popular here at Stout and new faces can be found in the field house throughout the school year. Kinney feels that Stout needs to improve the size of the field house and its equipment in order to get more people interested in the sport.

Many television news stations are promoting good health these days, so why not come on down to the field house and work out, one just might meet the man or lady of their dreams and improve their physical image at the same time.

by Paul Emerson

While having won three straight matches on the weekend heading into Sunday's match, Stout saved their best tennis for last, and beat the number four nationally ranked Gusties of Gustavus Adolphus (Minnesota), by a narrow 5-4 margin.

"Our win over Gustavus is another historic victory in the Blue Devils strong tennis program," exclaimed an elated head men's tennis coach, Bob Smith. "It has to rank as our biggest Division III victory ever," added Smith.

"One of our team goals this year was to defeat the Gusties. They have had one of the best small college programs in the country for the past two decades," stated Smith.

The Gusties have won 15 MIAC Championships, thirteen District 13 championships, and two national championships in Coach Steve Wilkinson's 17 year tenure at Gustavus Adolphus.

The netters won four of the six singles matches, all in straight sets. John Leehy convincingly won his number one singles match, 6-0, 6-1.

Stout 8, River Falls 1

Stout first took on UW-River Falls last Thursday in River Falls, and although head coach Bob Smith gave his number one and number two singles players John Leehy and Tony Snoeyenbos the day off, the netters still won the match by an 8-1 margin.

> "Our win over Gustavus is another historic victory in the Blue Devils strong tennis program

> —Coach Smith"

The netter's eight victories were all decided in straight sets. In singles play, (one through five spots), Mark Paine, Mike Friedman, Tony Pheifer, Bill Johnson, and Todd Trabant all posted wins.

Troy Kelly playing in the number six singles spot, won the first set of his match, 6-3, but lost the next two sets by identical 7-6 scores.

Then in doubles action, Paine/Friedman, Pheifer/Trabant, and Johnson and Gerald Silhol all won their matches in straight sets.

Stout 7, St. Thomas 2

Then on Saturday, Stout hosted highly regarded St. Thomas from Minnesota in the first of two matches on the day, and won this match by a comfortable 7-2 margin.

"St. Thomas has an outstanding squad. They are ranked in the top 20 nationally," said Smith who added that, "We played very well, I hope we can play this well tomorrow against Gustavus Adolphus."

Winning in singles play in straight sets were (one through four spots), John Leehy, Tony Snoeyenbos, Mark Paine, and Mark Friedman.

Number five singles player Tony Pheifer had to come from behind to win his match. Pheifer lost the first set, 3-6, but took the next two sets 6-3,6-3, to take the match.

Friedman/Snoeyenbos, and Leehy/Paine posted Stout's two other victories in doubles action.

Stout 9, La Crosse 0

In the second match on Saturday, the netters hosted UW-La Crosse, and play was forced indoors due to the rain. The number one and two singles matches were played in the Johnson Fieldhouse, while the rest of the matches were played at Menomonie High School.

Stout overpowered the Indians in the match by winning eight of the nine matches (five singles and three doubles), in straight sets while blanking La Crosse, 9-0.

In singles action, Snoeyenbos, Leehy, Paine, Friedman, Pheifer, and Johnson all posted wins for Stout. While Friedman/Snoeyenbos, Paine/Leehy, and Pheifer/Johnson all teamed up to take wins in the doubles action.

After a scheduled match Wednesday (15th) against archrival UW-Eau Claire, the netters will host two matches Friday afternoon. The first will be against UW-Oshkosh at 12 noon, and then at 3 p.m. against UW-Stevens Point.

Then on Saturday (18th), Stout will host Ripon College at 9 a.m., and St. Olaf at 3 p.m. Everyone is invited and encouraged to come and watch the netters in action this weekend.

Lady Devils finish third in meet

by Denise Cain

The Blue Devil Women Tracksters competed at the Winona State Quadrangular Meet April 11 against three other teams: Winona State, Luther College, and Dr. Martin Luther.

The women finished third overall with 36 team points. It was not a bad feat for the Lady Devils as the team consisted of only eleven participating individuals. Dr. Martin Luther won the meet with 69 points, Winona State followed with 63 team points, and Luther College placed behind UW-Stout with 33 points.

Highlights of the day included the relay events where the Stout women showed great improvement.

In the 4 x 100 meter relay, runners Liz Mostek, Maureen O'Neill, Kristin Mauk, and Michelle Ennis took 2.5 seconds off their time from the previous meet. Their time dropped from 56.1 seconds to 53.6 seconds enabling them to place third overall.

The Stout mile relay team, consisting of Beth Claas, Kristin Mauk, Lisa Heimmerman, and Janet Turowski won the event with a time of 4 minutes, 17.1 seconds. It was an exceptional run for the women who dropped their time by twelve seconds from last week's meet.

Individually, Lisa Heimmerman had another fine day as she ran the 800 meter run in a time of 2 minutes, 22 seconds.

Long Distance Coach Lou Klitzke noted that Heimmerman is doing very well. He stated, "Lisa is building confidence in herself, in her running and in her training program. She has potential to be a very good half miler."

Heimmerman commented that part of her success is the result of better attitude. She added, "I have people to run with which has given me a more positive attitude."

Beth Claas, a freshman from Lake Mills, Wis. had three first places at the Winona meet. With a time of 16.7 seconds she placed first in the 100 meter hurdles, first in the 300 meter hurdles in a time of 47.7 seconds and participated in the first place finish of the mile relay.

Head Women's Coach John Miller said that Claas is a very hard worker. Miller added, "If Beth continues to improve, she will be one of the better hurdlers in the conference."

When asked why she felt the women's team did so much better this week, Beth Class answered, "Our workouts last week were extremely hard. It helped to build the team spirit. We also wanted to make a good impression on the other teams with our small team."

In the 400 meter dash three finished strong. Janet Turowski placed second with a time of 63.6 seconds. Maureen O'Neill, in a time of 64.0 seconds, came in third, and Michelle Ennis finished fourth with a time of 65.2 seconds.

In the field, Barb Peterson had a personal best as she leaped five feet in the high jump enabling her to take home second place honors. Renee Leffel took second in the shot as she had a 36 foot, 8.5 inch toss.

Next meet for women includes the La Crosse Invite April 18, hosted by UW-La Crosse.

Softball, it's as American as apple pie

by John Pelishek

What is fun, does not cost a lot, everyone gets involved and is as American as apple pie? Softball, and it is that time of year. There are 24 leagues averaging 4 teams per league who play in the late afternoons Mondays through Thursday. Intramural softball started April 6th and will last 4 weeks before a single elimination playoff tournament on May 4th, composed of the top teams of each league, is played.

There are 3 different types of teams, Mens, Womens, Co-ed. They can be joined at different competition levels; Division I for the more skilled Division II for intermediates and Division III for beginners.

The leagues play at beautiful Wakanda and River Heights parks at 4, 5 and 6 p.m.

People play mainly for recreation and to have a good time.

Scott Dietz, who plays in the Men's Division III league on Wednesday nights said, "I play softball because I love the game and it's good to get away from school."

"I've seen a flyer around school and got our team together. It's a good program and a fun way to get to know other people," said Sandy Mahoney of the Women's Division I & II league that plays on Thursday at 6 p.m. at River Heights park.

Tim Busse, who's team Night Court got its name from living across the court house said, "I love the game and being in a Co-ed league you get to meet some girls." His team plays in the Division II Co-rec softball league at Wakanda Park.

Softball teams are formed by having a minimum of 8 players per team along with a $10 deposit. Sign up is in March.

The leagues are supervised by Robert Klemm of the Intramural office and any questions pertaining to intramurals can be answered by calling 232-1392.

Intramural sports is for everyone with different activities and leagues from baseball to volleyball. Information and sign up sheets can be found at the fieldhouse.

Jogging tones muscle, maintains weight

by Cosmas A. Whitten

Just about anyone at any age can enjoy jogging and its benefits. Jogging, like any exercise, makes a person feel better about themselves. Jogging helps a person maintain "proper" weight and have better muscle tone and cardiovascular endurance.

In order to successfully begin a jogging ritual one needs to be aware of what is involved. Like any sport, jogging has its rules. Benefits and drawbacks of jogging must be determined and weighed against each other remembering however, that jogging can be a safe, beneficial and yes, enjoyable sport if DONE PROPERLY.

Jogging improves cardiopulmonary health by conditioning the heart to pump a greater amount of blood with each beat. The lungs develop greater oxygen capacity and is believed to improve the ability to process and supply oxygen to all body tissues.

Circulation improves as extra capillaries develop to supply blood to exercising muscles. A regular jogging ritual along with a sensible low-fat diet reduces the cholesterol level in the blood.

It is advised that any person over the age of 30 visit a doctor beore beginning a vigorous exercise program such as jogging. A person under 30 should check with a doctor if they have any of the following problems: Cardiac conditions, high blood pressure, a weight problem, heavy smoker, diabetes, high cholesterol level, bothered by breathing difficulties, irregular pulse, joint or back problems.

Besides a running surface, the only equipment needed to jog are clothing and shoes. Clothing should be loose and comfortable, a runner should be able to move with ease. Clothing such as sweat pants and jackets, shorts and T-shirts are recommended (walk-man is optional).

When selecting a shoe, Jeff Hastings, owner of Sports Shack located in the Thunderbird Mall says, "Look for a shoe with enough cushion and support to not hurt the ankles and knees."

According to Hastings, the most popular running shoes are; New Balance, Nike, and Saucony. Average prices for a good pair of shoes start at $35 and go up to $130.

"Never run too far too fast. Always listen to your body —Mike Ramaeker"

The Sports Shack has trained personnel on hand who are experienced and willing to help with shoe selection. "They need to know about it to help customers out who don't know so much," said Hastings.

To avoid a jogging injury always stretch before and after jogging. Never jog while recovering from illness or experiencing a fever. Jogging is best done in mornings or evenings to avoid hot and humid weather.

According to Stout Athletic Trainer Mike Ramaeker, the most common jogging injuries are overuse injuries such as tendenitis or enthesistic which is the irritation of the muscle which originates by the bone. Enthesistis is a form of "shin splints."

Ramaeker said that overuse injuries are common in people who have biomechanically unsound feet; feet are unable to dissipate.

Upon impact with the ground, a foot takes the load of 5-8 times a person's body weight. There are two ways to dissipate this load.

According to Ramaeker, the first way to dissipate the load is through the arch of a foot. Upon impact an arch flattens out and then springs back, absorbing energy of the impact.

The second way to dissipate a load is through the bodies muscles. Once a person's endurance is spent, the muscles lose much of their ability to absorb the energy of the impact.

There are many warning signs of biomechanically unsound feet. The most common is a large calloused area on the ball of the foot, although all pain in the feet could most likely be warning signs. Biomechanically unsound feet are easily correctable with the use of orthodict inserts.

Ramaeker warned of various training errors such as running on concrete or hard surfaces. Soft surfaces dissipate load more effectively. Stay away from crowned roads(embankments) and avoid excessive hill running because it may cause back problems.

"Never run too far too fast. Always listen to your body," said Ramaeker, who warned that after the first day of running a stiff sore body is telling you something; it is not ready to run.

Ramaeker advised that an alternate activity such as swimming or walking may be done until stiffness is worked out but most importantly Ramaeker said, "Running has to be enjoyable."

MADD president speaks on OWI laws

by Jill Huppert

The "sobering consequences" of Wisconsin's newly revised Operating While Intoxicated (OWI) laws were brought to light last Wednesday night.

The laws were explained by Gail Russo, president of the Northern Wisconsin Chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Drivers (MADD).

Students Understanding Drinking Sensibly, (SUDS) sponsored the event.

"The problem of drunk driving is horrendous," said Russo, "we tolerate OWI offenders because that is the way our society parties."

The United States is lenient in drunk driving laws compared to other countries, Russo said. "But the American public is tired of tolerating drunk drivers."

State fines for OWI are increasing and Russo expects penalties will continue to increase.

The current penalty in Wisconsin for the first OWI conviction is a $150-$300 fine, $200 surcharge, $50 assessment fee, $50-$100 group dynamics fee, six month revocation of driver's license, and 20 hours of community service. An OWI conviction also immediately doubles your insurance premium, Russo said.

Fines in Minnesota are generally lower than in Wisconsin, but Minnesota is currently trying to equal it out, Russo said.

> "...it only takes one drink and a car to make a drunk driver —Gail Russo of MADD"

If a Minnesota resident breaks an OWI law in Wisconsin, it will be considered an offense by Minnesota, and will be transferred on to their driving record. Wisconsin does not have this same policy, Russo said.

"Alcohol is a speedy and deliberate drug," Russo said, "it only takes one drink and a car to make a drunk driver."

For younger people, "the chances of having an accident are great anyway, add alcohol and the chances are slim that you'll get away with it," Russo said.

The fines for those providing alcohol to minors is $500 per underage drinker supplied. "If someone is hurt on the alcohol you provided," Russo said, "you are liable."

Despite publicity by SUDS, less than 25 students came to the Great Hall to hear Russo speak.

"I was really quite surprised at the low attendance," said Tracy O'Lear, member of SUDS, "we had excellent publicity."

"This is a tough topic to attract people to," said SUDS advisor, Ann Ramage. "Alcohol and drugs are controversial; maybe people don't want to hear it or deal with it," she said.

Ramage did not expect as much attendance for this speaker as at other SUDS events. "I think people who did come got a lot out of it," she said.

SUDS was founded in 1980, to encourage wise choice-making about drinking and responsible alcohol consumption. It sponsors educational programs and non-alcohol recreational alternatives for Stout students.

Stout professor named "Technical Teacher of the Year"

by Rose Shakal

Lee Smalley, Industrial and Marketing Education professor at UW-Stout, was pleasantly surprised to be named "Technical Teacher of the Year" by the International Technical Education Association.

The award is given each year to a deserving individual in the area of technical education.

Smalley said he was very surprised to get the award. He said it usually goes to people who are or have been officers or administrators in the organization. He has been neither.

Smalley, who has taught for 37 years, outlined four qualities that he feels may have helped him get the award.

Smalley said he's always been an early adopter of new ideas; he'll accept them and freely run with them.

An example of this is the Center for Future Studies, founded here at Stout, of which Smalley is the co-director.

Smalley helped to develop and implement the Center, which is the only one of its kind in Wisconsin, and one of a few in the nation.

Smalley also feels his confrontational style of lecturing, writing, and conversing is an asset to him and others.

"I like to ask questions and pose alternatives, and sort of act as the devil's advocate," Smalley stated.

"I can't agree with the students because then there is no thinking involved. I need to present material they haven't thought about," Smalley added.

A third point that Smalley brought up was that he has put a lot of time into his career. He said that he realizes that merely putting in time is a rather questionable attribute - the time must be efficiently spent in order to produce something.

"Even a blind pig will sooner or later pick up an acorn. If I put enough time in, I'm bound to do something eventually," Smalley jovially remarked.

> "I can't agree with students because then there is no thinking involved. —Prof. Lee Smalley"

Smalley is very dedicated to his work here at Stout and thinks of this as his second home.

Finally, Smalley mentioned that he has edited many books and reports, and has served on several committees.

Smalley also has done and continues to do many presentations and lectures at state and national organizations.

"Hopefully, I have something to say to people in a variety of areas," Smalley commented.

Smalley considers himself to be an expert on the future. Everything has a future, Smalley explained.

A reception was held for him in the Maplewood and Oakwood rooms of the Student Center last Wednesday.

"Dr. Smalley is a very efficient teacher and always presents the material in an interesting way - I really like him," said a student who attended the dedication.

"Dr. Smalley is a very deserving person to get the award; he's also well known nationally," said Armand Hofer, materials and processes professor.

Murder charge update

Alvin Taylor, recently charged on two counts of first-degree murder, waived his right to a preliminary hearing in both Eau Claire and Menomonie. The Menomonie charge involves the murder of Timothy Hayden, former custodian at UW-Stout.

At his arraignment on Wednesday, Taylor pleaded not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect.

Motions involving the trial are being held on April 23 and May 15. Taylor demanded a speedy trial, which means that, if indicted, the proceedings would have to begin by July 22.

Construction Assoc. builds on experience

by Jill Huppert

Building a two car garage for Don Chatman, associate dean of the school of industry and technology, is the latest project of the Student Construction Association (SCA).

Members of the SCA, a club for Industrial Technology majors with a Building Construction concentration, are finding their own on-the-job training through construction projects in the club.

They began work on Dean Chatman's garage early in April and plan to complete it by the end of the school year.

The garage, like their other projects, is constructed completely by club members "from design to building" said SCA President, Jerry Shea.

The garage will be the biggest project for the SCA this year. Other past projects have included storage buildings, additions, interior remodeling, and reshingling houses. They have completed over ten projects this year.

Through this club, members get "the experience that you just can't get through books," said Dean Kauthen, SCA member. "It's not theoretical, it's practical," he said.

> "Industry doesn't go through career placement and interview on campus for our major."
> —Jerry Shea

Club members feel this practical experience will be an advantage for getting jobs after graduation.

"Industry doesn't go through career placement and interview on campus for our major," we have to do things for ourselves, Shea said.

The SCA has started publishing two newsletters each year about their club and activities, which they mail to industry and Stout alumni.

They have also put together a book of their resumes which they mail out to different contractors. "We've received a lot of favorable comments from people in the industry" about the resume book, Shea said.

The SCA is a self-supporting group. They do their own fund raisers and make contacts with the industry to get supplies needed for their projects.

The SCA has existed for about 15 years at Stout, but it was not until this school year that the club became very active.

"Our newly elected executive board just decided it was time to start doing something," Shea said "we wanted to increase membership, responsibilities, and projects."

In addition to construction projects, the SCA sponsors social events and field trips to the industry. They currently have 60 members.

Stout to host two day conference on "Early Childhood Education"

by Julie K. Ragatz

An Early Childhood Education Conference is to be held here at UW-Stout on Friday and Saturday, April 24 and 25, beginning at 9 a.m. on Friday morning.

The theme of this year's conference is "Curriculum: The Key to Quality," and there will be programs in both the Student Center and the Home Economics building.

Judy Herr, Director of the Child and Family Study Center, says the program has broad goals. In addition to being a good recruiting tool for UW-Stout, it also allows the faculty to share their expertise and provides a good basis for staff development.

Herr stated that "the conference was especially designed to provide an opportunity for updating and being refreshed, for gaining and sharing knowledge, and for renewing our commitment to the education of young children."

The program is basically designed for teachers of daycare, kindergarten and pre-school, and they come from Wisconsin as well as a number of surrounding states.

"We have the opportunity to examine the issues facing early childhood education, to discuss ways of resolving those issues, and to make plans for improving the quality of lives of young children in our classrooms, in the community, and in the nation," said Herr.

Herr commented that it is through programs like this that Wisconsin maintains its excellent educational opportunities for children.

Herr said, "The opportunity to share ideas, insights, and concerns with professionals from several states enriches all of our programs."

The two day conference will include about 150 representatives who will present a variety of topics of interest to early childhood educators.

> "We have the opportunity to examine the issues facing early childhood education."
> —Judy Herr

There are a total of 83 speakers from throughout the midwest, as well as one from Mold, Wales.

Presenters will offer individual sessions on a wide range of topics for those with special interests.

Many exhibitors will be on hand to show new products, educational equipment, and also educational methods for children.

In addition, there will be keynote presentations on each day.

On Friday, Tom Pease, a children's entertainer, will have a presentation in the Great Hall at 11:40 a.m. Also on Friday, Sharon Lynn Kagan, director of early childhood education in the New York City mayor's office, will present a speech entitled "Early Childhood: New Directions and Future Possibilities" in the Great Hall at 2 p.m.

Saturday's presentation will be made by Wilma Stutheit, an associate professor of early childhood education at Kearney State College in Nebraska. Her presentation will be called "The Art of Puppetry" and will be held at noon in the Great Hall.

This is the 9th annual conference, and the 7th to be held here at Stout.

A planning committee, consisting of the Child and Family Study Center staff and representatives from Head Start, the Vocational School, and others, put in many hours of work to make this year's program a success.

The 10th annual conference, set for next year again at Stout, is already in the works. A big celebration is being planned in honor of the event.

It is hoped that the Early Childhood Conference will be held at Stout every year.

Some additional sponsors include the Wisconsin Early Childhood Association; the department of human development, family living and community educational services; the School of Home Economics; and the Office of Continuing Education and Summer Session.

Architecture conference to give "presence to past"

by Mary Raymond

"Giving Presence to the Past," is the title of a conference focusing on the preservation and adaptive reuse of historic architecture.

The conference is being sponsored by the UW-Stout student chapter of the American Society of Interior Designers (ASID). The conference begins on April 23 and runs through April 25.

According to Karen Johnson, ASID President for the Stout Student Chapter, the conference "aims to educate students, professionals, and members of the Menomonie community about the importance and significance of historic architecture."

Lectures will be given by noted authorities and tours of Menomonie buildings recently placed on the National Register of Historic Places will be given in order to communicate the importance of preserving landmarks and retaining their character, Johnson said

Tari Rayala, public relations representative for the conference, believes "restoration is a popular topic of interest, especially in architecture and interior design fields," and feels the conference will give the students and residents of Menomonie an opportunity to recognize the city's historical sites.

Due to this renewed interest and popularity in historical landmarks, ASID, in conjunction with the Stout Art Department, had decided to repeat the conference which was initially offered in 1980.

Using the same title and focusing on similar topics, the conference will begin on Thursday with a full day of ASID Student Chapter Midwest Regional Officers meetings.

The conference will continue on Friday at the Mabel Tainter Memorial Theater. Lectures given by keynote and guest speakers will be followed by a Menomonie Design Proposal presentation and tours of the Mabel Tainter theater and the downtown historic district. A wine and cheese social will cap the day's events.

"A unique aspect of the conference," commented Gina Nepper, committee advisor for the conference, "is the Continuing Education Unit (CEU) which will be offered on Saturday both in Bowman Hall and at the Mabel Tainter."

The CEU at Tainter will feature local residents who have done restoration on homes and other architecture in Eau Claire and Menomonie.

With the assistance of Harold Newton, ASID faculty advisor for the Stout chapter, the committee has invited three outstanding speakers with past and/or present ASID involvement to participate in the Continuing Education Unit.

Keynote speaker will be Gary Wheeler, of Wheeler and Hildebrandt of Minneapolis.

One of Saturday's guest speakers is Peggy Gustave, a recognized authority on historic preservation, who also served as national historic preservation chairman 1984-86. Gustave will speak on the economics of preservation.

Also speaking Saturday will be Paula DiSalvo, a design consultant for the Tennesee Mainstreet program in Nashville. DiSalvo is past president of ASID and a graduate of Stout. The topic of her presentation is design consultation.

The conference is being jointly funded through the Stout Student Assocation, ASID student membership fees, and registration fees charged for the conference itself, charged to professionals from the Midwest chapter of ASID.

"All monies," Johnson added, "will be used to send this year's president of the Stout Chapter of ASID to the national conference in Toronto, Canada."

The conference is open to the public and free of charge to students, faculty and the Menomonie community.

For further information and a brochure outlining the conference agenda, brochures are available in the Art Office located on the third floor of the Applied Arts Building.

Student designers to sell work in retail shop on campus

by Tracy Lea Landis

Students of apparel design and manufacture are marketing their work on campus through a student operated retail shop on the third floor of the Home Economics building.

Three apparel design students on the UW-Stout campus are selling their work in the shop called Niche II. Pamela Schultz, Chantel Mari and Natalie Retzlaff are currently showing work there.

Niche II is selling garments for the designers on consignment as part of a change in its pricing and stocking policy.

> "It's a kind of alternative if you don't wish to do a co-op or internship.
> —Kari Requa"

"We've changed our image," said Julie Strandt of the new marketing strategy. Strandt is acting as the store manager for this spring semester's Niche II practicum course.

The Niche II practicum course is a senior level practicum for students of fashion merchandising.

"It's kind of an alternative if you don't wish to do a coop or internship," said Kari Requa, who is working in the advertising division of the retail operation.

The class divides the labor of running the Niche into four divisions: advertising, merchandise control, store management and buying.

Together the students in these groups handle the marketing of about $1,000 worth of merchandise per month, according to Strandt.

The decision to carry designer fashions was part of a change of marketing focus, Strandt said.

"We've got a definite theme and we're only handling accessories," said Strandt. She added that prices for those accessories were to be under $20.

When management at the Niche II saw how much sales space was left with accessories alone on the shelves, Strandt explained, the idea of consigning designers' work through the store was brought up.

One of Retzlaff's fashions on sale at the Niche II is a lace-lined denim skirt, designed to be worn down or buttoned up in front.

"I like the idea of being able to wear something different ways so it doesn't look the same every time you wear it," Retzlaff said.

Saying that the idea to sell designers' work should be continued, Retzlaff added, "you learn what mass production is about."

Deadlines, merchandising, machines, pricing and material costs are all aspects of consignment that students could learn about while participating in the program, said Retzlaff. "Because we don't have to take merchandising classes," Retzlaff said, "nothing else is so educational."

Retzlaff said, however, that she would like to sell one-of-a-kind pieces, rather than a set of sized garments.

Retzlaff also said that the 50 percent markup that the Niche II takes of the price marked on her work cause her to charge too much for her wares.

"I can understand taking a 50 percent markup on merchandise already purchased," Retzlaff said, "but not on merchandise consigned to them."

Designers who create garments for the Niche are offered one credit for the experience.

Consumer Protection

Senator James E. Harsdorf (R-Beldenville) was recently asked to serve on a panel to study Wisconsin's experience with the regulation of pesticides and to evaluate current method of monitoring pesticide use.

The panel was created during the last legislative session by the State Department of Agriculture, Trade and Consumer Protection.

Under the authority of Wisconsin's comprehensive groundwater law, the Department of Natural Resources is in the process of developing standards for the allowable levels of certain pesticides in Wisconsin's groundwater.

The standards will be based on calculations of potential health risks at various levels of presence of certain chemical compounds.

The Department of Agriculture, Trade and Consumer Protection will be responsible for monitoring and enforcing these standards

As the potential enforcement system now stands, it is very likely that once a standard level has been surpassed at one site, a strict limitation or a complete ban may be enforced for a wide area where the chemical compound is in use.

Gambling developments

Now that the two resolutions concerning gambling have received statewide support, the next step of the process calls for the Legislature to develop and adopt enabling legislation.

It is estimated that this process will take six to eight months for the lottery and slightly longer for parimutuel betting.

Richard Shoemaker, representative from Menomonie, will chair the committee to develop the implementation legislation for parimutuel betting.

The issues cover a broad spectrum from general items like what or how a Gaming and/or Racing Commission might operate to how old participants must be to play, said Shoemaker.

In the coming months, there will be working sessions by the committee, technical advisory groups developed on various aspects of both lottery and pari-mutuel betting, public hearings, and much debate about operation of the two, Shoemaker said.

In the Assembly, a special committee chaired by Representative Dismas Becker of Milwaukee, will address the lottery. Becker has indicated that his efforts will be toward developing the best possible implementation legislation as quickly as possible.

Shoemaker welcomes comments about these and other issues. Contact him at 112 West, State Capitol, Box 8953, Madison, WI 53708 or call the Legislative Hotline at 1-800--362-9696.

Motion for use of unfinished area passed

by Gretchen Eke

The Stout Student Association (SSA) passed a motion by a 15-10 vote to support a proposal, made by the Student Center Advisory Committee, which outlines the planned uses for the unfinished area beneath the Great Hall.

According to the proposal, the multi-activity area will have a "club" atmosphere conductive to socialization. Limited food and nonalcoholic beverages will be available on a regular basis.

The student organizations area will provide workstations and records storage for the 140 recognized student organizations on campus.

The need for a publications area arose out of the Stoutonia's shortage of space, and because the Tower yearbook has no permanently assigned space.

Also included in the proposal are plans for an exhibit area, a group study lounge, general storage space and a TV lounge.

According to Bob Johnson, director of the Student Center, the completion of the work outlined on the proposal is budgeted for 1990-91, and is expected to cost approximately $850,000.

Concerns were brought out before voting that the students should be able to voice their opinions as to how the area should be utilized.

A formal study should be done to allow the students to voice their opinions on this issue, said Todd Nelson, senator and newly elected vice president of financial affairs.

"Don't pass something of this magnitude in one night--the night you first hear about it," President Paul Nelson told the senators. "If you approve it tonight, you can't assume that you will ever have the chance to have input again," Nelson added.

"The majority of the representation in this committee are students," Vice-President of Academic Affairs Julie Weiss said in support of voting immediately. "The results of a study would duplicate what we saw tonight."

"We need to trust the committee that has studied it for two years," Vice-President of Legislative Affairs Mark Nickels said.

A motion failed to table the vote for one week to allow the senators to research it more before voting.

In other business, President Nelson relayed Chancellor Robert Swanson's ruling on the SSA's request for student representation on the Positive Action Committee.

In a letter written to Susan Nurrenburn, chair of the faculty senate, Chancellor Swanson stated that he favored the presence of a student on Positive Action Committees dealing with student complaints against faculty members.

President Nelson also announced that Minority Affairs Senator Adesola Adisa, who resigned during last week's meeting, asked Nelson not to accept his resignation.

Misinformation policy promotes ignorance

It is fitting that the term misinformation is misleading.

Misinformation by the U.S., that's us, is exactly the same as the propaganda which the U.S. complains our opponents, that's them, use against us. Misinformation is a much nicer word than either propaganda or lying and let's face it, when we are misled by our own government it's for a good cause.

We like the refreshing euphemism, "misinformation," used by our leaders so they might facilitate our learning that the ends do indeed justify the means. It is only when neither the ends nor the means can be justified, such as occurred during our involvement in Vietnam yesterday and in Nicaragua today, that our government lacks excuses for the atrocities it has committed.

Our involvement in Nicaragua today is best defended by the need for defense jobs in America and a way to unload old weapons from the massive inventory which has built up through the years.

Our ability to destroy the world is unquestionable. The problem with continually investing in enhancing our capacity for destroying the world is the fact that the investment never pays off unless we destroy the world. Between us and them, we spend $43 billion, that's $43,000,000,000, each year to ensure that we can blow each other to smithereens better than ever before.

Observing the economy's marvelous growth, it is clear that spending $43 billion annually on capital investment, improving the schools, or improving medical technology would be a waste. Why hope for any improvements when the majority of college students can read but cannot fully comprehend what they have just read?

A government which stresses the passing on of misinformation to achieve its ends is a government which endorses shared ignorance among its constituency.

Seeds of Change

Ask the Preacher!

Gene Emahiser

Over the past year, I have been asked many questions about my preaching and writing. Some of them are of general interest, so I thought that I would answer them here. (By the way, please feel free to send any questions that you might have for me to the Stoutonia office.

Have you always felt this way about God and Church?

No. I had the same type of childhood that most people had. I went to church and Sunday school with my family. I learned about God and the Bible, but it was about as real to me as the Easter bunny. When I found out that the Easter bunny was a myth, I deduced that God also must be a myth.

I took the same path that every teenager takes, rebellion. I was into fast cars, fast women, and fast times. I stayed in the fast lane to nowhere for about 3 1/2 years. Then, at the age of 19 God saved me out of that sure path to hell. I had finally reached the end of my rope emotionally, physically, and spiritually.

God revealed himself to me in such a way that I was forever changed. I found out that God is not a myth, as I had previously thought. No, God was definitely for real. God introduced me to the reality of living in tune with the creator of the universe.

When I started to see what God was doing in me and through me, I had to start letting other people know just how great God really is. The more I shared what I had with others, the more God would do in my life.

At first, I would share one on one with the people that lived on my dorm floor. After a while, I could approach people out on campus that I had never even met before. Not very long after that, I could lead a Bible study of a half dozen people.

Finally, this past fall, God gave me the ability to proclaim His goodness to the public. While preaching open air, I sometimes would be able to speak to as many as 100 people at a time.

Where or how did you get the confidence to be able to stand up and preach in public?

The boldness that I have comes from God, and God alone. My natural being is scared stiff to speak in front of five people, but when the spirit of God comes upon me, I could speak in front of thousands if God asked me to.

The first time I spoke open air, I made three or four passes by the pillars, afraid to actually get up on one. Finally, I stepped out in obedience to God. I figured, if He wanted me to preach, He would give me the power to do it and put the words to say in my mouth.

The very second that I stood up on that pillar, I felt the presence of God come upon me like I had never felt before. God's Holy Spirit was all over me. I knew that He was there with me, giving me the words to say and the volume to make sure they got heard.

Without God, I can do nothing, but "I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me."

Philippians 4:13

Why are you so critical of everybody and what they do?

I understand that many times people interpret my strong, aggressive stand as being critical. I don't mean to come across sounding like I find fault with everyone other than myself.

When I go looking for fault, my first stop is right at home. ME. I start there so that I make sure that my heart is right. I want to be sure that I say things for the right reasons.

Christians need to be more critical of themselves. It is better that we help each other to stay above reproach rather than let some unscrupulous loudmouth find our hidden sins. If we don't keep each other in order, the unbelievers will scoff and ridicule God because of our inconsistency.

Paul wrote the Romans and warned them of consequences of living inconsistent lives.

"The name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles because of you"

Romans 2:24

We would do very well to take Paul's words to heart.

Don't you think that you scare more people away from God than you attract?

I don't think that I am scaring anyone away from the Gospel that wasn't already gone to begin with.

Much of what I say is either a paraphrase or a direct quote from the Bible. If hearing the word of God turns people off, that is between them and God. I have little to do with that.

Paul and the other first century radical Christians were all persecuted and mocked. Eleven of the 12 that Jesus sent out to preach the Good News were martyred. John was the only one to escape death (he some how lived through being boiled in oil).

These men must have been really turning people off. Jesus himself was crucified for preaching something that was very alarming and uncomfortable for the religious elite of that day to listen to.

Paul wanted Timothy to know that the life of a Christian would not and could not be a comfortable one.

"Indeed all who desire to live Godly in Jesus Christ will be persecuted."

II Timothy 3:12

Likewise today, I want people to know the full cost of being a Born-again Christian. No one should be mislead or deceived into thinking that they are in rightstanding with God if they are unwilling to let God free them of the sin in their lives.

Well, I am sure that there are more questions out there. Send them to me and I'll do the best I can to answer them. If you wish, you may remain anonymous.

Spotlight/ Dr. John B. Stevenson

Subject: The International Programs office and what it can do for students

by Judy Weitzer

Dr. John B. Stevenson Director of International Programs

The International Programs office is responsible for promoting opportunities for overseas studies for students, staff opportunities overseas and educational and cultural exchange between Stout and institutions in other countries. They also are involved in the development of cooperative and degree programs with other institutions.

The International Programs have been going on at Stout for quite some time on a smaller scale, but the office of International Programs was not established until July 1, 1981. At that point the University made a major commitment to international education.

The office currently offers study programs for students in in Edinborough, Scotland, Northeast Wales Institute of Higher Education (NEWI), University of Wales-Aberstywyth, University of Wales-Cardiff, Middlesex Polytechnic Institute, Middlesex, England, Monterrey Institute of Technology and Higher Studies, Monterrey, Mexico, and Kansai Gaidai Institution-University of Asian Studies in south Japan.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE THE CRITERIA FOR A STUDENT WISHING TO BECOME INVOLVED IN THE PROGRAM?

STEVENSON: The basic criteria for students studying overseas is interest, and the value that they think they will derive from an overseas experience. While you may not get coursework to meet specific degree requirements in your major, you will probably find courses that are related to your major, from which you'll gain experience that you won't get in courses here at UW-Stout. It is educationally enriching and a personal growth experience. If a student wants these, I feel we can accommodated them. There is also a minimum grade point of 2.0, and the bottom line is that the student has to be in good standing at Stout.

STOUTONIA: WHAT DO YOU FEEL IS SUFFICIENT LEAD TIME FOR GETTING INVOLVED IN THE PROGRAM?

STEVENSON: You'll find more general education kinds of coursework in the overseas programs. I advise students who are planning an overseas study to start planning early, to save their elective courses so that the coursework transfers and it won't slow them down in terms of completing their degree in 4 or 4 1/2 years. Once the decision has been made to study overseas, a student should plan about a year in advance to do it adequately.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE THE COSTS INVOLVED IN STUDENT OVERSEAS PROGRAMS?

STEVENSON: The office is stressing student exchange programs more than study abroad programs because they are cheaper. In that case, Stout students pay tuition here and the overseas student pays tuition at that particular institution, then they just trade places. With a study abroad program, the student is subject to the non-resident fee structure of that institution. A semester at NEWI would cost about $2300 for room, board, tuition and airfare; a semester in Edinborough would be about $2500, all inclusive. At Aberystwyth, a fee of about $7000 plus airfare includes a two week excursion to the common business centers of Europe, plus a diploma in international business.

STOUTONIA: WHAT IS THE CURRENT STATUS OF FACULTY EXCHANGE PROGRAMS?

STEVENSON: Right now, for example, we have a group of 26 educators from North Wales participating in the Wales Responsive Education Seminar. Developed in 1977, the seminar is now in its seventh year. We also work with institutions and agencies from other countries on projects in either research or areas where they would like to have some technical expertise from Stout. We call upon a staff with expertise to go over and help them solve technical, educational, and personnel management problems. The past two summers, five faculty members have gone to Saudi Arabia on a curriculum writing project.

STOUTONIA: ARE THERE ANY NEW DEVELOPMENTS IN THE AREA OF FACULTY EXCHANGE?

STEVENSON: One of the other areas that just opened up is that we have formal statements of agreement with two institutions in China, the Northwest Institute of Light Industry (NWILI) in Xain Yang and the Institute of Light Industry in Bei Jing, the capital of China. This year, Lou Moegenburg, professor and coordinator of the technical communications concentration of Graphic Arts, taught fall semester at NWILI. Janice Timmer, assistant professor of food and nutrition is teaching at NWILI this spring, Susan Thurin, associate professor of english, has spent the year in Bei Jing teaching English.

Five people from the Peoples Republic of China are here as students or as visiting scholars under the exchange agreement. A visiting scholar does research and teaching. It is somewhere between an instructional position and a graduate student. The visiting scholar may or may not be registered for classes, but may be auditing them in order to pick up expertise they feel is necessary.

Two visiting scholars are helping out in Mandarin Chinese language class, two other Chinese students are offering a cultural non-credit course for faculty and students in-

Corruption evident

There were two news articles this past week which I read that disturbed me. The first was a letter to Ann Landers by a woman who wrote about being raped by a date. This has become a serious problem in our society and I would guess also in our community.

The second was an AP story about a man who raped a 15-year-old girl, cut off her arms and left her on the road to die. The story hints that the man probably had a history of such abuse and a drinking problem. The man is being parolled "for good behavior" after serving 7-8 years of his sentence.

How long can we last as a society when we tolerate such behavior and lack of justice? It will not be the Russians who destroy us, we are destroying ourselves. Our society is rotting from within. We have openly promoted pornography and other things that corrupt society in the name of freedom; and have refused to punish the wicked in the name of enlightenment. It would be easy to say, "but it can't happen here, that happened in California." However, it could have happened here. We are seeing things like these happening in our own community. I encourage everyone who is upset about what is happening in our country to do three things.

PRAY. Pray that somehow we will wake up and turn back to Godly values; to the values that have built this country.

REPENT. We need to seriously ask ourselves whether we are part of the problem or part of the solution. Have we too been swept along with the flood of vulgarity and filth that pours forth from the TV so that we have become programmed to laugh at things that ought to make us blush?

DO SOMETHING. Stop being apathetic. Just because you cannot do something great is no reason for not doing something small. Things like these are happening in our own community. Just read the paper. We have allowed local businesses to rent X-rated videos that degrade and promote their being brutally-treated. Many of them suggest that women enjoy such treatment. We have allowed drug dealing and alcohol to be given to minors. We are now seeing the awful results of our neglect.

Bigger and better

Cosmas A. Whitten

Tomorrow will be here as fast as yesterday passed.

I remember every summer I would return home from school and work at McDonald's. There would always be new faces which I did not know. Only a few people knew that this was my fourth summer to work there.

I worked along side high school students and some soon-to-be freshmen in college. I always heard the same question asked of other employees, "Did you get it?" The employees even asked their friends who came in as customers, "Did you get it?"

I never knew what they were talking about until one day. I had just finished bagging an order for Tom, a fellow crew person. Tom was a very nice person and was going to be a high school Junior. Anyway, after I gave the customer their order Tom turned to me and asked, "Did you get it?"

I panicked, I thought I had forgotten to throw a hamburger in the customer's bag. "What?" I asked.

"Your driver's license," Tom replied.

I found that to be so funny since it seemed like decades since I had passed my driver's test. I remember turning 15 and being so excited because in one year a driver's license could be obtained. I remember at 15 trying to imagine what you would be doing when at your current age.

I suppose I am thinking about age because tomorrow I have to add on to my two digit number. The older we are the wiser we become. That is how the saying goes.

I will now share my great wisdom about aging with all...with every year we become bigger and better. At 16 it is a driver's license. At 17, a rated R movie may be viewed. An 18 year old can vote, leave home, and finally graduate high school.

Nineteen is the legal drinking age in some states (depending on birth date) and the last year to be a teenager. A 20-year-old is no longer a teenager. At 21, well you know. After 21 the only thing to look forward to is turning 25 so that car insurance rates will go down.

Besides, what can be gained by the number that tags how many years a person has existed, there are many other rewards to be had.

I always measure my success by looking back at where I once was. I remember the things I used to do and the thoughts I used to think. I am happy with the changes.

Currently, I see my column moving closer to the front page and the bottom line (Maybe I will receive fan mail now). I also see Sports Reporter Paul Emerson prepare to take over my position for next year.

With every year it is not just I who moves on to bigger and better things but everyone around me and that is a good thing to realize.

Bottom Line

Obnoxious entertainment

Rich Brueckner

"I may be drunk, madam, but tomorrow I'll be sober and you'll still be ugly."--Winston Churchill

The time has come to ask hard-hitting questions about what is entertaining and what is just plain obnoxious.

Take this column, for example. It is plain obnoxious; but that's all right if you find it entertaining.

Entertainment is a relative concept. Hell, Max Headroom made the cover of Newsweek.

Just listen to rap music. No one thought it could become any more obnoxious until the Beastie Boys arrived on the scene.

The Beastie Boys do some really obnoxious things in concert. They sing offensive songs, spray beer on the crowd, and simulate sexual acts. You know the next line; it's a lot like a rugby party.

The Boys recently changed their stage show because people were threatening to sue them for being obscene. Their shows no longer feature a 20-foot inflatable phallic symbol in the center of the stage.

Parents were upset that their 12-year-olds were paying money to see a big dick. "Stay home, kids," they said. "If that's what you want to see, Jerry Falwell is on every week for free."

There is a song they keep playing on WVSS that turns such college institutions as Reebok sneakers into obnoxious statements of conformity:

"I'm a lot like you. I own Reebok sneakers. I never miss Family Ties. I have my own VCR. I'm every parent's dream. I am a lot like you."

The obnoxious singer sounds like Gonzo on the Muppet Show. You'll laugh if you have any sense of humor at all.

Saturday is the best time to listen to WVSS. The townie high-schoolers take over and play the same obnoxious heavy metal tunes all day; I love it.

The era of obnoxious columns will come to an end very soon. Let's hope that it's not the end of entertaining one's too.

Cryptic Notes

The Main Attraction

Tim Hopkins

"Choose to be undecided on the topic about which many ignorant men are sure," Attorney Clarence Darrow.

I love bunnies, even dumb ones.

Out of my respect for God, whoever she is, I have stopped going to movies in which she does not have the lead role. As Gene Emahiser says, "God takes it very seriously when (s)he isn't the main attraction."

I also believe that UW-Stout has been forcing me to spit in the face of Jesus by making me worship the gods of Restaurant Operations' Management Sunday through Thursday night each week. Actually, I never worshipped Jesus to the extent that I adored his talented brother, Matty Alou, former outfielder with the Pittsburgh Pirates.

I do believe in brotherhood, but I cannot tolerate the thousands of secular humanists at Stout. I was so distraught at my hedonist roommate, Rich Brueckner's love for his six-week-old puppy that I nearly put the the S-O-B (the dog, not Rich) into a paper bag and drowned it.

The puppy lives, but only so long as our refrigerator remains stocked with fresh ground round, then it's into the Cuisinart.

Why are we here? The best response I have heard to that question was, "Because I have got nowhere else to go." This comment is attributed to an anonymous inebriant using the men's room at The Spot.

Okay. I admit it. I am a SECULAR HUMANIST. Fortunately, my REIGN OF ERROR at The Stoutonia ends next week. I am unaware of the religious beliefs of the incoming editor, Lisa Young, but if she can enjoy food and sex (not necessarily simultaneously) she too is a HUMANIST.

I repent. The Blue Devils made me do it. To achieve absolution I will use the politician's answer for any accusation, "I confess, he did it."

terested in learning about the culture of China.

STOUTONIA: WHAT IS THE BIGGEST PROBLEM YOUR OFFICE FACES?

STEVENSON: The biggest problem I've faced is that I don't know how to reach the students. We've had mass mailings, used the Stoutonia and other devices, but I've still had students come in and say this is the first they had ever heard about it. The best mode of information is from the students who have been there to come back and tell what a good experience they have had. The problem is, I need to communicate the overseas opportunities to a broad base of faculty and staff, not just one or two students at a time.

STOUTONIA: WHAT OTHER CHANGES ARE BEING MADE, OR WOULD YOU LIKE TO SEE MADE IN INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMMING?

STEVENSON: We've become involved in a self study; what is happening at Stout in terms of international education and what should we be doing as compared to what we are doing. The study will be used as a planning tool and has been underway for about two years. The results will probably come out before the end of the summer.

Brueckner's. This last one really takes the cake. What was the point he was attempting to make? If he was trying to justify his apparently juvenile, ridiculous and destructive behavior while residing in UW-Madison's residence halls by blaming an ineffective resident advisor, he failed to convince me.

Living in the halls on any campus is a privilege and can also be a growing, enriching experience for those students adult enough to enjoy and appreciate hall life. Aside from the extensive and effective national hall government system thousands of campuses (including Stout) and millions of students participate in and benefit from, living in the halls is a great way to make friends, keep up with current events on campus and enjoy hall activities and programs. Obviously Brueckner never benefitted from living in the halls because he had his head stuck in that "rat's asshole" he mentioned and never bothered to take a look around and get involved.

Grow up Brueckner! Your infantile, ignorant references to halls and RAs were bad enough, but joking about someone you disliked being killed is unforgivable. I am sure your last column has cost you even more readers than the others before it certainly have!

Sincerely,

Valerie Clark, Inter-Residence Hall Association Executive

One Point Perspective

Tell it like it is

Jean-Marie Dauplaise

"What do you mean?" is probably among the top ten Most Asked Questions in America. The reason for this being that many people don't actually say what they mean. More often, they say what they either think they should say, or what the person to whom they are speaking would like to hear.

For instance, Jane asks Sue, "Do you like my new sweater?" And Sue, conforming to the strictly ingrained principle of perpetual politeness, responds. "Yes. It's really cute. Where'd you get it?"

In actuality, she may really think Jane's sweater is gaggingly ugly, a bit too tight, and the lace collar and pink angora yarn are a bit too virginal for Jane. But of course she'd never say so.

The other day a friend of mine asked "How's it going?" (Also among the ten Most Asked Questions in America.) "Pretty bad," I said and proceeded to elaborate. The response to my pessimistic reply was, "Remind me never to ask you how things are going." Why ask if you don't want to know?

I'm not proposing that people should cease being polite, just that they be sincere about it if they're going to be. I, and I'm sure there are other perceptive individuals who will agree, can usually tell the difference between a sincere comment or question and the plastic Mom told me to say this version of the same wording.

For some reason, most men are far less adept at detecting insincere comments or flattery than are women. I've seen countless men brainwashed by cute girls spouting line after line of Male Ego Reinforcement. i.e. "Oooh, your car is soooo nice. Blaze orange is my favorite color." "Hahahahaha... you're sooo funny. I wish I were as funny as you."

Of course, there are also girls who become deaf, dumb, and blind at the sight of a football jacket, or any other sport for that matter.

Another realm in which many people don't say what they mean involves food. This is often due to guilt. After watching his wife spend several hours preparing a special dinner, would he Dare tell her he'd have preferred a Tombstone pizza? I think not.

Many females are notoriously guilty of either claiming to be not hungry, when actually they are famished, or claiming to be full when they've barely touched a thing.

I've seen women a good fifty pounds heavier than me eat a small lettuce salad, then say "I'm full." B.S. she is unless her stomach is the size of a small walnut. I'd rather see someone eat a decent meal than wonder if they have a bag of bite size Three Musketeers bars stashed in their purse to stave off hunger.

On the other end of the indulgence spectrum is the riotously drunk individual who, between falling on his/her friends and vomiting in the bathtub, will pause to inform the nearest person who'll listen, "I jus' had a few drinks. Yup. Jus' a couple li'l teeny eeny ones." Yeah, sure.

Then again, a state of extreme drunkeness can also induce a great propensity to say exactly what is on one's mind. It's a lot easier to walk up to someone at a party and say "You're a real asshole," than it is to do it at the Pawn when you are sober.

Drunk or sober, there are certain situations which, due to their nature demand outright lying on the part of individuals who find themselves in such circumstances.

These are; 1) When your grandma gives you something really ugly for Christmas. 2) When the state patrolman asks if you were aware that you were going 78 miles per hour. 3) When your dad asks if you're absolutely certain you'll be out of college in four years or less.

The Mouse that Roared an exciting and zany play

by Gretchen Pemberton

The Mouse that Roared is an exciting play full of zany people, costumes, and events, to be performed by the Menomonie Theatre Guild.

The comical war and love story evolves when the isolated country, Grand Fenwick, proclaims war against the big, bad United States.

A stunning dutchess, nerdy forest ranger, and two know-it-all, obscure advisors of Grand Fenwick are a fine match for the mindless President of the United States and his scatterbrained government.

Chris Brandt Schmidt,the director, said the play is described as a political farce. "It has everything to do with power and love."

Schmidt's fresh insight is applied in the casting of the creative cast members in their fitting roles.

"The play is the kookiest thing I've ever seen." Schmidt said. "The United States is portrayed as a fumbling, bumbling, over-rated government."

Debora Drower, a Stout student, plays the dutchess of Grand Fenwick. A love and war conflict arises when she appoints the forest ranger to a task.

Dana Bahnsen is a Menomonie high school student who plays Tully, a peculiar forest ranger. Bahnsen commented on working with the great variety of people involved.

Stout students, faculty, community and area people make up the rather large cast. "Everyone is different with the same goal in mind." Bahnsen said.

> "The play is the kookiest I've ever seen. —Chris Brandt Schmidt"

Tom McDonald, who is working for his masters in guidance counseling commented on his character Bentor. "I am an advisor to the dutchess. I'm vauge and nervous. I don't have a clue." Bentor is supposedly technologically aware, but not always sure of what's going on.

Warren Lang, an english faculty member, portrays the zealous Count MountJoy. Lang said, "There's a ham in me." He described his character as an "aristocrat, he thinks he knows how to solve everything."

Dick Gardner, also an english faculty member, plays a weird professor who invents the Q-bomb for the United States. He said the play is. "outrageously funny!"

Tracy Lea Landis is co-chairperson for the costuming. Landis is studying clothing textile and design at Stout.

Landis said the elements she learned in painting about colors going together, "was enormously useful in solving problems with the costumes." She described the play as "A tale of wheeling and dealing in weaponry and foreign aid."

The Mouse that Roared contains enlightening performances from the leads and the essential bit parts.

The dates of the production are, April 24,25,30,May 1 and 2 at 8 p.m., April 26 and May 3 at 2 p.m.

Tickets will be available at the Mable Tainter box office from 11 a.m. - 1 p.m. on weekdays and two hours before the performances. General Admission is $6.00; $5.00 for students, senior citizens and groups over 20.

Information is available at 235-0001.

"Comedy Laff-off" coming to Stout

by Jennifer Tooley

Tests? Papers? Projects? Have you been looking for some relief? Comic relief, that is! Search no farther! On Monday, April 27 in the Great Hall, the Special Activities Commission will bring the "Comedy Laff-Off" to UW-Stout.

> All of the performers are "up and coming"

The Laff-Off has toured many colleges and universities, bringing all forms of comic entertainment including stand-up, magic, juggling, etc., to the students.

All of the performers are "up and coming", talented comedians from New York City, who guarantee a night of laughs.

Ron Darian, a "Star Search" found talent, and a favorite at "The Bottom Line" in New York City, has appeared in commercials for Diet Coke and Michelob and will be one of the performers coming to UW-Stout.

His routine is fast- paced and witty, and includes take-offs on "Star Trek" and "The Twilight Zone".

Also appearing on Monday night will be a comic called Friedhoffer, who is known as the "Madman of Magic". A third comic, yet unknown, will complete the show. Refreshments will be available at the Laff-Off. The fun begins at 8 p.m. and there is no cover charge.

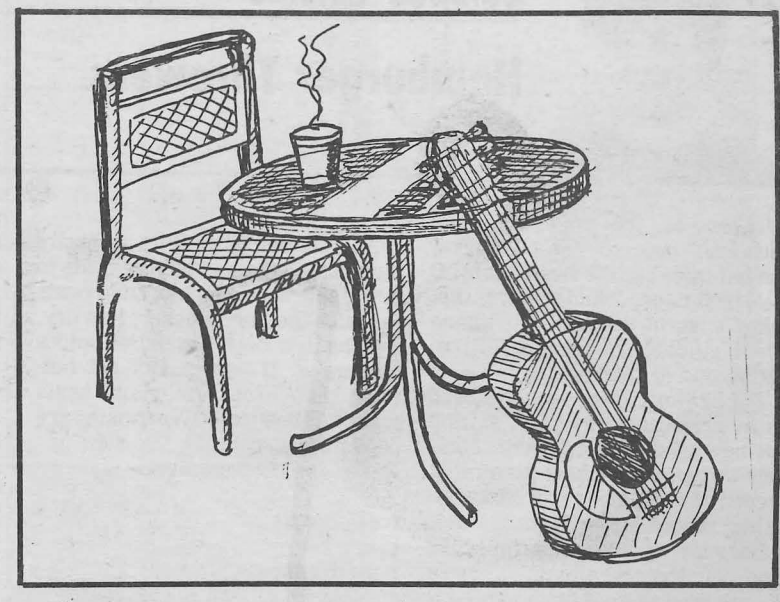
UPB presents: Janet McLaughin will entertain at Pawn Coffeehouse

by Stevie Voll

Janet McLaughlin plays the guitar and sings and she'll be coming to Stout this weekend (Friday and Saturday) to the Pawn Coffeehouse.

The show is being presented by the University Programming Board (the UPB), and is free.

Her sound mimics nobody, It's hers and well worth hearing.



The Pawn Coffeehouse is really just the Pawn and it's located in the Student Union (the space-age building of the eighties). Every few weekends some people turn it into the Pawn Coffeehouse and have a performer or performers come in to play their tunes.

In the world there are only a few remaining coffeehouses, and the Pawn Coffeehouse is one of these.

Janet McLaughlin (the next performer in the Pawn Coffeehouse) has been playing guitar since she was nine. She must have just had HUGE hands at this age to be playing the guitar.

The two white sheets that I have here say that she has played all over the country. McLaughlin is a songwriter, has an album, and has been featured at the Bluebird Cafe.

One sheet says that she plays cover tunes by Bob Seger, James Taylor, Kenny Loggins, Emmylou Harris, Paul Simon, and Billy Joel.

She has toured with Juice Newton, Dan Seals, and the late Ricky Nelson. She's been around a while and made a lot of road trips around this country.

On one of the white sheets there is a quote, "Her sound mimics nobody. It's hers and well worth hearing" On the other sheet there is also a quote by the Huntsville Times saying McLaughlin is "well worth hearing." I'm going to take it she's well worth hearing.

So, this Friday and Saturday, April 24 and 25, 9 p.m. the Pawn Coffehouse will have a lot of new things to see. Janet McLaughlin. The Pawn Coffehouse. One of the few remaining in the world. Guitars. Other people. Coffee. Sugar. Cream. Styrofoam cups.

See it all.

Campus Cuisine

Hamburger Throwers

Denise Cain

Three of the biggest, most muscular men on campus throw the hammer for the track team. It is a technique, I understand, that takes a great amount of training which includes: weight lifting, eating and drinking.

The hammer throwers have been quite successful this year, setting two new school records in the hammer throw, a new beer slamming record at the Marion and a food inhaling record at the Terrace Cafe.

Because of the importance of food in their training, I have volunteered to give them some information on hamburger throwing (commonly known as grilling).

You want to buy the right meat for grilling. The best steaks to grill are sirloin and tenderloin because they are very tender. When barbecuing chicken, select whole or half broilers or use parts such as breasts, drumsticks, or wings. For pork, purchase rib or center cut chops.

When grilling, always have the meat at room temperature before cooking. This allows the meat to cook more evenly. Turn the meat only once and always use a tongs or wide spatula so you do not pierce the meat.

An anonymous grilling authority suggests that when buying brats to grill, purchase butcher shop brats because they are fresher, less dry, and have a better blend of spices and meat. If you cannot get butcher shop brats, Abbyland brats from Abbotsford, Wisconsin are recommended.

College Brats

fresh brats beer tomato sauce
cornstarch diluted in cold water onions
oregano

Simmer the brats with the beer until they appear done. Remove the brats and save the remaining beer and combine it with the tomato sauce. Add onions and oregano to suit your taste. Thicken with cornstarch base over low heat and save. Grill the brats, pricking them with a fork to let juices escape. Serve with tomato sauce.

Barbecued Potatoes

medium size potatoes soft butter or margarine melted Wisconsin cheese sour cream

Scrub potatoes and pat dry. Rub the skins with soft butter or margarine. Wrap each potato tightly in a double thickness of aluminum foil. Lay potato on top of hot coals and barbecue for 45-60 minutes or until done. Turn several times during the baking and serve hot with butter, cheese and sour cream.

Cheese Topped French Bread

loaf of French Bread soft butter garlic salt
Parmesan or sharp Cheddar cheese

Cut loaf of French bread lengthwise. Brush generously with butter seasoned with garlic salt. Sprinkle liberally with grated or shredded cheese. Put halves together; wrap securely in a double thickness of aluminum foil. Place on grill 10-12 minutes or on briquettes 6-9 minutes. Slice crosswise and serve.

Netters win 5 matches; extend win streak to 9

by Paul Emerson

By winning all five of its matches during the week, the UW-Stout men's tennis team ran its winning streak to nine straight matches and now holds an impressive 29-11 overall mark. In addition, the netters are now 6-0 in the WSUC and have yet to lose an individual varsity match. They have won every conference match 9-0.

During the past week's action, which all took place here in Menomonie, Stout blanked four of their five opponents 9-0. The victims included UW-Eau Claire, UW-Oshkosh, UW-Stevens Point and non-conference opponents St. Olaf and Ripon College, whom they beat 7-2.

Stout 9, Eau Claire 0

While many people around town may have been hustling to file their taxes on time last Wednesday, the netters were busy taking it to the Blugolds, winning all nine matches in straight sets.

In singles action on the day, all six matches were easily decided. Senior John Leehy won his number one singles match 6-1, 6-0, as did senior Tony Snoyenbos at number two singles, 6-1, 6-1.

Juniors Mark Paine (6-1, 6-0) and Mike Friedman (6-3, 6-1) won at the three and four spots respectively. Senior Tony Pheifer defeated his number five singles opponent 6-2, 6-0, and Junior Bill Johnson won the final singles match 6-4, 6-4.

In doubles action, Snoyenbos/Friedman teamed up to take their number one doubles match 6-1, 6-3, Leehy/Paine won 6-0, 6-2 at number two doubles and Johnson and Junior Todd Trabant won their number three doubles match 6-2, 6-3.

Stout 9, Oshkosh 0

On a beautiful sunny day the netters won eight of the nine matches in straight sets. The only match to go three sets was at number three doubles, with Bill Johnson and Tony Pheifer taking the match 6-4, 4-6, 6-2.

Posting wins for Stout in the singles action were John Leehy, Tony Snoyenbos, Mark Paine, Mike Friedman, Tony Pheifer and Bill Johnson.

Teaming up to take the other two doubles matches were Friedman/Trabant at number one doubles and Paine/Leehy at number two doubles.

Stout 9, Stevens Point 0

In the second match of the day on Friday, the netters took up where they left off, and took eight of the nine matches from the Pointers in straight sets.

> "We played well and lost a close match at number one doubles."
> —Coach Smith

"Stevens Point played well. They have a strong WSUC team," Head Tennis Coach Bob Smith said.

In singles action (one through six spots), John Leehy, Tony Snoyenbos, Mark Paine, Mike Friedman, Tony Pheifer and Bill Johnson all kept their winning streaks and perfect WSUC marks intact.

In the number one doubles match Snoyenbos/Friedman won easily 6-1, 6-3, while the netters only scare of the day came in the number two doubles match, where Leehy/Paine had to go three sets before winning their match 7-5, 1-6, 6-3.

Pheifer/Trabant finished off a picture-perfect day for the netters by taking their number three doubles match 6-2, 6-2.

Stout 7, Ripon 2

Stout started out Saturday by first hosting Ripon College. "Ripon is ranked 18th nationally, and 5th in the midwest," Smith said.

No matter to the Blue Devils, who won five of six singles and two of the three doubles matches against the only opponent able to win a match against the netters all week.

John Leehy (6-0, 6-0) and Tony Snoyenbos (6-2, 6-2) were victorious at the number one and two singles spots, respectively, as was Mike Friedman at number four singles, 6-0, 6-2 and Bill Johnson at number six singles, 6-4, 6-4.

Number three singles player Mark Paine was defeated in his match, 6-7, 4-6, while Tony Pheifer won at number five singles but needed three sets to do it, 6-1, 6-7, 6-2.

"We played well and lost a close match at number one doubles," said Smith. Friedman/Snoyenbos lost that number one doubles match in three sets, 1-6, 6-4, 4-6.

Stout 9, St. Olaf 0

Stout ended a perfect weekend in their second match on Saturday, as they again overwhelmed their opponent for their fourth shutout in five matches.

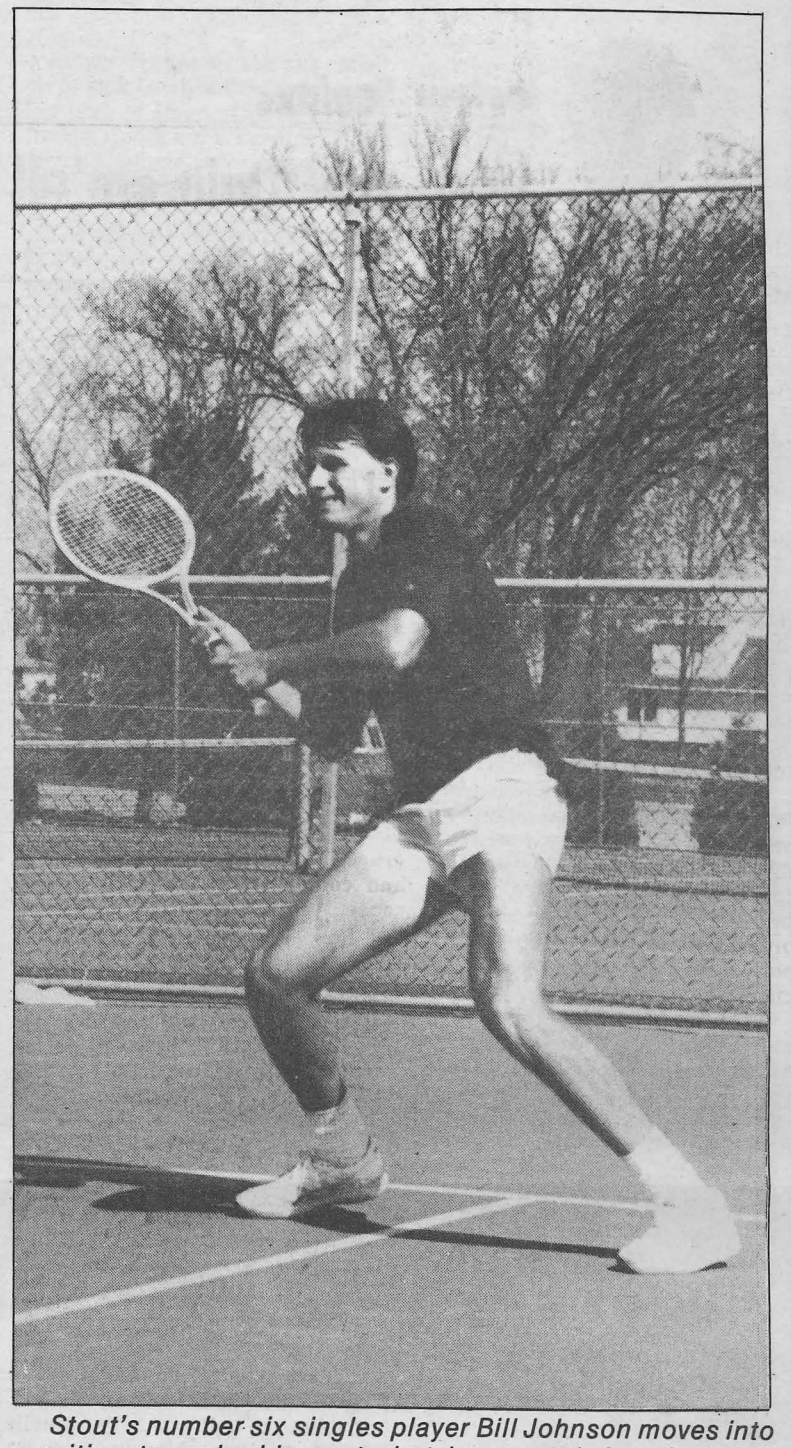
"We played very well," exclaimed an exuberant coach Smith with good reason, as the netters took eight of nine matches in straight sets.

Stout swept all six singles matches easily. John Leehy (6-2, 6-2), Tony Snoyenbos (6-2, 6-0), Mark Paine (6-1, 6-3), Mike Friedman (6-1, 6-2), Tony Pheifer (6-0, 6-0) and Bill Johnson (6-2, 6-1) were all victorious.

In doubles action Paine/Friedman won 6-4, 6-2 at number one doubles, while Leehy/Pheifer needed three sets to take their match 6-3, 3-6, 7-6. Snoyenbos and Freshman Brian O'Malley won at number three doubles 6-1, 6-3.

The netters are to travel to Whitewater, Wis. today (Thursday) to take on UW-Whitewater and UW-Platteville in their quest to wrap up their fifth straight WSUC title.

On Friday and Saturday they will compete in the Marquette University Invitational in Milwaukee, Wis. before traveling to Carleton College in Northfield, Minn. next Wednesday (April 29) to close out the regular season.



Stout's number six singles player Bill Johnson moves into position to make his next shot in a match last Saturday against UW-Oshkosh on the courts behind the Johnson Field house. Johnson, and the men's tennis team both went 5-0 in action last week. Staff photo by Jeff Altenburg

Stout student wins national powerlifting championship

by Darron Vanman

A national championship is a big deal. The work involved in achieving this honor is usually tremendous. The support of your teammates is also vital to success. Dave Henry, a senior and a member of the Stout powerlifting club, achieved such an honor.

"Dave has worked very hard to succeed in powerlifting and his efforts have paid off," teammate Jay O'Neil said.

Henry, one of the power club's 14 members, lifted his way to a national title. He won the 198-lb. weight class in the ADFPA (America Drug-free Powerlifting Association) championship held in Eau Claire on April 11.

The president of the power club, Rob Ciaciura, explained the competition: "Each competitor has three attempts at the squat, bench and the deadlift. Then the best lift is scored for the total." Henry's winning total was 1583.5 pounds. That breaks down to 611.75 at the squat, 396.75 on the bench and 575 for the deadlift.

Henry had to beat some tough competition, including the lifters from the team champion, the United States Air Force Academy. The second team finisher was Brigham Young University.

> "Dave has worked very hard to succeed in powerlifting and his efforts have paid off."
> —Jay O'Neil

Stout's presence will be felt in the future as the power club is only 1 1/2 years old. It was started by its president, Ciaciura, who said, "A couple of guys came up to me and were interested in starting a club, and there was enough interest to start one." The power club is financially backed by the Recreation Commission.

The power club is open to all students. Athletes that are competing during their seasons are also eligible, according to Ciaciura. The practices, held in the fieldhouse three days a week, focus on low repetitions at heavier weights.

Ciaciura also noted that the club members are security guards for Stout's dances and other activities. He said, "They [the organizers] have a rapport with us. They usually come to us."

Ciaciura said the power club is "a close-knit group. Everybody knows each other and friendships are well-developed during club functions."

The power club remains active for most of the year. This summer the club will be sending Jay O'Neil and Dan Saunders to Madison on June 27th for the ADFPA's Muscles and Fitness meet. Ciaciura says the club is very competitive and very exciting. He encourages anybody interested in competitive powerlifting to contact him.

"Don't believe it til' you read it in the boxscores." Bob Uecker, future baseball hall of famer.

True Brew Fever. I, like many die-hard Brewers fans out there, and many new ones, caught it. That fever that had been missing since October of 1982.

The years in between saw "the wave" diminish to little more than a ripple around Milwaukee's County Stadium, the place the Brewers call home.

Enough of the past, True Brew Fever is back. But unfortunately it's only April, not October. No matter.

1987 was supposed to be a rebuilding year for the young Brewer squad, and a year the experts picked them to be a contender--for last place.

But in true Brewer style, the Brewers ignored the "experts", and almost rewrote the books for the fastest start in baseball history.

When the Brewers swept their season opening three game series with the defending American League champion Boston Red Sox, only the die-hard fans, like myself, noticed.

The Brewers then traveled to Texas and promptly swept the series with Rangers to go 6-0. Off to Baltimore.

Die-hard Brewer fans will remember the pennant winning year of 1982, the year the Brewers won the American League's Eastern Division crown on the last day of the season by beating the Orioles in Baltimore.

The Brewers not only swept the Orioles in the three game series, to go to 9-0, but had a 22-year old kid named Juan Nieves throw a no-hitter, the first ever for a Brewer pitcher.

The Brewers then came home for a weekend series with none other than the Texas Rangers, a team off to their worst start in their history.

"The wave" was back at County stadium and cheered the Brewers to victory in the first two games of the series. The 11-0 start tied the American League record then held by the 1981 Oakland A's.

Easter Sunday was good to the Brewers, but almost wasn't until a miraculous five run ninth inning gave the Brewers the win, and left the Rangers stunned. Bring on the hamburgers.

(The George Webb restaurant chain, which has predicted the Brewers would win 12 games in a row since the clubs first year in 1970, will give away an estimated 112,000 burgers to the Brewers fans. One per customer please!)

A win in the first game Monday night, before thousands of fever-crazed followers in the White Sox' Comiskey Park tied the record for the fastest start in baseball history.

But that is where the bubble burst for the Brewers, and they had to settle for a tie of the record with the 1982 Atlanta Braves at 13-0, as the White Sox quieted the potent Brewer bats enroute to a 7-1 victory.

So now it's time for the Brewers to start a new streak. And with a little luck, maybe a return of True Brew Fever in October, 1987. To hell with the experts.

Brewer Streak ended

The Milwaukee Brewers have won 13 games in a row and now hold the American League record of most consecutive wins. The Brewers have also tied the Atlanta Braves record set in 1982 for the most consecutive wins in the major league. The Brewers were unable to break the record when the Chicago White Sox won the Tuesday night game 7-1.

Charbonneau's no-hit shutout leads sluggers past Superior, 10-0

by Chris Riba

The Blue Devil baseball team went two and two this past week by beating Superior twice and losing twice to the University of Minnesota on Tuesday.

Mike Charbonneau was named WSUC pitcher of the week after he led the Blue Devils to a 10-0 victory by pitching a no hitter last Wednesday against Superior. With the two victories the Devils stay in the northern division race with River Falls.

Charbonneau, a junior lefty, held the Yellow Jackets hitless in six innings. The Devils' offense was able to bring around ten runs in Charbonneau's first victory of the conference season. For the first time of the conference season the Devils were held home runless, but they did hit the ball hard. Chris Larson and Karl Drezed were robbed of the long ball by nice catches made by Superior outfielders.

The second game was simular with the Devil pitchers only allowing two hits while the offense tallied seven in the second shut out of the day. Dave Crabtree started and pitched five innings. Tim Fuerst came pitched the sixth. The shut out was the Devils' fifth of the year, as the strong pitching and solid defense combined with the allways threatening offense.

On Tuesday the Devils met their match against the Gophers, losing the first game 13-5 and the second 8-7. Charbonneau was the starting and losing pitcher in the first game. Errors cost the Devils the first game.

"We just didn't play well," said a disapointed coach Terry Petrie, "we hit the ball well." The Devils knocked out ten hits and brought five runs around, but the defense fell apart for the first time this year.

Last year the Devils split with the Gophers but that wasn't to be this year as a seventh inning come back by Minnesota killed a Stout four run lead. The Devils were up 7-3 with two outs in the seventh, but the Gophers showed their expirence and came back to win 8-7.

"It was just one of those things that happens," said Petrie of the heartbreaking loss. John Schmidt picked up the loss in relief.

Mark Crandall led the offense by hitting a homer. Tim Buswell went two for two and scored two runs against the NCAA division one Gophers.

The Blue Devils are in action on Thursday with a make up game against Anoka junior college and on Saturday with the annual alumni game. Both contests begin at 1 p.m.

Lee seeking to improve women's sports programs

by April Whitney

Volleyball and basketball are her games, Lynda Lee is the name. Lee is Stout's women's volleyball and basketball coach and would really like to do some turning around of these events here at Stout.

Lee coached the volleyball team to an impressive season of 22 wins and 23 losses in 1986. This was the best record in the history of this school. "We probably had the best team and the most solid team, which contributed to the great season we had this past year," Lee said.

> "We are right on the verge of having a winning team.
> —Lynda Lee"

Before Lee arrived at Stout, the most matches the volleyball team had won was 12 back in 1983. She is really turning the program around and making it something to be proud of. "We are right on the verge of having a winning team, and that is my goal for next year," Lee says.

Motivation is a key ingredient in having a winning season. A coach has to psych up her team before a match. Lee does this by using a lot of humor and sometimes even hands out candy before practices.

Lee believes that pride, mental toughness, determination and potential turn a good volleyball player into an outstanding volleyball player. All of these ingredients are needed to become a successful team. Each player needs to forget about their own statistics and work to their full potential as a team for Stout to have a winning season. This is what Lee is teaching her players and they are learning.

Lee keeps in touch with her players throughout the year by writing to them in the summer, sending them conditioning programs and organizing spring volleyball leagues. Lee also keeps her players informed about her expectations for the year. She believes in being as honest with her players as possible and letting them become involved with the decision-making helps her players develop a sense of self worth.

Stout Centaurs trounced by NMU, 28-6

by Slash La Freniere

The dreams of an undefeated season for the UW-Stout Centaurs rugby team were smashed by Northern Michigan University last Saturday, as the Centaurs were trounced 28-6. The loss brought the overall record for the Centaurs to 3-1 this spring. Stout player Dave Norstrom said, "I think that a big part of our loss was that we didn't have our regular scrum there."

The scrum, which consists of eight players, has been the strong point for the Stout ruggers all year. On Saturday the Stout scrum had three players who did not play in their normal positions. Another contributing factor in the poor performance of the Centaurs was the lack of players attending practices.

Player Billy Ries said, "You have to be able to practice together as a team so you know how everybody will react in game situations."

The starting lineup for the Centaurs was not set until five minutes before the match, causing some confusion. NMU exploited this fact from the opening kickoff as they penetrated the Stout try zone almost immediately. NMU also made the conversion kick and, for the first time all season, the Centaurs trailed 6-0.

> "We are a much better team than we showed on Saturday."
> —Bill Ries

The general strategy for the NMU ruggers was to advance the ball by kicking for touch or out of bounds. This allowed them to challenge the Centaurs in the ensuing lineout. A lineout is a throw in from out of bounds that either team may win. NMU won many of these lineouts, giving them the opportunity to score often.

NMU continued to attack the Stout ruggers for the rest of the first half, putting 22 points on the board. In rugby, 22 points is quite a lot. The Centaurs would need to score four tries and conversion kicks to regain the lead.

Last fall the Centaurs were able to come back to defeat NMU in the second half. This time, however, they could only manage to get back six points.

Player Tim Anderson was called on to kick two penalty kicks, making both of them. This accounted for the Centaurs' six points. NMU also added one more try and conversion, bringing their total to 28.

The general consensus of all the Centaur players was that if they would have had more people at practices and had practiced together, they would have done much better.

Said Ries, "We are a much better team than we showed on Saturday."

This Saturday the Centaurs will try to redeem themselves against UW-La Crosse at 1 p.m. behind River Heights Elementary school.

UW-Stout Rugger, Mike Hackworthy powers through the tough NMU forwards as he advances the ball near the try. Stout had a rough time against the opponent as they only put a side together five minutes before game time.

LEE

There has been a rumor flying around campus that Lee is no longer the basketball coach due to last season's record. To set the record straight, Lee is still the basketball coach and will be for quite some time. The only way that the basketball coaching position would leave her hands would be because of the tight overlap between the two seasons, but Lee will continue coaching both sports here at Stout.

"The only thing that the basketball program lacks is a history of recruitment." Lee is in need of people to put away their fears of not joining college athletics for the fear of grades dropping.

"Most people's grades don't drop and if they do it is not by much," Lee said. Grades are one of the biggest reasons why students don't give athletics a try.

"People don't want to play for a losing team so they don't want to play for Stout's basketball team," said Lee, who is trying to turn this program around. Stout needs people to try out for the team so the losing team can eventually become a winning team.

"I need to find people that want to play basketball and want to help the program out," Lee says.

Athlete of the week: Beth Claas

by Darron Vanman

Name: Beth Claas
Year: Freshman
Sport: Women's Track
Major: Clothing, textiles and design
Coach: John Miller and Steve Terry
Latest Accomplishments: High school — third in 100-yard hurdles and fifth in 300-hurdles at the state meet.
Athlete's statistics: Beth Claas, in her freshman year, is doing well on the track team. Claas took two individual firsts in the 100-low hurdles and in the 300-intermediates. She also helped the mile relay take first at the Winona State meet on April 11. Beth Claas's impressive performance earned her The Stoutonia's athlete of the week.
Coach's comments: Coach Steve Terry commented on Claas: "She's been very consistent so far. Beth works hard in practice. She's a team-oriented athlete from the standpoint that she is willing to run anything to score points."

Terry said, "Beth is the best all-around athlete we have. She does anything from the sprints to the 400 and also the jumps. She has a very good attitude toward track in general."

Coach Miller said, "She is very competitive and likes to do well. Beth has a lot of pride in herself. She comes from a quality high school program (state champs), and we need more women like her to excel. Right now we are in the rebuilding stage."
Athlete's history: Beth Claas started competing in track because she wanted to be like her sister. Her sister was a state champ in the hurdles, so Beth started running at age 12 and then took to the track and the hurdles when she was a freshman.

Beth says it helps to stay motivated when you are part of a quality program. Beth said, "I come from a good team. I have continued to compete because it helps me to work off aggression from the day's classes. I wouldn't have the same attitude and laziness would set in if I didn't run track."

Claas commented on her team: "I like our team size. We're close-knit and that helps out a lot when you are competing."

Rookie Beth Claas would like to run the 400-hurdles at conference and help the mile relay qualify for nationals. The mile relay team has already turned in a time of 4 minutes, 17 seconds. Beth plans on placing at nationals her junior and senior years, but for now she just wants to have fun.

SSA approves $850,000 expenditure

by Tracy Lea Landis

The concerns of student representatives who resisted approving a proposal for finishing the Memorial Student Center were understandable, according to Dave Asp, student chair of the committee that made the proposal.

Asp's remarks referred to concerns aired by Vice-President-Elect of Financial Affairs Todd Nelson when he urged fellow Stout Student Association (SSA) members at their April 21 meeting to defeat a motion that would approve finishing the unfinished space in the student center.

The motion to approve finishing the center passed despite the debate.

The unfinished space is a large undeveloped area of the student center building located under the Great Hall and accessed through The Stoutonia office.

The proposal was presented for SSA approval by the Student Center Advisory Committee, which reviews the plans and policies of the center.

The committee has suggested the area be finished to include a multi-activity area with a club-like atmosphere, an exhibit area to serve any campus organization and expansion of facilities for student publications.

Asp, who was recently elected to chair the Student Center Advisory Committee, said he understands Nelson's concerns.

The proposal to finish off the alternate space for student use will cost about $850 thousand, according to Asp.

> "It was pointed out at the meeting," Asp said, "that the plan can be changed at any time prior to bidding the job.

"In the long run, students at UW-Stout will pay for it through segregated fees," Asp said.

Asp said that it may be suggested that a special $10 per semester fee be levied to accumulate a down payment for this project, as was done when the center was proposed.

Asp added that there will be a lot of time to negotiate details of the plan to finish the unfinished space.

"It was pointed out at the meeting," Asp said, "that the plan can be changed at any time prior to bidding the job."

"This is just the beginning of the process," said Bob Johnson, student center director, adding that the process will probably take years.

Johnson, who serves as a non-voting member of the center's advisory committee, explained that the proposal has to be worked through the lengthy capital expenditures procedure.

The capital projects review and approval process for the student center starts with approval of a general direction by the SSA, Asp pointed out.

From there, Asp said, the proposal is reviewed and must eventually be approved by the campus staff, the Chancellor, UW-System Administration, Board of Regents, State Building Commission, the Legislature and, finally, the Governor.

If the proposal survives this process, an architect would be hired to work out the final details, Asp added.

17th Congress adjourns with high honors

The new SSA President, James Falkofske, was sworn in by Chancellor Robert Swanson at Tuesday night's SSA meeting. Falkofske then appointed his new staff.

by Gretchen Eke

At the United Council (UC) meeting last weekend in Madison, a delegation of students from the Stout Student Association (SSA) won the award for the most outstanding delegation.

At Tuesday night's SSA meeting, which was the last meeting of the 17th Congress, United Council director Robb Zimdars presented President Paul Nelson with a plaque for this award.

"This is a feather in the cap not only for the delegation but for the whole senate," Nelson said after receiving the plaque.

Vice-President of Academic Affairs (VPAA) Julie Weiss was also presented with a plaque for outstanding delegate in the VPAA category at United Council.

"Vice-President of Legislative Affairs Mark Nickels' name was brought up with two others for the award in that category," Zimdars said, "And he received an honorable mention."

Zimdars said that they received these awards out of 22 schools at UC. He said that the full-time staff at UW-Madison chose the recipients.

In other business, a motion failed by a vote of 19-5 that would have required the Minority Affairs senator to be a domestic minority and would have created a separate seat for international students.

It was brought out in discussion that it was difficult to do this because the term " domestic minority" is difficult to define.

"The United Council originally referred to Black Americans, Asian Americans, and Latin Americans as the minority," Dean Sam Wood said. "Stout hasn't paid attention to that. They have allowed international students to serve on the minority affairs position."

"As far as I know," Ali Vazirabaldi said, "For affirmative action, they do not consider international students as a minority."

President-elect James Falkofske said that in the 18th Congress the senate may be restuctured.

"As newly elected president," Falkofske said, "I would hate to see a position created that would be overturned."

After the final meeting of the 17th Congress adjourned, the first meeting of the 18th Congress was called to order.

In the first order of business, Chancellor Robert Swanson swore in James Falkofske as the new president, Angela Bias as Vice-President of Legislative Affairs, Dan Meyer as Vice-President of Academic Affairs, and Todd Nelson as Vice-President of Financial Affairs.

President Falkofske then appointed Brenda K. Morehart to the position of executive secretary; Denise Albrecht, UC director; Juliet Schumacher, media advertising coordinator; and Cate Reszka, Landlord Tenant representative.

Student Center discussed

by Tracy Lea Landis

The Memorial Student Center, which was opened for use during the 1985-86 school year, is the result of an extensive planning process, according to Dave Asp, student chair of the Student Center Advisory Committee.

Asp was appointed to the advisory committee to represent students in matters relating to the management of the student center.

The original plan for the new student center, Asp said, was proposed as a remodeling of the old student center, which is now the Communications Technology building.

In 1980, the Stout Student Association (SSA) passed motions approving the idea of remodeling and adding to the old student center building and levying a special $12 per semester fee to accumulate cash for the project.

Levying a special additional segregated fee, Asp explained, reduced the amount the students would be borrowing to pay for the student center project.

One year later, the SSA passed a motion acknowledging that remodeling the old building had been "determined to be too expensive and not cost effective."

Another year later, in January of 1982, the SSA moved to support investing in the construction of a new student center building.

A month later, the SSA decided to approve the present location of the student center.

Construction of the new student center began in October of 1983, Asp said, and was completed in August of 1985, just short of five years after the idea of a new student center was first approved by the student's representative body.

Utilities project links north and main campus

by Jill Huppert

A construction project is currently in progress to link utilities from UW-Stout's north campus to the main campus.

The construction is moving more quickly than expected due to the unusually early spring, according to John Enger, Director of University Relations.

The $1.2 million project will link steam, electric and telecommunication services to the north campus, which now maintains separate facilities. It is expected to reduce Stout's annual utilities bill by about $170,000.

Connecting the entire campus to the central heating plant will enable the university to shut down five boilers on the north campus.

"The boilers there are old," said Enger, it will be much more cost efficient to produce all the steam in a central location.

The boilers are old... Utilities were cheap back then.

—John Enger

The separate heating and utilities facilities were put in on the north campus in 1955 when Tainter residence hall was built. It seemed logical at the time because "utilities were cheap back then," Enger said.

On the main campus, a steamline extension is proceeding east on Main Street from the Administration building to the intersection at Second Street. There it will link up with an electrical and communication conduit that is being extended west on Wilson Avenue and north on Second Street.

In late May, the intersection of Second and Main Street is expected to be closed for about a week and traffic rerouted.

There have not been a great number of inconveniences caused by the project, Enger said. The closing of Main and Second Streets will occur after most of the students have left for the summer, he said.

Construction began last fall on the north campus and was then stopped for the winter months. Completion is expected in late July.

Construction is being funded in part by the university's Auxiliary Services, which is supported entirely by fees from areas such as residence halls and food service. About $475,000 for the project was obtained through a three percent loan from the U.S. Office of Education.

Landlord Tenant Panel discusses Consumer Awareness Week

by Julie K. Ragatz

Consumer Awareness week, with a theme emphasizing the consumers' Bill of Rights, was highlighted by a landlord-tenant panel discussion last Wednesday.

The purpose of the week is to increase awareness of the role consumers play in the marketplace and also increase their economic awareness, said Gail Misfeldt, assistant professor of habitational resources.

The theme ties in with the bicentennial of the Constitution this year, and stresses the consumers' right to choice, information, safety, to be heard, and to consumer education.

"The landlord-tenant topic plays a part in a lot of these," said Misfeldt. "You have a lot of choices, and also a right to know."

The Consumer Protection class and the Department of Habitational Resources sponsored the panel discussion. They chose that topic because of the high number of students who ask questions in the spring about landlord-tenant related subjects, said Misfeldt.

Present at the panel discussion were two lawyers, a landlord, a property manager, a tenant, and a representative of the Stout Student Association (SSA).

Though it was mainly a question-answer type of discussion, several topics of importance were reviewed at length.

One of these is the new Menomonie ordinance which requires landlords to pay interest on the security deposits put down by students.

You have a lot of choices, and also a right to know

—Gail Misfeldt

The ordinance took effect January 1, but does not affect those leases entered before that date. Under the ordinance, the tenant is paid interest on the security deposit provided that the rent each month is paid on time.

If the rent is paid late for one or two months, the tenant is still entitled to a fraction of the interest due, but if it is late for three months there is no interest paid at all.

It is the responsibility of the landlord to prove that the rent was paid late.

During the last month of the lease, the interest earned on the security deposit is applied toward that month's rent.

Another point discussed is the problems of a group lease. If a group lease is made, each member of the lease is responsible for the total of the lease.

This means that the other members of the group are required to cover a bigger share of the lease if someone should leave.

For this reason, many students prefer to have individual leases. Under this type of lease, students rent their own room but have privileges in other common areas of the place being leased, such as the bathroom and living room.

This type of lease is especially common on the college campuses because of the students moving around and not always staying for a specific length of time.

The best way to avoid problems with group leases, said Misfeldt, is to pick responsible people to live with in the first place and be safe instead of sorry.

Also of great importance to students is to leave their new address with the landlord when they move out.

The tenants have one week from the time they move in to notify the landlord of any existing damages.

The landlord, however, has 21

Student brings sailing club to UW-Stout

by Julie K. Ragatz

Those with an interest in sailing or windsurfing will be happy to hear of a new club that is being orgainized on campus.

Dirk Kermitz, a sophomore here at UW-Stout, has organized the Stout Sailing Club.

"Organizing the club was easier than I thought it would be," Kermitz remarked.

Kermitz said other collegiate sailing clubs, such as the one at UW-Madison, sent him a lot of informational brochures which helped him get the club started.

He also had help from other students on campus who are interested in sailing.

Kermitz then researched area clubs, and according to the SSA's requirements for developing clubs, wrote up the club's constitution and by-laws.

The Stout Sailing Club has received temporary approval from the SSA, and will be officially accepted next September when the new SSA board is in power.

"The SSA was very helpful," Kermitz stated.

"The temporary approval gives us the right to advertise and to hold meeting in the Union," he added.

Kermitz's main reason for starting the club are his intense interest in sailing and his desire to provide a club for the other sailing and windsurfing enthusiasts on campus.

"My interest in sailing stems back to when I was about nine years old," Kermitz said.

Kermitz transfered to Stout this year from UW-Oshkosh. While attending Oshkosh, he sailed with the sailing team there.

"I was really disappointed to find out that Stout didn't have a club," Kermitz remarked.

The club's main purposes are to promote sailing, and to provide the organization, equipment, and instructions to facilitate sailing.

Experienced club members will be teaching classes in windsurfing and sailing to beginners who would like to learn, Kermitz explained.

"I encourage anyone who has an interest in sailing, or has ever sailed, or would like to learn to sail to come to our meeting on May 3," Kermitz said.

A branch of the Stout Sailing Club will be the Stout Racing Team. The Racing Team will compete almost every weekend during the school's racing seasons, which run from mid September to mid November and from April to the end of the semester.

The team will compete against other schools in the Midwest Collegiate Sailing Association (MCSA). These include schools in Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, and Iowa.

Kermitz would like to encourage faculty and staff, as well as full and part-time students to join the club.

At their first meeting, the club will be discussing membership dues, fund-raisers, the boating arrangement, and the election of the Board of Captains, which will be held next fall.

The newly developed Stout Sailing Club will be holding its first informational meeting on Sunday, May 3 at 9 p.m. in Crystal Ballroom C, for anyone interested.

"Fun in the Sun" seems to be the main concern of students who spent the day sailing on Lake Menomin; and it was times like these that influenced one Stout student to form a sailing/windsurfing club on campus. The club s first meeting will be held May 1st.

Menomonie Senior High establishes Amnesty chapter

Students hope to spread the word of Amnesty International, an organization concerned with the preservation of human rights. Involved in the AI chapter recently started at Menomonie High are (seated l-r) Moira Addison, Jon Menz, Samantha Samuel, Francesca McCausland, Janet Saatkamp, and Mari Heagle. Standing are Maree Holmstrom and Lee Brenholt.

by Mary Raymond

Students at Menomonie Senior High are taking an active role in human rights concerns as they prepare for the establishment of the first Amnesty International (AI) chapter within the school.

Although the chapter is still in an organizational stage, the students representing Menomonie Senior High School are positive about its initiation into the school's club curriculum.

An executive board, consisting of six members, has already had one official meeting, which took place on the UW-Stout campus.

The high school chapter was invited to the April 20th meeting of the UW-Stout Amnesty International chapter in order to give them a clearer idea as to how the chapter can help them achieve their goals.

Ali Vazirabadi, chairman of the UW-Stout chapter, gave the students an orientation and informational background about the success of the University's organization. The group then joined the UW-Stout audience as they watched a video dealing with the death penalty.

"There is a good advantage to having a University spokesman to work with," said Francesca McCausland, a sophomore and chairperson for the AI chapter at the high school, "but Ali also wants us to be an independent group. We want to be affiliated, but not totally dependent."

According to Maree Holmstrom, a senior and assistant chairperson for the AI chapter at Menomonie High, the students want to "let people know there is a problem. We care about each other and want to live in a peaceful world."

Janet Saatcamp, treasurer for AI at Menomonie High, relayed her feeling that the organization would be "a good opportunity to get involved."

The Menomonie students hope to encourage new members to join by co-sponsoring an educational night in coordination with the Stout chapter. The evening would tentatively include a speech further explaining the role of AI and would most likely conclude with a human rights film presentation.

The chapter would be financially supported through their own fund raising events, and they hope to publicize their group through various forms of media.

Samantha Samuel, publicity director for the chapter is planning to "put up information sheets in the building, include important information about the chapter in morning announcements, and advertise in the Dunn County News if it can be afforded."

The students at Menomonie Senior High School want to encourage all people in the Menomonie area to become a part of their organization. McCausland summed it up by stating, "As free Americans, we have the responsibility to be interested about public safety."

Students jump their hearts out for dollars

by Julie K. Ragatz

The Inter Residence Hall Association (IRHA) Rec Committee sponsored events last Wednesday evening which included a jump rope fund-raiser for the American Heart Association, as well as a Twister tournament and video dance.

The jump rope contest has been done here before, and the committee thought it was for a good cause in addition to being fun and recreational.

> "We were trying to make a lot of things available to the students
> —Bob Christoffel

To raise money, pledge sheets were sent to the RA's and they recruited students to get involved. Students could compete as a team or individually, and could jump for and hour and a half.

The amount raised for the American Heart Association was close to $100, and there will be an additional donation made by the recreation committee.

Though the jump rope event was not new, the Twister tournament was. Said Bob Christoffel, co-advisor of the committee, "We were trying to make a lot of things available to the students."

Also new this year was the video dance. DJ's of the Mobile Music Machine from Minneapolis-St. Paul provided the videos, which were played on a large screen on the Great Hall stage.

Danette Boezio, chairperson of the IRHA recreation committee, commented that "the jump rope for heart is a good fund-raiser for the American Heart Association, and the video dance and twister is a lot of fun for the students. It gives them an alternative to going uptown."

Committee member Ronny Johnson said that this type of event "gives people a chance to regress back to their childhood and do a lot of fun things with other people that they wouldn't normally do."

About 50-100 people attended this year's event. Said Boezio, "I think people were a little hesitant about a video Twister dance and so the turnout was low, but those who came had a great time and next year I'm sure the turnout will be much higher."

Door prizes were given in addition to the regular prizes, and those who hadn't won anything by the end of the night were given a Twister mat or a recreation jersey.

Some of the prizes given were gift certificates from the Bookstore, Vintage Room, Commons PM, the Croissant Shop, the Jock Shop, and free bowling at the Recreation Center.

"It's a lot of hard work," said committee member Joan Brunner, "but it gets the IRHA name recognized and it's a lot of fun for the students."

Mike Weber, co-advisor of the committee, said "We want to get the IRHA rec committee known and we used a lot of our budget to make the event free."

He also said that they were happy with the cooperation they received from the Student Center, as well as those who worked at the event and especially the Milton Bradley Co. for donating all of the Twister mats.

Students had the opportunity to get answers to their questions concerning housing at the landlord-tenant panel discussion last week.

The panel included two lawyers, a landlord, aproperty manager, a tenant, and the Landlord-Tenant Representative of the SSA.

days after the tenant leaves to decide on whether all, part, or none of the security deposit will be returned to the tenant.

If no new address is left with the landlord, the security deposit is sent to the last known address, generally being the landlord's property. Of course, the landlord will get the mail, and ultimately, be entitled to keep the security deposit.

"The panel helped to educate some individuals who will hopefully in turn educate others," said Misfeldt.

Misfeldt added that though students are no more naive than other consumers, their age and lack of experience can cause problems for them when it comes to things such as finding and renting a place to live.

In addition, one of the lawyers pointed out that many students have questions about contracts. Leases are considered contracts and they are binding unless the landlord gives you permission to get out of it.

In addition to holding the panel discussion, the new Consumer Information Catalog was distributed, which contains booklets on many federal publications of consumer interest, including the Consumer Resource Handbook.

Another booklet that is helpful to students is "Landlords and tenants the Wisconsin Way," which can be obtained from the Eau Claire Regional Office-Wisconsin Dept. of ATCP, 927 Loring Ave., Altoona, WI, 54720. The cost is $1.00 by mail or $.25 if it is picked up there.

Anyone who wants a Consumer Information Catalog or has any questions regarding consumers, landlords, or tenants, may contact Gail Misfeldt at x-1295 or stop by her office, 457 Home Economics. If she is not there, feel free to leave a note.

Forensics team third

UW-Stout's forensic team finished third in the President's II division at the National Forensics Association Collegiate Speech Nationals, which concluded this week at Mankato State University.

The finish was the highest yet for Stout, competing in the division classified as "small school entries," which consisted of 69 schools.

Stout was led by Sandra Lindholm, a semi-finalist in informative speaking and prose interpretation. Lindholm also competed in poetry interpretation.

Other national qualifiers competing for Stout were Paul Peltier, persuasive and impromptu speaking; Michelle Sanderson, prose and poetry interpretation; Dennis Freeberg, persuasive speaking; and Cheryl Martens, persuasive speaking.

Each of the competitors had to qualify for the national tournament on the basis of their performances throughout the forensics season, Mike Nicolai, team coach, said.

Nicolai added that a third place finish was "particularly gratifying because the Stout team was one of the smallest teams competing."

AIDS Initiative proposed

Recently unveiled before members of the State Legislature, Governor Tommy Thompson's AIDS Initiative is a seven part proposal designed to provide Wisconsin citizens with information needed to protect themselves from the AIDS virus.

The proposal also provides infected people with information to help them avoid infecting others, and allocates additional resources for the special informational programs to educate members in "high risk" communities.

Other parts of the proposal provide for prevention training for alcohol and drug abuse workers, and a statewide education campaign to heighten public awareness of the disease.

With a price tag of $495,300, 36 percent of the funding would come from the state's General Purpose Revenues. The remaining funds would come from a reallocation of federal funds from the Maternal and Child Health and Preventative Health block grants.

Specific legislation is being drafted and should be introduced formally to the Legislature shortly.

Persons with questions or comments about the issue may contact State Representative Dick Shoemaker at 112 West, State Capitol, Box 8953, Madison, Wisconsin, 53708, or call the Legislative Hotline at 1-800-362-9696.

Culinary awards

Two culinary students from UW-Stout won honors in a competition at the 1987 Culinary Arts Salon of the 54th annual Wisconsin Restaurant Association--Wisconsin Innkeepers Association, Food Service and Lodging Trade Show held recently in Milwaukee.

Eric Noonan, a senior from Kaukauna, majoring in hotel and restaurant management, received a gold medal for his "Monte Ty' Thou Salmon in Saffron Sauce" culinary display.

John Schulz, a senior from Menomonie, also majoring in hotel and restaurant management, received a gold medal for his "Orchard Hill Stuffed Veal Tenderloin" culinary display.

Philip McGuirk, assistant professor and advisor, said this was the second time Stout has entered the competition. The students were judged against other entrants from the midwest.

Each entry was judged on the following: composition, preparation, presentation, degree of difficulty, proper color, texture, practical portion size, originality and presentation of a natural appetizing appearance.

State Representative William Berndt (R-River Falls) was among those who successfully argued for a cap on the amount of tuition charged to UW-System students.

During the 70's, resident undergraduate tuition was frozen at 25 percent of instructional costs, but since 1980, under the Earl Administration, the amount had increased to 31.4 percent. The budget currently under consideration would raise the student's share to 33.4 percent.

The tuition cap was a recommendation made to the Joint Finance Committee by the Assembly of Colleges and Universities after a 7-1 vote in favor of the cap.

"I want to see tuition remain affordable to families," Bernt said.

Since the recommendation alone does not carry much weight, the United Council, an organization of student governments system-wide, plans to concentrate it's efforts in the next several weeks on lobbying members of the Joint Finance Committee.

The United Council will focus their efforts on the Education and Labor Discussion groups, and will stress the need for a stable tuition rate and further increases in financial aid.

Judges ruling favors agency

Judge Mark A. Frankel granted summary judgement for the Wisconsin Higher Education Corporation (WHEC), undercutting a decision by the Legislature to keep tabs on this organization.

A veto in 1985 by then Governor Anthony Earl was overridden by the Legislature, enacting a law that would:

-Make the head of the corporation subject to political appointment.

-Have the organizations board subject to open meetings and open records laws.

-Subject the organization to state audit and ethics, purchasing travel expense and employee compensation rules.

Without express declaration of legislative purpose, Frankel said, he could not take judicial notice of any valid public purpose supporting the legislation.

The 20 year old Wisconsin Higher Education Corporation (WHEC), which was for many years the financing arm of the Higher Aids Education Board, established its own identity in 1984.

It guarantees and services all student loans, for which the state has borrowed $215 million. In 1985, WHEC was servicing loans of about $580 million.

Wisconsin Badger Camp is now hiring male counselors, nature director, head cook, dietary technician, kitchen assistants, and nurses (GN,LPN,RN).

Badger Camp, near Prairie du Chien, serves the developmentally disabled June 6-August 16. Employees must live on camp property. Fieldwork is also available.

If interested, contact Nancy Estrem, camp director, by writing to Badger Camp, Box 240, Platteville, WI 53818, or calling (608) 348-9689.

SITAs goal to prepare students for business world

by Karen Smith

Stout Information Technology Association (SITA), a recently founded organization on UW-Stout campus, is designed to help prepare students for the business world after they graduate.

Mike Melnychuk, president of SITA, sees the group as beneficial to all students at Stout who might use computers in their career.

"Our primary goal is to get up on recent trends of technology and prepare students for working on computers in the business field," Melnychuk said.

SITA, which was started with the help of advisor Scott Simonson in November, now has 36 members. "This year we basically just worked on organizing the group," Melnychuk added.

SITA is encouraging students from all majors to join, since they feel everyone will benefit. "People will run into computers in every occupation," Melnychuk said. "I think Stout lacks good computer courses and this group will help develop better skills."

"We want to keep up on what's new in industry regarding computers and automation," Melnychuk stated.

The group plans to sponsor speakers to give presentations to help in educating students.

"We also are trying to get affiliated with other national groups that would look good in a business setting, and on a resume," Melnychuk mentioned.

SITA is planning a party at Riverside Park, with the date set tentatively for May 12. Beverages will be provided, and it is free. Interested individuals can contact Melnychuk for more information.

OPINIONS

Editorial

Spring Fever

Attendance is down in classes all over this campus.

Now that the nice weather has appeared, many students have decided that they want and deserve a break from the routine drudgery of classes in overheated classrooms.

Many of the students who make it as far as the classroom don't get much out of their 50-minute visit because they are watching the clock more than the instructor. This could be due, in part, to the fact that the instructor is unorganized or hasn't put much of an effort into capturing the students' interest. Many instructors lecture directly out of the textbook - so why not read the the textbook on your beach towel at Riverside Park?

The main reason to resist the temptation to cut classes would probably be that an average on-campus Stout student spends $3,500-4,000 per year to get an education at UW-Stout. At that rate, it would be a lot cheaper to sit at home on a beach towel and read something more to your liking. You'd probably learn about the same amount.

There is a reason for class attendance, believe it or not. That is probably why people come to Stout in the first place. They want to get an education in whatever field they choose to pursue. But along with that, as college students, most people should expect to mature and become more interesting people, as they acquire that well-rounded education.

The question is: how can you expect to get all of that from your beach towel and bottle of suntan lotion at the park?

Maybe Stout students should take a good look at what their university has to offer, to learn to appreciate how good they've really got it. Small classes of 20-30 students are unheard of at some larger, metropolitan universities. At those schools, students are numbers not people. They are lucky to look the teacher in the eyes in a lecture of 300-400 students, as opposed to Stout students who are encouraged by most Stout faculty to ask questions during assigned office hours.

Stout students also need to look further down the road. Check out the long-term benefits of being a dedicated student.

People can do the minimal amount of work - "enough to get by" - but is that what you really want for yourself? Is that why people spend the big bucks for an education? For the diploma??

The cruel reality will ruthlessly attack those who don't put forth an honest effort to make it to class on a regular basis. People with the ability to learn without personal instruction are very few and far between. What will those park-dwellers do when they get out into the "real world?" There will be no free rides for most people. And your park buddies won't be there to support you.

You will be expected to show up for work on time. You will be expected to know you field inside and out. You will be expected to keep informed on the latest technology.

Can a beach towel prepare you for that??

One Point Perspective

In the swim

Jean-Marie Dauplaise

With less than a month left of school, it is becoming increasingly difficult to concentrate on academic matters. Class attendance is at an all time low for the year, and parties, barbecues and various impromptu activities of a recreational nature are at an all time high.

The guys next door have opened a driving range next to the tennis courts, and there are bonfires in the Weber at least once a week. I'm just waiting to see what happens when they run out of things to burn.

As I drive to school, (Dad gave the car back) I pass guys playing hackey sack while nearby, girls in little swimming suits cover themselves with oil and drink wine coolers. It makes me want to turn around, go home, put on my suit, grab a six pack and hit the beach.

The first time out in my swimming suit is always a traumatic affair. Well, actually, it's not traumatic until I see other people in their swimming suits and realize that Loni Anderson is having a family reunion right next to me. I wonder at this time if it's possible to tan while lying in a sleeping bag.

Eventually I recover from my depression by counting how many girls look worse than I do. Sure, it doesn't sound nice, but I'm looking out for my mental health. Besides, I come by it honestly. My own father has always told me there should be a law against fat women wearing shorts. He's still waiting.

In the meantime, the swimmingsuit industry is making remarkable progress in their efforts to make the most of every body. Why, just eighty years ago they stitched a girdle inside swimming suits to hold in the fat. Shortly after that they discovered sewing padded bras into women's swimwear to enhance the size of their bust. And, to hide a bulging stomach, they cleverly stitched a curtain around the area.

For those not in need of such technological innovations, the trend in swimwear is "The smaller the better". The bikini is still popular, but is still dangerous to water ski in. It is also dangerous when there are mature men nearby who have just recently learned how to unhook and untie things. When guys do this I can't help but wonder if they're still learning to tie their shoes. If a girl does it I get out of the water.

One piece suits are getting smaller as each season passes. They're not bad once you figure out how to get them off the hanger and onto your body. The only problem with them is that they leave funny tan lines.

Although women are getting more daring in their baring, men are still the champs at the beach when it comes to just barely evading arrest for indecent exposure. I am referring, of course, to the renowned Speedo.

There are two kinds of men who wear Speedos. Those who can get away with it, and those who can't. The inherent problem with the first group is that their egos are usually inversely related to the size of their suits. The problem with the men in the second group is that they are ususally unaware that they look bad or may possibly be nauseating others. This is especially likely to happen when the suit is wet.

Despite the problems that swimming suits cause I am going to continue wearing mine until some mastermind of modern technology discovers a way for me to tan in the privacy of my sleeping bag.

Subject: A behind the scenes look at how the intramural program operates

by Paul Emerson

As associate administrator of physical education and athletics, and director of intramurals, Rita Slinden finds her job(s) both challenging and rewarding.

Born and raised in Allison, Iowa, Slinden took her undergraduate studies at UW-La Crosse, and then taught at the junior high and high school levels in Dubuque, Iowa.

After deciding that this level of teaching was not where she really wanted to be, she left her teaching job and enrolled at Mankato State University, Minn., where she received her Masters before arriving here at Stout in August of 1971.

In the 16 plus years since here on the Stout campus, Slinden has gone through several job changes. Her past jobs have included coaching several women's teams in swimming, track, cross country, and one year of basketball somewhere in between.

Now married and the mother of two, Diane, 7, and Mark, 3, Slinden no longer coaches women's athletics, something she misses but explained that as a change in priorities.

Slinden's husband, Howard, is the director of the Business Office and Student Business Services here at Stout.

What are some of the responsibilities of your position here at Stout?

As far as the associate administrator part of it is concerned, I'm in charge of all the scheduling of all the physical education classes; when they're offered, who teaches them, and where they're held, (classroom, pool, etc.) I advise all of the students in the coaching certification minor. I handle the physical education and recreation budgets.

I'm also the fieldhouse facility coordinator. The scheduling is done on a priority list, with the physical education classes having priority over student use. Followed by athletic contests, athletic prac-

Paying the bill?

Dear Editor:

Tuesday night, April 21, 1987, the USS did something that was by far the biggest thing they have done in the two years I have been here at Stout. What it this "big thing?" They obligated future Stout students to approximately $10.00 per year increase in their tuition to pay for the completion of the basement of the new Student Union building. The estimated completion cost of this project is $850,000. Tuition is rising, enrollment is being cut back and the demographics indicate fewer college-bound students in the next 10-15 years, yet the Student Senate wants to spend more money to enlarge the present accommodation! Why?

The proposition was presented to the Senate Caucus one half hour before the regular Senate meeting, and when the presenter of the proposal was asked how much the proposal would cost and who would pay for it, he stated that all such questions would be answered at the Senate meeting. At the Senate meeting, we were informed that each student is now paying $80 per year on a 30-year mortgage for the new Student Union Building and the completion of the basement area would only add about another $10-12 per year to the students' tuition for the next 20 years. The senators were also told that the plans were not necessarily cast in stone, that some adjustments in space use cold be made, but that immediate Senate approval was needed so the long process of obtaining the necessary approvals cold begin this biennium.

When some of the senators wanted to delay the vote for a week so they could digest this information and make some effort to make an intelligent decision, a few of the senate executives spoke against such a measure stating that we should trust the committee and that we were not spending $850,000 but were merely approving the idea. Yet, Mr. Bob Johnson, director of the Student Center had just shown an overhead slide illustrating the many steps in the approval process and the first such step was the University Student Senate of the Stout Student Association's approval. Mr Johnson said that the committee had been working on this proposal for almost two years. I have been on the Senate for the past year and have not heard any news of, or reports on, this committee's work until that night. Why the secrecy? Why the rush, particularly in view of the diminishing enrollment in the foreseeable future?

To me, the spending of $850,000 of students' money is a big deal. That is big news! Why was it rushed through the Senate with barely an hour's notice? Who is representing the Stout students? Who is keeping the students informed? Who is playing the devil's advocate for the Stout students? When this project is completed, most of the present students will be gone, so they will not have to pay the bill!!

I think that Stout is a great place. It has nice facilities, and it is well run, and I know it is always good to have more recreational space and facilities, but maybe we should do our part in keeping tuition down so people who barely can afford a college education can continue.

Think about it, Stout students. If enrollment decreases as the Board of Regents has indicated, the segregated fees would have to be increased to keep up the present mortgage obligations and other

The almighty dollar

Cosmas A. Whitten

How corrupt can our country become? What is this world coming to when medical books have actual photographs of naked people. Can you believe a nasty book like Life magazine can be sold in public? How about all those dirty rated R movies being made. I sure am happy there are people like Jerry Falwell to censor these things, aren't you?

Sure this is a free country and the citizens should know what printed pages they want to read or what movies they want to see but they are not capable of making such a decisions. Seems some evil force lurks into our minds and makes us choose the sinful way of life.

What could be more corrupt than pictures of nude people, even if they are in a medicine book? Could it be people making money off of religion?

Earlier this week I received the letter that could "save my life." All I have to do is write down my sins that I want forgiven and the money I would like to obtain and send them in to this group of people that will pray for me everyday.

Besides the daily prayers that these people will say for me I will receive a list of prayers that I should say. The prayers are all hand picked according to my specific needs.

Included in my letter were letters that have been written to this group from satisfied customers. "I don't have money problems anymore. How can I thank you," was what J.C. from Georgia wrote.

M.P. from New York says, "I received the money I needed to pay my bills." While E.B. from Philadelphis writes, "The Lord has blessed me financially."

If I send in my sins within in the next ten days I will receive a surprise gift. What a deal, prayers and a gift all for $19.99, money back guarantee.

Who else could I give my money too in the name of...? How about becoming a moonie like the one who approached me one night in the L-Mart parking lot. A moonie donates all their money to the moonie cause, so I have heard.

I wish the Jehovah Witness would leave me alone. No, I do not want your phamplets or advice so quit knocking at my door.

Who sent Oral Roberts money so he could live to see April Fool's day? I sure worked overtime so I could write a big, fat check.

What do I know about religious ripoffs, maybe they really work. I am just a dumb bunny worshiper anyway. I do know this, I wish people would quit preaching to me. I have my own belief and I do not want to hear about the others-I am sick of it.

"Freedom of choice, it's the American Way," is what the commercial says. Why then do I have to be censored? God gave me hands that I can change a channel or close a book with. I suppose if someone does not like what they see they can close their eyes-that is what eyelids are for.

tices, intramurals and recreation activities, and finally the outside groups. Of course sometimes the outside group will bump all of those, for an example, the commencement exercises coming up in a couple of weeks.

In addition I handle all of the purchasing for physical education equipment. I work very closely with Dr. Bowlus in terms of the athletic program, and handle things when he is not available.

As far as the director of intramurals is concerned, my responsibilities are primarily prodramatic. I work with Rob Klemn, who is the assistant intramural director, scheduling what activities we are going to offer, when we will offer them, and we hire all the student employees, etc.

What do you feel the Intramural programs have to offer Stout's students?

"Well, I think that we offer a wide variety of activities in terms of lots of different types of life-time sport offerings. We do offer a few things that, for example things like wrestling, football, and basketball, things that very few students will likely participate in once they are through with their professional education, while the physical education classes like archery, golf, and bowling are more of your lifetime activities. There are a lot of things that we offer, that are not offered on a competitive varsity level, for example hockey, broomball, or should I call it mudball as it was called this year, and other activities like that."

What benefit will the intramural programs have from the new fieldhouse addition?

It'll be a great addition, without a question. Our intramural programs have been on what you would call hold for several years, but with the new facility intramurals and recreation in general will take, at least in that part of the facility, will take a different priority, (referring to the list stated above.) We will be able to offer open recreation throughout the day, and offer intramural scheduling much earlier in the evening, perhaps around 6 or 7 p.m. The facility itself, although it will be used extensively for athletics, has primarily come about because of lack of recreational space available on campus.

What intramural programs do you run during the summer?

We have a very, very limited program in the summer. Most of the time students who are here in the summer are interested in open recreation. There are enough other organized recreational programs in town, for example the Menomonie Softball Association, and the city recreation programs, that the university really does not offer much in terms of a structured intramural program. So in the past we've generally had our facilities available, however this year the use will be very limited because of the construction, and having no locker rooms. And the fieldhouse area will be closed because I think they are going to finish the bleacher project in there.

"People occasionally stumble over the truth, but most of them pick themselves up and hurry off as if nothing had happened."
Winston Churchill

Planned parenthood has something up its sleeve that I feel should be exposed for the lie that it really is. We all need to be alerted to its recent scheme to put birth control clinics in public schools across the country.

These clinics, called School Based Clinics, (SBC's) make condoms, pills, and other forms of birth control available to students free of charge, without parental knowledge, let alone consent. (Isn't it odd that a 14 year old girl needs parental consent to have her ears pierced, but can obtain a diaphram or any other form of birth control from one of these SBC's)

Pregnancy testing is also available to students on the same basis. Abortions are not performed at these clinics, however, referrals are made during the counseling done at these clinics.

Why is this so wrong, you ask? Well, for starters, there is no such thing as a free lunch. These clinics are paid for by you and me, United States taxpayers. I can think of at least 10 other programs that I would actively support before this one. One in particular, the Sex Respect Program, comes to mind.

Sex Respect differs from other sex education programs in that it offers a values based morals system rather than trying to attempt to teach a "neutral" morals system.

Most sex education taught today is based around a religion called secular humanism. It teaches behavior based upon satisfying one's own needs, not the needs of anyone else...even God.

Another problem that I have with SBC's is that they claim to reduce the amount of teenage pregnancies. I have yet to hear anything other than the contrary. The studies that I have seen show an actual increase in the number of teen pregnancies following the start of a SBC.

Since Planned Parenthood, the main proponent of these clinics, has only one solution to the problem of unplanned pregnancies, I need not mention how these pregnancies turned out. About the only "success" that Planned Parenthood has claimed is that the number of children actually being born to teenagers has gone down. The number of positive pregnancy tests is still on the rise, however.

Kids are going to do it anyway: that's the rational that proponents of SBC's give for their zealous campaign to put a birth control clinic in every junior and senior high school in the country.

Using the above reasoning, wouldn't it also follow that pharmaceutical dealers and chemists should teach classes on the "safe" use of drugs? Courses such as "Freebasing I and II" or possibly a senior level course called "Intervenious Drug Use Through the Ages". Since we wouldn't want our children to buy any back-alley drugs from some unscrupulous, unlicensed unprofessional drug dealer, we should distribute drugs to the students in "safe" doses. This way we could ensure that students would have "safe controlled substances". I mean, after all, if they're gonna use them anyway, shouldn't we at least try to to remove some of the dangers?

Sound crazy? You bet it does! Anyone who tried to propose the above plan to the school board would be laughed right out on their ear. Likewise, making birth control available to underage kids is nonsense. While the clinics are not outwardly condoning sexual promiscuity, they have successfully created an environment in which there are few, if any, restrictions on sexual behavior.

There is a day coming, not too far off, when the liberals in this country will wake up and realize the damage that they have caused to millions of young women and their children.

Cryptic Notes

Talk to me

Tim Hopkins

"I don't need to know how to write. My secretary will do that for me."

I hope the secretaries of the world never attend UW-Stout. The disregard for reading and writing skills shared by Stout students is shocking at best.

My experience here has made me believe that my concern for the English language borders on being abnormal. I made the mistake of proof reading too closely according to the few students who took advantage of their friendly resident copy editor.

The media has indeed become the message. The media's substitution for the message has resulted in mass confusion. If we learned to focus on what people were saying, rather than on how they said it, Ronald Reagan would not begin to be judged among the greatest presidents in American history.

That last statement considers the fact that the average student enrolled at UW-Stout considers history to be bunk. I am concerned by the number of students lacking any ideas concerning how we came to be where we are today.

Members of the Stout Student Association have pointed accusingly at The Stoutonia when discussing the almost total lack of student interest in both SSA and city politics.

The lack of voter interest results in part from the feeling of separation created between the governing body and the governed. Government of, by and for the people is the concept of democracy, but when the people have lost interest in what concerns their neighbors than the people have given up the right to govern themselves.

If you gave up your right to participate in democracy you can gain it back by working toward a common goal. Too many students sit silently in their classes, waiting for their professors to dole out knowledge. The student attitude commonly encountered is, "I'm here, so teach me."

If you lack the nerve to make a possibly incorrect response in college, it will be practically impossible to learn at all. I encourage students to speak up, create a dialogue between themselves and teachers so we all might learn from the experience.

I have simply had it with attending classes where not a single student says anything for fear of saying something stupid and I sympathize with each professor who must perform a 50 minute monologue each class session.

Education has progressed so far and yet we seem stuck in a rut at UW-Stout. The dissatisfaction with classes here seems to be shared by both the students and the faculty. It is about time we worked together to achieve a solution.

UW-Stout has traditionally been a teaching institution. By working to eliminate the frustration suffered by teachers and students alike here, the Stout community may learn the greatest lesson of all.

continuing contractual obligations. Do we want to increase it even further so we can have another eating place or another TV room? What is your opinion? Do you have any ideas as to how the present Student Union's space can be more efficiently utilized? I suggest you tell the Senate what you think, also tell The Stoutonia. I wonder what The Stoutonia's opinion of a governing body that deliberates a little over an hour on a $850,000 expenditure and then spends almost as much time on the allocation of an extra $400 to the United Council expense fund. Maybe we are "rubber stamps."

Another Dimension

Dear Editor:

Glancing through last weeks' edition of The Stoutonia, we came across an article which we thought was going to praise the Dance Dimension. Instead, It poorly critiqued it. Suddenly, we felt total humiliation and aggravation towards Bill Krueger, a guy we have never met.

At first, we thought to just let it go by. What impact could one guy's opinion have? Well, it has a great impact on the many people who support Dance Dimension, including us. So great, that we felt the need to voice our opinion and get this guy straight about it.

The one thing which outraged us the most was your referral to the music as, and we quote you, "black music." So our question to you is what exactly is "black music?" While we are on the subject, what exactly is your definition of "white music?"

Secondly, it is most apparent that you are not very informed on what Dance Dimension is all about. We would like to tell you that it is put on by many dedicated people, too numerous to mention. Without them, this activity could not take place. I know the many "regulars" of the Dance Dimension would be disappointed without this activity. We are grateful to the many people who put on this activity.

We would also like to inform you that there is a dress code along with the Dance Dimension, and your shorts do not cut it. They are not telling you to wear your Sunday's best, but to look half was decent. Maybe you should have researched a little more before just strolling in!!

In reference to your suggestion that they should have a theme, if again you were informed, you would have known that a beach party theme was presented on March 21, 1987. Here is where you and your shorts would have had a great time.

We both concluded that one opinion from an uninformed person such as yourself is very irrelevant. As a writer, you should have "researched" your material much more. We personally think this is a very embarrassing situation you have put yourself in. Our suggestion to you is that you go back to the Meet Market where it is at least 100 degrees, and be sure to wear your shorts. Oh, one last thing, Bill, bring lots of change for the juke box. This way you can select and dance to all of the "white music" of your choice.

Deb Hudziak, Linda Bahr

Editor's note:

The term "Black music" is sometimes used in popular music magazines, such as Rolling Stone, to describe a certain type of soul music.

"Shoes of Yesterday" exhibit featured

by Rhonda Olson

Today the average American man or woman could own eight to 10 pairs of shoes and not consider it to be in excess. Many other people, mostly women, may own over 25 pairs of shoes.

According to the Wohl Shoe Company of St. Louis, Missouri, the shoe "wardrobe idea" is 2200 years old. The Grecian female's shoe wardrobe was as varied as many of ours is today, but in those times, only wealthy women could afford it. It was said that as a wealthy woman progressed through the day, her maids would follow along carrying all the necessary shoes required for that one day.

Part of the reason people today have so many shoes is due to the fact that many shoes don't really wear out, even though the person is tired of them.

Many people have shoes that are old, anywhere from five to seven years. It is highly doubtful, however, that people own shoes which are over 100 years old. It is even more doubtful that people have seen shoes which could be over 200 years old.

"Shoes of Yesterday" is an exhibit which features shoes from places such as England, Germany, China, Java, and the United States.

Bonnie Kirkwood, curator of the shoe exhibit said that it is an honor that Stout has been allowed to show the exhibit to students and the community.

The Wohl Shoe Company has a large collection of antique shoes in Missouri. A traveling collection was formed to share the exhibit with others.

The "Shoes of Yesterday" exhibit is sponsored by the Apparel, Textiles, and Design Department in the school of Home Economics.

Some of the shoes featured in the exhibit include: American footwear from the late 19th, and early 20th centuries; a child's high top shoe with a patented copper scuff guard; Alaskan wolverine skin shoes which have beaded "eyes, snout, and fangs;" and a four-inch silk shoe worn by Chinese women who suffered painful "binding," which stunted the foot's growth.

Fifty-five shoes reflecting the customs of the people who wore them are on exhibit in Room 369 of the Home Economics building. Any interested person may view the collection between the hours of 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. from April 27 to May 8.

Student artist-in-residence to address art and technology

by J.M. Dauplaise

A new program will be implemented with the start of the 1987-88 school year with the Student Artist-In-Residence Program. The program will provide for two individuals the opportunity to address the relationship of art and technology, as well as establishing a unique permanent art collection to be housed in the Library Learning Center.

The two individuals will be selected from campus by the Student Artist-In-Residence Committee comprised of Ron Verdon, program director, Dennis Olson of the Library Learning Center, and Dr. Robert Sedlak.

Selections will be based on two faculty recommendations, a current transcript, and an application including an outline defining the nature of the applicant's proposal and its relationship to art and technology.

The selected individuals will receive a $500 stipend for the academic year, an account to draw from up to $900 for materials/related expenses, and an appropriate studio space. The selected students will work with a faculty mentor and will finalize their projects by May of 1988.

A year-end exhibition of the work completed by the Student Artists-In-Residence at the Library Learning Center and one piece will be donated for permanent collection there.

"the progam will provide the community with a continuing resource —Ron Verdon"

All Stout students, regardless of their major are eligible for the program. Applications are available in 324AA and are due June 15th. An informational meeting regarding the program will be held May 11 at 4:00 p.m. in 320AA.

The Student Artist-In-Residence Program was established to make more art available to the Stout community and to explore the relationship existing between art and technology. The Library Learning Center was selected as a logical central site in which to house an art collection for the university.

The scholarship funding for the program, which is provided by the Stout University Foundation, will provide for students the chance to pursue projects which normally they may not have been able to.

"The program," said its director, Ron Verdon, "will provide the community with a continuing resource in a public place. It will also nicely reflect the attitudes existing at Stout. Students will be able to participate in a real way in devoloping observations and responding to the environment in which they work."

With technology playing such a large role at Stout the program will allow for a bridging of the gap separating the technology oriented majors from the area of fine arts. Said Verdon, "I see the program as being important to students, the university, and the community."

Traveling, teaching and painting keep art prof. Wimmer busy

by J.M. Dauplaise

A familiar figure to anyone familiar with the Art Department at Stout is Charles Wimmer, best known as 'Charlie'. Wimmer has taught a large variety of courses here including Painting, Printmaking, various Drawing classes, and Fundamentals of Design.

Wimmer, sho recieved his MFA from the University of Minnesota, has been teaching here for 21 years. He has spent seven of those 21 abroad in England, five of which were spent teaching.

Wimmer has been instrumental in arranging exchange programs between Stout and various British schools. These exchanges have included both faculty members and students.

Wimmer is proud of the number of people who have been able to participate in the program and that Stout "...which is a relatively rural school, has a unique situation. We've done this without much official support," said Wimmer.

While in England, Wimmer has taught at a variety of schools, such as the Central College of Art and Design, Maidstone College of Art and Design, Bournemouth Colleg of Art and Design, Berkshire College of Art and Design, and Oxford Polytechnic. He has also lectured at an additional 15 colleges and saught a summer art program at Cambridge.

> "It's really an adventure meeting people and seeing new places.
> —Charlie Wimmer"

Wimmer enjoys traveling and meeting new people. In his travels he has met a number of prominent British artists including John Plumb, Marc Vaux, Adrian Berg, John Loker and Stuart Brisley. "Over the years I've met a broad spectrum of people," said Wimmer. "It's really an adventure meeting people and seeing new places."

In addition to his traveling, Wimmer also works a great deal, producing a prolific 50 paintings a year. He works in an abstract manner focusing on the relationship between color and shape. "It's a lot more fun exploring color and shape than working with figurative elements," Wimmer said.

Wimmer works on a rather large scale. One work, "La Mexicaine" dominates the west wall of Wimmer's studio, vibrating with geometric shapes of vibrant hue. "It reflects the abstract qualities in the music I listen to. It's named after an instrumental piece of the same name," he said.

Wimmer's paintings sometimes resemble prints reflecting the artist's experience with the printing medium. "I'm not interested in making editions," says Wimmer. "If I want to make 50 pieces I make 50 different ones."

Whether working or traveling Wimmer likes to "...have fun and enjoy life." He'll be leaving Menomnie for England once again when he departs for the summer on May 24.

I don't want it all!

Denise Cain

I attended my first brat cookout of the year Saturday. The conversation was focused around the usual beer topics until one guy flippantly stated, "Yeah, all women want from men is a serious relationship."

I choked on my beverage only to hear the next Stout male add, "No, all women want from men is money." MONEY? What females are looking for men with money, at STOUT?

Obviously there are some real communication problems between the two sexes. I have once again gone to my advice panel of level-headed but hip females. They have given me some other popular misconceptions as to what guys think females want but we really do not give a damn about.

WHAT GUYS THINK GIRLS WANT, BUT WE REALLY DON'T

1. We don't all want a big wedding next June, I couldn't possibly lose the weight by then.
2. We don't all want a baby to set the wedding date a few years earlier.
3. We don't all want great looking guys, long noses and slightly crooked teeth can be perfect.
4. We don't all want a guy with a bufu hairdo, a little hair loss is NOT unattractive.
5. We don't all want a guy who is an absolute body builder. I hate a guy who has a bigger chest than me.
6. We don't all want a guy to bring home to meet the family, the neighbors, the church congregation, and the livestock.
7. We don't all want a guy who can spit his Copenhagen six feet across the Marion Bar.
8. We don't all want a guy with a hairy chest. It is like getting a rug burn from a shag carpet.
9. We don't all want a guy who can slam a beer in 30 seconds. If they can't drink faster than me, what is the point?
10. We don't all want a guy who dresses meticulously. Clothing is never permanent.

1 tsp. baking powder
12 oz. chocolate chips.

Combine the margarine and the sugars with mixer, add eggs and vanilla. Put oatmeal in blender until it has a powder consistency. Stir in the flour, oatmeal and baking powder. Add the chips and bake 10 minutes in a 375-degree oven. Makes 3-dozen cookies.

Chili Rice Casserole

1 lb. ground beef
1 med. onion, chopped
1/2 green pepper, chopped
1 clove garlic, minced
1 can whole tomatoes, cut up
1 can kidney beans, drained

1 tsp. sugar
1 tsp. chili powder
1 cup shredded Cheddar cheese

Crumble beef in 2-qt. casserole dish or skillet. Add onion, pepper and garlic. Cover and microwave on high for 4-6 minutes or cook uncovered on stove top until meat loses pink color. Stir to break up meat and drain. Add rest of ingredients except for cheese. Microwave for 16-20 minutes, stirring after half the time; or simmer on stove for 30-35 minutes. Sprinkle cheese over top of casserole and cover. Let stand for five minutes. Serves 4-6 people.

Music events to close Spring Fest activities

by Jennifer Tooley

There is still time to "waddle into Spring Fest," the 1987 Spring Fair sponsored by the Special Events Commission of the University Programming Board. With three days of activity left, there is bound to be something available to help you celebrate spring!

Tonight, the Special Events Commission and Contemporary Music Productions, both of the UPB, are sponsoring a "get down dance and beach party," in the Great Hall at 8 p.m. Ipso Facto, a popular Wisconsin reggae band, will provide the music. There will also be limbo contests and prize giveaways.

On Friday, The Pawn will be featuring two talented performers. Robin Crow, a new-age guitarist, will be playing in the Pawn Patio at 4 p.m., and will join Bill Miller, a guitarist, at 7 p.m., also on the Patio. Bill Miller will move inside to The Pawn at 9:15 p.m. to perform on his own.

Robin Crow is a self-taught musician from Nashville, Tenn. He has been playing since the age of 10 and performing since he was 17. He has recorded five albums, including "Creator," his fifth and most popular album. "Creator" has been classified as new-age music, a relatively new form of music that encompasses jazz, classical, and folk styles.

Crow believes "the music is what it is. I would like to think my music can be a vehicle for people to meditate and pray by, for relief at the end of the day." Music from "Creator" and from other Crow albums will be performed at Friday's performance.

Bill Miller, a Wisconsin native, began to play at age 12. He attended art school for a short time, but left to pursue a career in music, his first love. His style combines rock, country, and bluegrass, yet is unique onto itself. Miller performs mostly his own compositions, which bring together his Native American heritage and his own personal experiences. His first album, "Bill Miller-Native Sons" has been tremendously popular and Miller's success seemingly has no bounds. His performance is not to be missed.

Saturday, "An Afternoon in the Sun," will be the last day of Spring Fest. Both Crow and Miller will be performing, and the Recreation Commission will sponsor the UW-Stout Canoe Classic at noon.

For further information on any of the Spring Fest activities, contact the Stout Student Association at X-2432.

Ipso Facto brings reggae style to final CMP concert

by Gretchen Pemberton

The time has come for the last concert of the year sponsored by Contemporary Music Productions (CMP). The theme is a beach party, and luckily, an innovative reggae band, Ipso Facto, will be performing tonight in the Great Hall.

Ipso Facto's reggae style is a fusion of rhythmic pop, rock and R&B. Their style, stage performance and sound is truly unique and entertaining.

The eight-piece band, including three family members, Wain McFarlane, the lead, Juju on bass guitar and their little sister, Julitta, on drums, has been credited heavily for their performances.

Ipso Facto has earned five awards from the Minnesota Music Awards, six from the Minnesota Black Musician Awards and also won a contest including an appearance on MTV with their anti-drug tune "No Cocaine."

Their most exciting honor could be their invitation to the five day Sun Splash Festival in Montego Bay, Jamaica last summer.

Ipso Facto was the only United States band asked to appear in the festival in memory of Bob Marley.

Ipso Facto attempts to get people more attuned to the struggles in South Africa. Their political messages involve areas in justice,

> "Rock the body, trigger the mind."
> —Wain McFarane

injustice, violence, nuclear war and peace.

According to an article written in the Kansas City Star, Wain McFarlane said, "We want to make sure people can dance, Ipso Facto's goal is to rock the body and trigger the mind."

Christa Sanicola, University Programming Board chairperson said, "This is the first reggae band at Stout for three or four years." She hopes for and expects a great crowd turnout.

Barry Leis, C.M.P.'s publicity marketing manager said, "They're a real dynamic band. They really get the crowd going. They're fun to watch."

The concert is part of the Spring Fair festivities this week. C.M.P is working with the Special Events Committee, which will have Hawaiian leis for people that attend.

The show begins tonight at 9. They will be performing two 90-minute sets.

Between sets there will be prizes given away for a limbo contest. One of the prizes is "Communication," Ipso Facto's five-song mini-album and also t-shirts from the bookstore.

This impressive performance is free for all those who can locate their Stout student ID, and a dollar for those who can't.

Everyone is encouraged to wear their best beach attire and to have a good time.

Twist and Shout

Bowie not washed up

DAVID BOWIE
Never Let Me Down

David Bowie is not down for the count yet. He's over 40 and just released his 17th studio album.

"Day In Day Out" is the first single from the album. It's up to number 34 on Billboard's Top 100. I don't think the song is as good as most of his best songs, like "Changes" and "Young Americans." The song does reflect the times, though. It has a danceable rhythm with good lyrics.

My favorite song is "Glass Spider." Bowie starts off the song as if telling a story. It slowly builds into a song. I guess he really likes spiders; he hasn't given them up yet.

"Never Let Me Down" is another good song. It pays tribute to John Lennon.

The rest of the songs on the album are good, not great. The album has a really new sound. Bowie has put a good feel into the songs without going overboard. The songs are a lot better than most of the other music coming out today. The music has a lot of synthesizers and not a hard hitting beat.

Bowie's voice is as good as ever. He has written some really good lyrics, too. They aren't as good as they used to be, but look how old he is. Most musicians that old would be washed up by now.

This album is a must for Bowie fans. If you like all kinds of music, this is for you because the album doesn't fit into strictly the pop category or any other category.

David Bowie will start out a world tour in June. Peter Frampton will be playing lead guitar on the tour.

THE DEL FUEGOS
Stand Up

Did you ever hear the lead singer of this band? He has a voice more rough than sandpaper. Sounds like George Thorogood. It is good to get away from listening to wimpy singers, though.

The album isn't as good as their first album. In fact it isn't even on the charts. But, it hasn't been out too long either.

This band plays straight music. The songs sound like they were done in one take. Not that they sound bad, they just didn't fool around with adding synthesizers, drum machines, and over dubbing till there's no tomorrow. There are keyboards and horns, but not to the point where you'll be sick of hearing them.

The songs have a variety to them. You'll find yourself wondering what they're going to do next. You won't find yourself wondering when the album is going to end.

They start with a basic song like "I Can't Take This Place." Then they go into a heavy song, "News From Nowhere." Then they give us a slow song "I'll Sleep With You," which is a good love song unless you take the title dirty-minded.

The lyrics aren't bad. I don't think they took a lot of time writing them, though.

If you like bands like The Bodeans, Los Lobos and The Smithereens you'll want to get this album. As Slash says "The Del Fuegos is folk music, it's for folks."

Tracksters continue impressive showings

by Denise Cain

On April 21, the UW-Stout Men's Track Team took first place out of nine teams at the UW-River Falls Invitational. The men scored 134.5 team points defeating UM-Duluth, UW-Eau Claire, UM-Waseca, UW-Superior, UW-River Falls, College of St. Thomas, Northwestern College and Macalester College.

The Blue Devils had many high finishes including the 110 High Hurdles where once again, the top three finishes were taken by Stout tracksters. Brian Kohls won the event with a time of 15.4 seconds. Dan Doucette finished second in a time of 15.5 seconds and Zack Adams coasted in third with a time of 15.7 seconds.

Doucette had another strong finish in the 400 Intermediate Hurdles as he placed first overall in a time of 54 seconds. Brian Kohls finished sixth with a time of 59.5 seconds in this event.

Stout dominated the middle distance at River Falls as they had top places in both the 400 and 800 meter runs.

In the 400 meter, Dan Doucette ran 50.8 seconds earning him a second place finish, and Jeff Fimreite placed third with a 51.3 second run. In the 800 meter, Paul Bons hit first place as he ran the event in 1 minute, 56.6 seconds; and Steve Hoeschele took third place with a time of 2 minutes, 0.4 seconds.

Junior Bob Hackley finished ahead of four other athletes to win the Steeple Chase with a time of 9 minutes, 49.4 seconds.

Out in the field Randy Miller finished second in the hammer throw with a toss of 136 feet, 3 inches. Miller also placed fifth in the discus with a throw of 124 feet, 3.5 inches.

I am happy with my performance.

Both tying for first place in their field events were sophomore Chris Hagen, who tied for first place in the high jump with a height of 6 feet, 8 inches; and junior transfer student John Zastrow who tied for first place in the pole vault as he hit a height of 14-feet.

A limited travel crew competed strongly as they finished third with 75 team points at the Leo Schnurr Invitational at UW-La Crosse, April 25.

UW-La Crosse won the meet with 196 team points, and UW-Eau Claire followed with 101 points. Other teams who competed and finished behind Stout were: Luther College, UM-Duluth, UW-Platteville, College of Dubuque, University of Northern Iowa, Winona State, and UW-River Falls.

Once again the Blue Devil middle distance crew finished strong. Head Coach Steve Terry commented that the middle distance runners have been working very hard all year and their times have dropped considerably in the last two meets.

Standing out for Stout quarter milers include Junior Dan Doucette, Freshman Jeff Fimreite, Junior Mike Todey and Freshman Kevin Kohl. Kohl, a native of Appleton, Wis. had a personal best at La Crosse as he dropped his time by nearly two seconds.

Kohl said that he loves track, but he stated, "There have been difficult times during the year; trying to cope with some of the bad finish times I've had."

In the 400 meter run at the Leo Schnurr Invitational, Jeff Fimreite took third place with a time of 50.3 seconds, and Mike Todey ran 50.9 seconds to catch a fifth place finish.

In the 800 meter run senior Paul Bons once again took first place as Swing and a miss. An unidentified ex-Stout baseballer is a little late on this pitch as Devil's catcher Jeff Kloes is set to catch the pitch during Stout's Alumni baseball game Saturday. Tuesday night the Devils moved into first place by sweeping Superior in a double header.

by Chris Riba

With a little help from the Eau Clarie Blugolds the Blue Devils are finally in first place of the WSUC northern division. Eau Claire beat previously first placed River Falls last Wednesday and the Blue Devils swept Superior on Tuesday to give them a record of 10-2 and a one game lead with only 4 games to go.

In the first game Mike Charbonneau picked up the victory by throwing 5 innings and only alowwing 1 earned run. Brad Resch and Tim Fuerst came in and pitched an inning each of relief.

The Devils' first baseman Chris Larson went 3 for 4 and knocked in 2 runs. Robert Effinger had 2 doubles and Clark Bobert added another one. As the offense exploded for 9 runs while holding Superior to only 5.

In game 2 it was home run time for the Devils as they smashed the Yellow Jackets 9-0. Tim Osowski, Jeff Kloes and Karl Drezek all homered with Kloes going 3 for 4 and Drezek going 4 for 4.

Dave Crabtree pitched 6 innings of shut out ball and Joe Schopp came in and closed the door allowing only 4 hits between the two of them.

As the race comes down tho the last weekend the schedule slates the Devils with La Crosse (7-5) here on Friday and at River Falls (9-3) on Saturday. River Falls goes to Superior on Friday and La Crosse makes the trip on Saturday.

Draft Day '87

Paul Emerson

"...and remember, in the end, nobody wins less everybody wins." - Bruce Springsteen

It happens every April, near the end of the first month of the new baseball season. Right in the midst of the NBA (basketball), and the NHL (hockey) post-season playoffs.

Draft day. The one day in April that the NFL steals the spotlight from the rest of the sports world, at least for that one day.

This year Draft Day 87' was Tuesday. As many fellow (Green Bay) Packers fans, (the number is shrinking daily), may know, the Packers are known as one of the most consistent drafting teams in the NFL.

Consistently pathetic. Every year for the past ten years, the Packers' "braintrust" has gone into the draft full of knowledge and wisdom on each and every eligible draftee.

But every year it's the same old line, "we'll take the best player available," well here's a list of the best player available the last ten years, including this year.

The Packers' first round draft choices 1977-1987, and what became of them;

1977 - Two first round picks. First Ezra Johnson, a quality defensive end, (when he's not out with a sore back.) Then Mike Butler, defensive end, full of potential that never panned out. Opted for the USFL for a few years, returned, but was cut.

1978 - Arguably the best year of the ten. Two first round picks again. James Lofton, wide receiver, a former pro bowler turned sour. Traded to the L.A. Raiders earlier this month, sexual harassment case still pending. Then John Anderson, linebacker, a class act all the way, but breaks an arm or a leg just about every year.

1979- Eddie Lee Ivery, running back. Had some awesome potential, but knee injuries and drug problems ruined what could have been a brilliant career.

1980- George Cumby, linebacker. Stuck around for an unspectacular five or six years, then cut by the team.

1981- Rich Campbell, Quarterback. Sworn to be the quarterback of the future by the "braintrust." Took twelve snaps from center in five years and was traded. Where? Who cares!

1982- Ron Hallstrom, Guard. Still around, but haven't seen anything too spectacular in his play. Adequate at best.

1983- Tim Lewis, cornerback. Some awesome potential, had a super career that was cut short by a freak head-on collision while making a tackle last season.

1984- Alphonso Carreker, defensive end. Alphonso who?

1985- Ken Ruettgers, tackle. Another adequate offensive lineman. Has looked embarrassingly bad at times.

1986- First round pick traded for Mossy Cade. Took Kenneth Davis, running back, in second round. Has shown spurts of glory, but how can you respect a guy who played college ball for cash?

1987- Brent Fullwood, running back, from Auburn. Looks too good to be true, who knows?

Netters win WSUC dual matches

by Paul Emerson

After wrapping up the WSUC conference dual matches tournament, (one half of the WSUC championship), by whipping UW-Whitewater 9-0 last week, the UW-Stout men's tennis team took on some tough competition over the weekend in the Marquette University Invitational.

Stout lost two of three matches on the weekend, first losing to Marquette,(a Division I school), 4-5, then beating Wabasa, 9-0 before losing to another Division I opponent, N.Illinois by a 6-3 margin.

Including this weekend's action, Stout's overall record now stands at an impressive 31-12, with a perfect 7-0 final mark in the WSUC. The netters were also perfect in individual conference matches as they beat every opponent by the same 9-0 margin.

Stout now heads into post-season play by first hosting the NAIA District 14 play-offs this Friday and Saturday. Then next weekend it's the WSUC championships in Madison, and finally the NCAA and NAIA Championships on consecutive weeks.

(Stout must first win the District 14 play-offs to go to the NAIA nationals, while the NCAA nationals are by invitation only.)

In the latest ITCA Division III rankings available, April 5, Stout is ranked third in the Midwest Regional rankings, and 14th in the national poll.

In addition, Stout's number one singles player John Leehy, is ranked sixth, while number two singles player Tony Snoeyenbos is ranked 11th, and the doubles team of Snoeyenbos and Mike Friedman is ranked fifth in the Midwest Regional rankings.

Stout 9, Whitewater 0

While blanking the Warhawks in the match, three of the six singles matches went to three sets before being decided.

"Whitewater played well. We won three close matches in singles, who knows what would have happened if we had lost a couple of those three setters," said Head Coach Bob Smith.

John Leehy, Tony Snoeyenbos, and number six singles player Bill Johnson all won in straight sets. As did the three doubles teams of Snoeyenbos/Friedman, Leehy/Mark Paine, and Tony Pheifer/Johnson.

Stout's first scare came in number three singles player Mark Paine's match. Paine easily took the first set 6-1, but then faltered in the second, losing it 4-6, before recovering to take the third set 6-3 and the match.

At number four singles, Stout's Mike Friedman took the first set 6-2, dropped the second 5-7, but came back to take the match in the third set, winning it 6-2.

Then in the number five singles match, Stout's Tony Pheifer won the first set 6-4, lost the second 5-7, but also recovered to take the third, 6-4, and with it the match.

Marquette 5, Stout 4

All but the number one singles match was decided in straight sets. The singles matches were split 3-3, while Marquette took two of the three doubles matches to claim the win.

John Leehy lost the first set of his number one singles match 4-6, but came back to take the second 6-3, before dropping a close third set and the match, 4-6.

Winning in singles for Stout were Tony Snoeyenbos, Mark Paine, and Mike Friedman. While Snoeyenbos/Friedman took their number one doubles match.

In an exciting number three doubles match, Tony Pheifer and Bill Johnson lost both sets on tiebreakers. They lost the first set 7-6 after losing the tie breaker 8-6 and then lost the second set tie breaker 7-3 and the match.

"It was a good close match," said Smith, "Marquette played very well at the bottom of the lineup."

Stout 9, Wabasa 0

In the second match of the day on Friday, again indoors at Marquette, Stout rebounded very well by winning all nine matches in straight sets against Wabasa.

Winning in singles for Stout were John Leehy, (6-1, 6-1), Mark Paine, (6-0, 6-3), Mike Friedman, (6-2, 6-0), Tony Pheifer, (6-0, 6-0), Bill Johnson, (6-3, 6-1), and Todd Trabant, (6-1, 6-1).

Then in the doubles action, Tony Snoeyenbos/Friedman won 6-2, 6-3, Paine/Johnson won 6-4, 7-6, and Pheifer/ Trabant won 6-4, 6-2.

N.Illinois 6, Stout 3

"We played our best tennis of the year in a losing effort," said Smith. "The match could have easily been 6-3 in Stout's favor. Tony Snoeyenbos, and Tony Pheifer played fantastic tennis," added Smith.

John Leehy again lost a tough match at number one singles. Leehy lost the first set 3-6, came back to take the second 6-1, but then lost the match in the third set, losing it 0-6.

Posting wins in singles for the netters were Tony Snoeyenbos at number two singles, 6-4, 6-2, and Tony Pheifer at number five singles, in a close three set match, 7-6 (7-4), 3-6, 7-5.

Then in the doubles action, Stout's lone win came at number three doubles where Leehy and Pheifer combined to take the match in three sets, 7-5, 1-6, 6-3.

La Crosse beat Ruggers in closely fought match

by Slash LaFreniere

When there are two teams in any sport that are playing well, you kind of wish that neither team should lose. Last Saturday the UW-Stout ruggers played UW-La Crosse in a rugby match that neither team deserved to lose. La Crosse came from behind to defeat the Stout ruggers 17-15. But the outcome was not clear until the bitter end.

Centaur player Tim Anderson had a chance to win the match on a penalty kick that would have given Stout a one point lead. Anderson had been successful on three previous kicks, good for seven points on the day, but his final attempt sailed wide as time expired.

> "Our intensity level was way up. —P.J. Mc Donnell"

Anderson said, "Luck just wasn't there for me."

Anderson is the primary kicker for the Centaurs and he has come through for them on many other occasions. Said player Mike Weege, "We played well enough to win, we have nothing to be ashamed of. On Sunday I felt as if we had won."

The match started off with the Centaurs controlling the play in the La Crosse zone. Stout player P.J. McDonnell picked up a loose ball and scored a try from 22 meters out. McDonnell's run featured many elusive moves along the way. Anderson's conversion kick was good and Stout had the lead 6-0.

Said McDonnell, "Our intensity level was way up after we had a good week of practice."

Play continued in Stout's favor as Anderson made a penalty kick giving the Centaurs a 9-0 lead. La Crosse answered with a try and the half ended with Stout leading 9-4.

In the second half play began to get very physical. McDonnell reached the try zone again in the early going and Anderson also made the conversion kick, putting the Centaurs in command, 15-4

La Crosse then took to the offensive. As La Crosse was penetrating the Stout zone, Centaur player Mike Hackworthy was ejected from the match. Hackworthy had been warned earlier for his rough play, and fighting in rugby is an automatic ejection without substitution for your team.

La Crosse then scored two quick tries and one conversion to bring the score to Stout 15, La Crosse 14. During the second half, player Brian Bohne was injured for Stout and was replaced by Tom Miller.

La Crosse's final points came on a penalty kick, which added three points for them, bringing their total to 17. Stout came back hard and they penetrated deep into the La Crosse zone. But as time ran out, so did Anderson's luck. The score remained 17-15 in favor of La Crosse.

The intense play carried over into the "B" side match as the Stout "Killer B's" beat La Crosse 11-6. Stout veteran Louie Lieberg and Brian Hess each scored tries, each good for four points, and Mark Vee scored on a penalty kick.

This Saturday the Centaurs will travel to Ripon College as they will try to improve on their 3-2 record.

Athlete of the week: Jeff Kloes

by Darron Vanman

Name: Jeff Kloes
Year: Senior
Sport: Baseball, position - catcher
Major: Industrial Technology, emphasis: manufacturing
Coach: Terry Petrie
Latest Accomplishments: sophomore and junior years earned all-conference and all-district teams.
Athlete's statistics:

Jeff Kloes carries a .470 batting average into the last week of conference play. Kloes has made a substantial contribution to Stout's baseball season. Jeff Kloes' consistent, outstanding hitting and catching all season has caught him the Stoutonia's athlete of the week.
Coach's comments:

"Jeff is having a great year. He hit the ball well and had a good arm against Minnesota. He's such a great ball player, and we hope he gets drafted," Coach Petrie said.

Petrie commented on what he hopes Kloes as well as the other seniors remember about playing baseball at Stout, "That it was a year that we won conference, districts, the all area tournament, and do well at nationals. Remember me as a person that worked with them (the seniors) for four years, and a lot of time was spent with them. That baseball is a year round sport, not just for the spring."

Petrie explained Kloes' leadership qualities, "Jeff is not a 'shout em out' type guy, he leads quietly with his performances."
Athlete's comments:

Jeff Kloes plans on graduating in December. He would like to work in the industry near the Fox Valley area. Kloes said, "There is a chance I might be drafted. It would be interesting experience. The scouts seem interested. I talked to them last summer, and all they said was to have a good year."

> "He's such a great ballplayer we hope he get's drafted. —Coach Petrie"

Three Stout students have been drafted since 1970 when Coach Petrie took over. Nick Misch was drafted by the Detroit Tigers in 1970. Dennis Graser in 1975 was picked by the Minnesota Twins, and Joe Vavra was taken by the Los Angeles Dodgers in 1982.

Kloes started swinging the bat at the T-ball level when he was six. From there he went through Little League and Babe Ruth through high school and college, to where he might be playing in the majors.

Kloes commented on his four years at Stout, "It's a very good program. We play a lot of games. Petrie is a good coach, has ways of coaching. We have a good team. We get along pretty good. If we play like we are capable, then we could make it to nationals."

Jeff Kloes wants to continue having a good year. On the team side, Kloes would like to see a conference title and to ultimately make to the national tourney. Kloes said, "We are the team to beat in the conference."

THERE'S AN ARMY OF CHOICES OUT THERE.

It's not easy. Sometimes the number of choices you have seems mind-boggling. But sometimes, when you know what you want, freedom of choice is a great thing. Look at today's Army.

There's the Active Army and the Army Reserve. If you qualify for Active, you serve 2-4 years, choose from over 300 skills to train in, and in over 80 of those skills you could be eligible for up to $25,200 in college money.

If you already have a job or are in school, consider the Army Reserve. All it takes is one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Plus, you'll learn a useful skill and earn over $1,200 a year.

Both choices give you career experience, physical conditioning, new friends, good pay, and a chance to serve your country. It's all up to you. Call your local Army Recruiter.

All work and play at the Rec department

by Cosmas A. Whitten

The City of Menomonie Recreation (Rec) Department offers almost limitless opportunities to students. There are 65 different programs sponsored by the rec department which need people to teach or coach them.

The recreation department is only a hop, skip, and jump away from campus. It is located in the leisure center at 1421, 6th street and offers programs for both youth and adults.

> "It certainly doesn't take very much time."
> —Phil Fieber

Some of the programs included are swimming, tennis, golf, gymnastics, soccer and baseball. Besides sports, there are also other programs in creative arts, guitar instructions, D.N.R. boat, hunting and snowmobile safety.

There is still room for development of new programs. According to Menomonie Recreation Director, Phil Fieber, the rec department is "interested in getting something going in a youth dance program."

"We hire 125 people on average throughout the year, 65 work for us during the summer," said Fieber.

Half of the summer people work in swimming and life guard instruction. "Stout is very helpful in that respect. The university has an abundant supply of qualified people," said Fieber.

Summer positions are still open and programs for the fall are being prepared. Fieber mentioned, "I think a lot of students don't realize jobs are available here."

Stout student Mark Horbinski has worked for the recreation department for several years. Horbinski has recently been promoted to supervisor of the baseball program.

Horbinski says that his experience has helped him with his coaching minor. "I enjoy working with kids. I have taken on new positions each year and have gained valuable supervisory skills," said Horbinski.

Besides many opportunties for work, there are also many programs for students to participate in. Brochures are available at the rec department.

For more information on the rec department call or stop by. "It certainly doesn't take very much time," commented Fieber.

he finished the event in a time of 1 minute, 54.2 seconds.

Brian Kohls and Zack Adams finished third and fourth in the 110 High Hurdles with a time of 15.4 and 15.6 seconds respectively.

Jamaican sprinter Kenute Connell placed third with a time of 22.5 seconds in the 200 meter dash and placed fourth in the 100 meter dash with a time of 11.0 seconds.

In the field events, Randy Miller continued his dominance in the hammer throw at La Crosse as he finished second in the event with a throw of 139 feet.

Also in the field for the Blue Devils were John Zastrow who vaulted 15 feet in the pole vault, placing him third; and Scott Romemesko who finished fourth in the pole vault with a distance of 14 feet.

Zastrow, who placed second in the conference decathlon last year, said that the competition is tougher this year, and added that it will take ten good, consistent events to place high.

Stout tack stand out Dan Doucette did not participate at La Crosse because he was competing at he Drake relays with Division I and II scholarship athletes. The Drake Relays were an opportunity for Doucette to prepare for conference and national competition.

Doucette ran the 400 Intermediate Hurdles at Drake in a time of 53.7 seconds. He finished fourth in th heat of 8, and 19th out of 32 overall.

Doucette said, "I am happy with my performance, the conditions of the 8:30 a.m. morning race had a lot to do with my slower time."

the next meet for Blue Devil Men is Saturday, May 2, at Stout. Teams competing include UW-Eau Claire and UW-Superior. The meet begins at noon on the Johnson Fieldhouse track.

Injured instructor saved by students

by Rich Brueckner

A backpacking class outing ended in tragedy this weekend when the instructor was seriously injured in a fall.

John Zuerlein, 48, associate professor of physical education and athletics, suffered a skull fracture Friday evening, after falling approximately 25 feet while rock climbing.

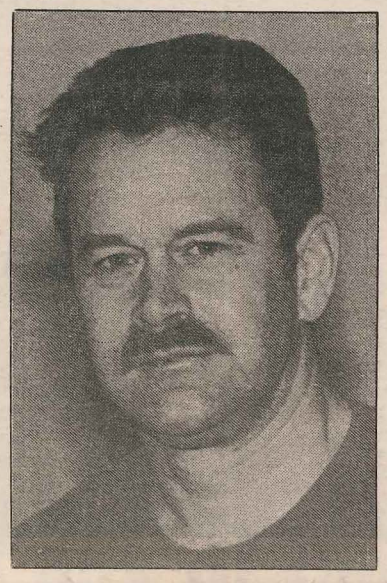
Zuerlein and 21 students in his Outdoor Skills course were on a two-day backpacking trip in the Chequamegon National Forest, approximately 20 miles south of Ashland, Wis.

The class had just finished having dinner after setting up camp on the Marengo River when Zuerlein and several students went off to check out the area.

According to Tom Mayley, he, Joel Thomas, and Zuerlein were climbing a succession of ridges about 400 yards from the camp when Zuerlein lost his grip and fell to a narrow ledge and finally to another ledge some 25 feet below.

Mayley and Thomas climbed down and found Zuerlein face-down and moaning. His nose was broken and he was bleeding from the mouth.

Mayley stayed with Zuerlein while Thomas went back to the camp to tell the others. David Nelsen and another member of the class went off into the forest to get help.



John Zuerlein

Thomas soon returned to the ridge with other members of the class. Zuerlein was semi-conscious and trying to sit up. They checked him for neck and spinal injuries and decided to carry him down from the rocks before it got dark.

Several members of the class administered first aid to Zuerlein and treated him for shock.

Members of the class fashioned a stretcher from some logs and canvas and carried Zuerlein back to the camp about an hour later. Mayley said that the going was treacherous since there wasn't a trail.

Meanwhile, Nelsen was running for about an hour when he came upon some fisherman who then took him to a nearby tavern where he called an ambulance. Nelson then led the paramedics to the camp which was about a mile and a half from the nearest dirt road.

The members of the class waited, working together to keep Zuerlien warm and awake for about 90 minutes before the paramedics arrived.

Mayley estimated that about four hours passed between the time Zuerlein fell and the time he was carried to the ambulance.

Class member Dan Heitpas rode with Zuerlien to the hospital in Ashland. Zuerlein's condition was found to be so serious that he was taken to St. Luke's Hospital in Duluth where he arrived at about 5 a.m. Saturday.

The rest of the class packed up camp and hiked out to the road Saturday morning. They were safely on a bus back to Stout by 11 a.m.

According to Warren Bowlus, director of the Physical Education Department at Stout, Zuerlein has been transferred to Sacred Heart Hospital in Eau Claire.

Bowlus said Wednesday that Zuerlien's condition is improving. He is comatose, but is responding to questions and has even tried to sit up.

Bowlus also commended the members of the class for their bravery in this difficult situation. He said that it is really encouraging that they did such a great job in treating Zuerlein and getting help for him.

Zuerlein has been teaching the Outdoor Skills course since 1969 without a major mishap. Class member Paul D. Nelson described Zuerlien as a very safety-conscious individual who didn't take chances. His students were always required to wear helmets and safety ropes during rock climbing exercises.

Zuerlein, a Stout graduate, has been teaching here for 25 years. He started Stout's gymnastic program and has been coaching it ever since.

Drug abuse conference stresses importance of saying no to drugs

by Steven Lemire

Just say no! That is the phrase that is sweeping the country ever since Nancy Reagan first started her anti-drug campaign. Last Friday, Say No Wisconsin swept into Menomonie for an all day drug abuse intervention conference.

The conference was opened in the Great Hall by Chancellor Swanson who welcomed the participants--over 200 students, teachers, parents and counselors from all over the state.

"Whenever something hits the news like this subject has, we see it as a good topic for a conference," said Sandy Walleen, Outreach program manager for the Office of Continuing Education.

"Not every one has become aware of the prevention program," said Walleen. "We have been planning this conference for eight months for those who want to find out more and for those who want to find out how they can help."

Attendants were treated to nationally known speakers, the first of whom was Curtis Sliwa, founder of the Guardian Angels, who shot a jolt of his electric personality through the audience.

"I'm not up here speaking from the perspective of a former druggie," Sliwa began, "but my eyes have told me what is basic common sense."

Sliwa then outlined the origins of the drug problem from the experimentation of the 60's; to the fashionability of drugs in the 70's; to the devastating effects of cocaine, the drug of choice in the 80's, which is becoming more affordable all the time.

"People are on the body beautiful kick, watching every calorie, every ingredient," said Sliwa, "and then they chunk down some pill, or sniff up some powder and God knows where that came from."

Sliwa is trying to spread the word about the problems caused by drug addicts, including murder, theft, and even the spread of AIDS. "The intravenous (IV) drug users are spreading AIDS to the heterosexual population faster than any other group," Sliwa said.

Following Sliwa's address, the audience broke into small groups to attend workshops on related subjects such as the issues involved in drug testing and the implications of cocaine use by high school students.

Centrex to hike student phone rates

by Steven Lemire

"This is a clear violation of student rights," said SSA President James Falkofske about the phone rate increase that is being thrust on residents of campus housing.

The rate increase is the result of a contract signed by the State Department of Administration (DOA) with Centrex (Wisconsin Bell). It will affect residence hall students at Madison, Milwaukee, Oshkosh, River Falls, and Stout.

The DOA contract affects many state offices, prisons, hospitals, and of course schools and universities. In the case of the residence halls, the actual monthly charges drop from 13.95 to 11.61 per month.

However, Centrex no longer offers a summer disconnect discount, and a nine cent per call charge will be added to each students bill as opposed to the present system, where that per call charge is figured into the annual bill.

"The current annual charge for phone service in a dorm room is $146.47," said Jill Shlimovitz, IRHA representative to the Stout Student Association (SSA).

"Under the new contract, the annual charge will drop to $139 annually unless you pick up the receiver to make a call," said Shlimovitz.

"At 9 cents a call for an average of 30 calls per month you will add almost $30 to your bill," said Shlimovitz. "This new system is supposed to save tax dollars," Shlimovitz said, "but they can't justify shifting the burden on the students."

That is why the SSA and the United Council, a systemwide association of student governments, have joined forces with the Citizens Utility Board (CUB) to oppose this rate increase.

The CUB is made up of people concerned with the protection of citizens rights to fair utility costs. "This is a case of blatantly unreasonable price discrimination," said Brent Smith, CUB Assistant Program Director.

> "They can't justify shifting the burden on the students
> —Jill Schlimovitz"

Smith is urging all students to contact their SSA representative and let them know how you feel. Petitions are available in the SSA office and possibly in the housing office for concerned students to sign.

CUB is coordinating the petition drive with the other campus student governments, to let the Public Service Commission (PSC) know how students feel about this unreasonable rate change.

Last Thursday the PSC agreed to investigate the implications of this contract, which has been postponed until the investigation is complete.

Sexual harassment is focus of questionnaire

by Tracy Lea Landis

An estimation of the prevalence at UW-Stout of unwelcome sexual advances, referred to as sexual harassment, is being attempted through a random survey of the campus.

The Social Science Center is conducting the survey to measure the frequency and type of sexual harassment that occurs at the university.

The survey is being sponsored in part by the Sexual Harassment Committee, a representative committee which includes faculty, contractual and non-contractual staff and students in designing educational programs for the campus.

The committee sponsored the survey in an effort to establish the prevalence of sexual harassment and assess attitudes about unwelcome sexual advances.

"We want to see what direction our educational efforts should take," said Cynthia Welsh, who represents classified employees on the Sexual Harassment Committee.

Surveys were mailed to a random sample of the community, both male and female, and completed questionaires must be returned by May 8.

> "We want to see what direction our educational efforts should take > —Cynthia Welsh"

For those potential respondents that may wish to discuss any cases of sexual harassment that they have experienced, the survey provides the telephone number for the University Counseling Center.

Kari Jagusch, a work-study student who works as part of the office staff at the Counseling Center, said that if someone calls asking to talk to someone about a case of sexual harassment, she would make them an appointment with one of the counselors available.

The survey being used was not developed at Stout. It has been used at several other campuses. According to Sharon Nero, senior lecturer in sociology and one of those conducting the survey, it has "stood the test of time."

"This survey was first developed and used at Harvard University, and then at Penn," said Nero.

Nero is working with Dayle Mandelson, Affirmative Action director and instructor at Stout, and with the Social Science Center to collect and analyze the data.

Nero said that she hopes for a high response rate.

"The higher response rate we have," Nero said, "the more accurate our information."

There are 100 of them scattered throughout the residence halls at Stout. They come in all shapes and personalities. Some are loved, and some are loathed.

Who are these individuals? They go by the title "resident advisor" or RA for short.

Three female RA's took time out of their busy schedules to let everyone know what it's really like to be in charge of approximately 30 people on a residence hall floor.

Maureen Gowaskie, a senior in her second year as an RA, summarized the job by saying, "People--everything deals with people--from those on my floor to the staff. It's interaction with people."

Susan Schaefgen, a junior in her first RA position said, "Being an RA has been the most challenging experience for me. I was a real shy and timid person before, now it's easier for me to talk to strangers."

Cindi Lapidakis, a junior, said, "It's an excellent experience. I would do it again, but I will be too busy next year."

The underlying reason they became RA's was to help people, all three RA's agreed.

"I got into it because I like to work with people. The position keeps me out of trouble. I don't see it as a power position," Schaefgen said.

"I'm a pretty outgoing person. I love being around people," Gowaskie added "I didn't think I had what it took to be an RA, but I guess I did. Money is a minor part. If you plan on taking the position just for the money, forget it."

> "I don't see it as a power position
> —Susan Schaefgen"

Asked what kind of year they had as RA, Lapidakis said, "I had a neat floor. There was a lot of interaction on the floor. The people were pretty responsible, which made my job fun."

"The whole year was good. There was trouble sometimes, but I had a good floor. Partying was the number one thing on people's minds in the beginning, especially the freshmen, Schaefgen said."

"I made it a challenging year since I already knew the basic routine. I took on the front desk manager job, for example. The girls seemed to be more apathetic this year," Gowaskie said.

"My floor didn't click since there was such a mixture of personalities. But I told them that my door was always open." Gowaskie added, "I let them know I cared."

The three also agreed that disciplining was the part of the position they did not particularly like.

"I think there is a fallacy among students that RAs love to punish. I don't see that at all," Gowaskie said.

"It's hard to enforce the rules I personally don't agree with, like the drinking age." Gowaskie added.

"The hardest thing for me to do is call security on someone. I don't consider myself a policeman," Schaefgen said. "RA's are people, too. They shouldn't put us on such a high pedestal."

"The RA position is very challenging," Schaefgen said, "It's a challenge to gain the respect of the girls. Most of them do respect me, but there's a few that think no RA would be good enough."

"I think there should be an equal amount of respect," she continued. "I want them to say all right, she's not a bitch, she's our RA and a friend."

Schaefgen commented on what she believes is her main responsibility. "It is important to be there for my girls. If they need something or have questions, I'm there," Schaefgen continued, "An RA is a manager that can be relied on in any type of situation."

"RA's are not baby-sitters or mom or dad, but students with authority and responsibility, who help other students," Gowalskie said, "I love being an RA--the advantages far outweigh the disadvantages."

plan chemically-free activities in their community, also addressed the group. They talked about the program's success and discussed ways for other schools to start their own program.

Lunch in the Great Hall followed the workshop sessions and then keynote speaker Hugh Vasquez, a consultant for the Just Say No Foundation, gave a brief talk on the history of the foundation.

Vasquez also outlined how the students, parents and teachers might start a Say No chapter in their own school.

"The Say No program teaches older teens to work with younger teens to help prevent drug abuse," said Walleen.

"There seems to be a better response when it is a peer, rather than a parent or teacher, teaching you about drugs," said Walleen.

More workshops followed Vasquez's speech, including Promoting Chemical Health Through Sports and Activities, Peer Refusal Skills: Teaching People to Say "No", and How to Develop Athletes Into Positive Role Models.

The conference closed with an address by former NFL player Hollywood Henderson who, unlike Sliwa, was speaking from the perspective of a former drug addict.

Henderson described the downward spiral of his life under the influence of drugs and then affirmed "there is life after drugs."

Award given at Ethnic Services Center Spring Recognition Banquet

by Masha Roberts

The fourth annual Spring Recognition Banquet of the Ethnic Services Center was held last Friday in the Student Center.

The banquet was organized and sponsored by students and staff affiliated with the center.

The banquet which occurs once each year in the Spring, is organized mainly for the purpose of providing recognition to minority students who have excelled in different areas of their college life.

"It is hard for the minority students to get recognition when compared to seven thousand other students at Stout," said Linda Torres, director and coordinator of Native American Student Services at the Ethnic Services Center.

The Ethnic Services Center presented many awards to students, staff and alumni of Stout.

The two members of staff who received outstanding faculty awards were Beatrice Bigony, professor of Social Science and Sylvia Gengenbach, lecturer in the English department and director of tutoring.

"Working with minority students for the past two years has been a rewarding part of my teaching career," said Gengenbach.

She said that she felt that she could not have done it without the support of students and staff.

Gengenbach also emphasized that teaching at Stout has been a gratifying experience.

The Academic Excellence Award was presented to 29 students, who at the end of the first semester of the 1987-88 academic year, had a cumulative grade point average of 3.00 or better.

The 12 students who were present at the banquet to receive their awards were Tony Chang, Sherry Rutherford, Jonathan Graham, Vuong Pham, Lisa Washington, Tuyet Nguyen, Keith Balke, Linda Laursen, Lue Vang, Anthony Fisher, Le Chau and Wanijiru Kamau.

"Both my family and I are really pleased about my winning the Academic Excellence Award," said Nguyen, a sophomore majoring in Business Administration at Stout.

The mere idea of winning is a motivating factor to keep up the good work, Nguyen said.

Other student awards included Outstanding Community Service Award to Derrick Gibson, Outstanding Campus Service Award to Rochelle Laverdure and Lao Xiong, Outstanding Freshman Award to Lisa Washington, Outstanding Sophomore Award to Genhi Givings, Outstanding Junior Award to Lisa Ealy, Outstanding Senior Award to Derrick Gibson and Outstanding Graduate Award to Sarah King.

"People should take pride in being a minority," said Monica Herrera, Stout graduate from 1982 who contributed significantly to the Hispanic community at Stout.

Herrera was the recipient of the Outstanding Young Alumni Award. The Outstanding Alumni Award went to Dana Jackson, a 1971 Stout graduate who represented the Native American Community.

Other awards were the Certificate of Appreciation to the Mabel Tainter Memorial Theatre, which co-sponsored Native American events and recently held the first Art show.

A Special Service Award was presented to the Stout Alumni Foundation.

"They have always helped with the Spring Recognition Banquet and without them, we wouldn't have been able to do it," concluded Torres.

A Supportive Service Award was also presented to Linda Torres for being such a significant and essential part of the Ethnic Services Center.

Peer mentoring Program helps nontraditional students

by Julie K. Ragatz

The University Counseling Center is the home of one of the best Peer Mentoring Programs in the entire UW system.

The Peer Mentor Program is offered to non- traditional students. They are students who are 23 years of age or older and beginning college for the first time, or they are returning to college after a lapse in time. Also included are those students who are under 23 years of age but have children.

The program provides mentors for the non-traditional students during their first semester on campus.

The mentors themselves are also non- traditional students who have been on campus for at least one semester and know the campus facilities and services.

Shirley Murphy, program coordinator and counselor, said that "the growth and energy in the program right now is really a direct result of the participants involvement."

"These adult students are interested in helping other adult students make a better adjustment to campus life," said Murphy.

The non-traditional students are matched one-on-one with mentors according to their major. It provides the new students the much needed opportunity to ask questions without feeling embarrassed.

The nontraditional students face many different pressures compared to the traditional students. Some of these include child care costs, family support, and the balancing of school and work, especially when they are not accustomed to it.

The mentors are encouraged to establish weekly contact in the beginning, and as a result many friendships are formed.

> "...they are willing to give back to the University as much as they receive"
> —Shirley Murphy

In addition to answering questions, mentors give tours, both individually and in large groups with other nontraditional students, as well as helping them with their first scheduling experience.

The mentoring program was started last fall by the Counseling Center with four mentors and 11 students. That number has now expanded to 13 mentors and 21 students.

Murphy feels that the program will have a lot of far reaching effects in aiding the adults during their transitions to campus life, and that having their own peer group greatly decreases the sense of not belonging that comes with being an older student.

Of the non-traditional students, Murphy said that they are "self-directed learners, they've had life experiences, and they are willing to give back to the university as much as they receive."

One program that has strong ties to the peer mentoring program is the Organization of Adult Students Involved in Stout (OASIS). The group is advised by Murphy and Cindy Jenkins of the Office of School Relations and many of the mentors come from this group.

At the end of their term as mentors, the students receive a certificate of appreciation for their time and services.

Many of the students like the program so well that they in turn become mentors. Some ways students said the program helped them are that it puts them in an interacting position with fellow students who have the same problems, asking questions without being embarrassed, and adding a little bit of extra security to their experience.

Murphy added that they have also expanded to include a summer orientation for nontraditional students in addition to having an orientation each semester.

Any UW-Stout student can be a part of the program, but it is especially designed to meet the needs of the nontraditional students.

A conference addressing specific needs of nontraditional students is planned for April 29 and 30 of next year. It is to be held at the UW-Stout Student Center and will be sponsored by OASIS.

Anyone wanting more information about Peer Mentoring or OASIS can contact Shirley Murphy at the University Counseling Center, 232-2468.

UW-Stout Top 25 Grads

The top 25 University-Wisconsin Stout graduates were recognized Wednesday, April 29, in the Student Center at UW-Stout.

These students, in alphabetical order, are: Michael W. Abbott, Eric R. Balz, Brenda L. Bennett, Terry L. Bilderback, Douglas K. Cook, Julie J. Dahl, Michael J. Handahl, Linda Yuet Swee Lim, and Shane E. Mooney.

Other honor students include: Michael A. Nelson, Sarah J. Schneider Reich, Karen M. Reinhold, Jon David Rigotti, Loren D. Rochester, Todd S. Stecker, Stephanie M Sterr, and Karin E. Teig.

The continuing list of the top 25 graduates of 1987 are: Sue A Tuchscherer, Mark T. Wallenfang, James R. Watters, Jane A. Weber, Brenda J. Westphal, Susan L. Weum, Susan R. Wozniczka, and Paul M. Zimmerman.

Increased Student Debts

The Reagan administration's proposed cuts in college student aid would more than triple the debt burden for some graduates and leave others with more than $60,000 to repay, a congressional study reported.

"Under the administration's proposal, less aid would be received, and a shift from grants to loans would occur, resulting in a larger debt burden for students upon graduation," the General Accounting Office said.

The Education Department seeks to eliminate the $592 million college work study program, sharply curtail the student loan subsidies and make outright grants available to 1 million fewer students.

The department also wants to expand a $5 million pilot program of income-contingent loans to $600 million and 500,000 students. Monthly payments on the unsubsidized loans would be pegged to income.

Teaching Hours Debated

UW System statistics show that faculty instructional hours range from 7.3 to 16.5 hours per week in various campuses, Rep. Robert J. Larson (R-Medford) said. The lower numbers occur at research oriented UW-Madison and UW-Milwaukee.

Larson has introduced a bill in the Legislature that would require UW faculty to spend at least 15 hours per week in the class room. Larson said the 15 hours of class time would be negotiable.

The average UW System student now takes five years instead of the traditional four to graduate, due to the lack of available class sections, Larson said. Both students and parents have been complaining about the cuts.

Gov. Thompson has proposed an additional 480 faculty positions, which would total 800 new class sections, in his pending budget.

Requiring the 5,000 faculty members who don't bring in research grants to spend one more hour per week in the classroom, on average, would do more for students than Thompson's proposal to add 480 faculty positions, Larson said.

Larson said that student groups are anxious to testify for his bill, but he acknowledges that he has no other major political allies in his campaign.

Sprucing Up

A group of Stout students, under the direction of Michael Nicolai, assistant professor of speech, participated in the 1987 Spruce-Up Campaign, an event sponsored by the Greater Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce.

The class project was part of a discussion course taught by Nicolai, and the group felt that cleaning up the park on Crescent and Second Streets would be a way of restoring what is taken for granted and sometimes abused by students.

The class planted several flower gardens that Menomonie residents and visitors will enjoy throughout the summer season.

In a letter on behalf of the Greater Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce, Sue Albrecht, 1987 Spruce-Up Committee chairperson, thanked the class for their interest and enthusiasm.

Fall '87 Admissions Closed

Admission of new freshmen and transfer students to UW-Stout for the fall semester is closed.

In a memo to university administrators, Chancellor Robert S. Swanson said the admission closing is intended to support an enrollment of 7,580 students, a reduction from last fall's enrollment of 7,687.

Stout has been controlling enrollment since 1975, with limits placed on each major. Attempts to reduce enrollment have been occurring since 1985.

Under a new policy for next fall, students in the lower quartile of their high school graduating class are no longer eligible for admission. Exceptions are granted for those in the lower quartile who score 17 or above on the ACT test.

Plans call for additional reductions in 1988 in which the university will reach a stable enrollment of approximately 7,200. Enrollment planning goals are based on the number of class openings that can be provided for students.

Student input in decision making a tradition at Stout

by Tracy Lea Landis

The proud history of student involvement in decision-making at UW-Stout was outlined for the incoming 18th Congress of the Stout Student Association (SSA) at its Tuesday meeting.

The basic changes that SSA has been through were outlined for the new and continuing senators by Dean of Students Sam Wood, who served for many years as the advisor to SSA, Stout's student government.

Wood described for the senators the proud tradition of student input into decision-making on the campus.

Recalling the administration of SSA President Dave Bruss during the school year 1969-70, Wood said that Bruss and that year's congress took active steps toward a concept of "community" in university decision-making.

"It was a concept that was, and perhaps still is, ahead of its time," said Wood.

Although the Bruss administration failed in its attempt to gain student votes on Faculty Senate, which Wood said would continue to happen if it were attempted again today, that congress did grant voting privileges to the advisors to SSA, who are university staff and faculty members.

This was done, Wood said, in the interest of "community" in decision-making.

The 16th Congress, under President Joanne Prange, subsequently stripped the advisors of their voting privileges during the school year 1984-85.

In the fall of 1974, when Stout State University, along with other state universities, were merged with the University of Wisconsin system, "all campuses had to decide how to deal with segregated fees," Wood explained.

Segregated fees were mandated under the statutes of merger, to provide funds for student activities on the unversity campuses.

Presently, all students pay $10.84 per credit in segregated fees, up to $130.08 total per semester for 12 or more credits.

Distribution of segregated fees, according to the statutes of the merger, was to be done by a Segregated University Fee Activity Committee (SUFAC) with student and other representation.

Wood explained that, because of the strong voice of student government at Stout, the merger did not cause the university to change its structure for segregated fee management.

The SSA simply continued to distribute segregated fees through its representative body.

"We had already been doing it the way it's done now," Wood said.

Wood also outlined changes in the structure of the SSA which have occured in the past.

In past years, Wood said, the SSA performed the functions it now serves, as well as those that are now being performed by the University Programming Board (UPB).

Wood said that at those SSA meetings, the senators would have been as likely to discuss which bands to hire as they would legislative matters and that they would have been concerned about the annual distribution of ten thousand dollars.

The amount distributed by the SSA this year was approximately $226,000.

In describing to the senators the serious work that they are in SSA to do, Wood said, "You determine the funds that student groups will get."

On the role students play in decision-making at Stout, Wood said, "There are many opportunities for students to participate."

Advising students on their role when serving on the university committees which make decisions, Wood said, "Don't be overwhelmed by walking into a committee meeting and there are teachers there."

Right of choice

They say you never appreciate what you've got until it's gone.

As United States citizens, we are fully guaranteed specific rights under the U.S. Constitution and its amendments.

The First Amendment clearly defines freedom of speech and of the press.

The student newspaper at UW-La Crosse, The Racquet, is at war with the Student Association, the student governing body on that campus.

The controversy centers around the election policies for two key positions on The Racquet staff - editor and business manager.

The current selection process consists of three steps, the first of which is approval by the Publications Committee, which includes four student senators, including Student Body President Barry McNulty.

The next step is approval by the Arts Committee, then approval by the Student Association, which has the final say.

Yes, it appears that the governing body at UW-La Crosse is able to pick and choose applicants who will best serve their purpose. How convenient!

Editors at other UW System student newspapers, including The Stoutonia are selected through a vote conducted by the newspaper staff itself. We feel this is a better system because only the people who work or have worked on the newspaper staff have a full knowledge of the qualifications needed and of the weekly routine. How can someone who has never worked for the paper expect to be capable of choosing its staff?

Racquet Editor Dennis Cooley is wondering just that. Cooley was recently denied reappointment for the fall semester after seeking another term. Cooley had worked as a reporter for two years before becoming editor this semester. Cooley's application was rejected by the Publications Committee.

This committee, instead, recommended hiring freshman Blake Morrison for next fall's editor. Morrison had only worked at The Racquet for three weeks last fall. This recommendation was then approved by the Student Association.

It is hard to believe that the day has come when a governing body has any kind of control over two key positions on a newspaper staff. The Racquet will no longer be able to serve the people, but will instead be forced to cater to the interests and desires of the Student Association.

We encourage Dennis Cooley and his staff to continue their fight for freedom against this incredibly biased governing body.

Bottom Line

Silent running

Rich Brueckner

"See the face of fear running scared in the valley below."--Bono

I was pretty bored with the Outdoor Skills camping trip before the tragedy struck. If there is anything I dislike more than camping, it's camping without a campfire or alcohol.

It was around 7 pm when Joel Thomas came back to the camp and said that Coach Zuerlien had fallen and was seriously hurt. I knew we were in deep shit because no one had any idea where the hell we were.

The rest of the guys ran off to help him while I grabbed a map and tried to figure out which way to go for help.

David Nelsen and I each grabbed a flashlight and ran back down the trail. Since we had hiked at least eight miles into the forest that day without seeing any cabins, we split up and headed opposite ways down a logging road.

It was getting really dark when I checked my watch. I had been jogging/walking for about an hour and hadn't seen a thing.

The noises in the forest were getting me nervous. I remembered the piles of dung we had seen on the trail earlier in the day. Yes, Virginia, a bear does shit in the woods.

As I entered a swampy area, the yelps of frogs and God knows what else was almost deafening. I shined my high-tech flashlight on them.

"Eat halogen, you little bastards!" I said defiantly. They shut up.

My legs felt like lead. I kept reminding myself that somewhere back home was a girl who loves me, a puppy who needs me, and a lucrative job offer at Cray Research. At the time, it seemed unlikely that I would ever see them again.

About two hours and several blisters later I was getting panicky. A man's life depended on me getting my ass out of the woods. I found a sign that said "Highway GG 9 miles". I cussed at the moon.

A short time later I saw some headlights way up the road. I ran and started yelling. They didn't answer. I found them at a campground: four carloads of 16-year-olds who, fortunately for me, had come to this desolate place to drink.

I told them what happened and that they had to get me to a phone. One handed me a beer and said that they didn't answer my calls because they thought I was a cop.

The car we took had a severe exhaust problem so we had to leave the windows open as we did about 80 mph down that dirt road. My beer and I were soon covered with a 1/4 inch layer of dust. I still found that gritty Old Style preferable to the water our class had to drink from a stream.

We arrived at the Chippewa tavern about 20 minutes later. The bartender dialed up the sheriff for me. They told me on the phone that the paramedics had already found Coach Zuerlien and were taking him to a hospital.

I had to think about two seconds about my next move. I whipped out a $10 bill and proceeded to drink heavily.

I met a nice couple who offered to let me stay at their nearby cabin. We watched the Brewer game and got totally smashed.

The next morning, I arose from my nice cushy couch, had some orange juice and sweet rolls, and rode out to meet the bus and my classmates. I felt bad that they had been worried about me while they suffered through such a cold and frightening evening.

The class really stuck together and I think they should all be proud of the job they did in saving Coach Zuerlien's life. He is an incredible individual and our prayers are with him.

As we rode the bus back home together and traded our stories, I thought a lot about the three things that kept me going the night before.

I sighed with the realization that: the girl has made it painfully clear that she can live without me, the puppy's cuteness will always keep him cared for, and the job at Cray means that my college days are over.

Subject: The Ministry as an eccumenical Church away from home

by Karen M. Heagle

When students go to college they sometimes take a vacation from church. Reguardless of what religion they participate in, there is a place on campus they can continue to be involved in their faith; it is the campus ministry.

The ministry holds its services at the local churches. The headquarters of the ministry is across the street from the north campus.

The Rev. Allan Slowiak is the Catholic campus pastor and he stresses the ecumenical nature of this foundation.

Father Slowiak was ordained in 1973, and worked at a parish in Rothchild, Wis. where he taught grade school for six years. He then took a position teaching high school. Then he heard of an opening for a campus pastor at Stout. He saw the job as a "unique opportunity" and today he says he "enjoys what he is doing here."

STOUTONIA: WHAT IS THE FUNCTION OF THE MINISTRY? SLOWIAK: I would say the function is to be a church away from home. We find ourselves functioning as a place to sit down and share with all kinds of folks. We're not here to be an educational institution; we're not here to be a prostylitizing group. We are here to be an evangelical group and share the gospel in quiet ways and in doing so we come to appreciate the different Christian traditions, since we are ecumenical here.

We simply become a place where folks can go to talk. I know there are other places on campus. the counseling center, built in programs in residence halls. We simply serve as another alternative.

We also provide some semblance of community, whether it be worship or supporting students with similiar faiths, even if this is the only time together. We also want to promote some type of reflection in religion where the intellect, the moral, and the spiritual go together. That becomes terribly important as one is moving through the college years.

STOUTONIA: WHAT TYPES OF ACTIVITIES DOES THE MINISTRY OFFER? SLOWIAK: We take time out to do some scripture study, taking some time to do it slowly--really take time to respect people's thoughts and insights of scripture. We have a few retreats--pack up the group, board a bus and move off campus for at least a 24 hour period--in a different environment. We also do some book studies depending on current issues, that come up. Other activities we have included are faith inquiry, pre-marriage and all activies are ecumenical.

STOUTONIA: DO STUDENTS TAKE PART IN THESE ACTIVITIES? SLOWIAK:It varies from program to program. It depends on the interest of the in-

Letters

Get the facts

This letter is addressed to Gene Emahiser:

For starters, sir, schools are paid for by you, myself, and millions of other taxpayers. Should the money spent on school programs be spent somewhere more suitable for your tastes (like possibly, PTL), because as you and I well known, most schools in this country pretty much follow this secular humanist train of thought you are talking about. Well then, I guess we better blow the whole kit and kaboodle to kingdom come and then we can all live happily ever after at Heritage, USA. How does that sound, Gene?

Secondly, I think you're a little confused about Humanism. Humanism draws upon Abraham Maslow's theories involving "self-actualization," upon the scientific method and the theories that are formulated from that method. "Humanism contends that human beings are a part of nature, that they have emerged as a result of continuous evolutionary process and that all their values -- religeous, ethical, political and social -- have their source in human experience and are a product of their culture."

Thirdly, I agree that school-based clinics are wrong. They are wrong for the fact that they teach a "neutral" type of morals, like you say. That is not to say, though, that SBC's are bad. I feel that they are a positive step toward alleviating a serious problem, mainly implications that these morals should be taught from a viewpoint such as your own. Remember separation of church and state. The morals to be taught would not have to be based on any religious viewpoint, but rather from the area of scientific evidence in the arena of the humanistic sciences (Sociology, Psychology, etc.)

Fourthly, your equating SBC's with drug use is way out of line, sir. Drug abuse and birth control are two completely different areas. Drug abuse is a negative aspect of human life and should be strongly discouraged, whereas being responsible for one's own sexuality and the actions which derive there from is a highly moral and very acceptable state for society to encourage.

Finally, next time you mention statistics, it would be really nice for you to include some of those statistics, mainly out of common courtesy, because your credibility always takes a nose dive when you try to pull stuff like that.

Gene, to sum you up, as a person, I think the reason you complain about the problems in our society so much is that you lack any ability to even try and deal with problems creatively and responsibly.

"When you're not a part of the solution, you're a part of the problem."

I would like to see more in depth and accurate coverage of sports next year. I would like to see all the writers be more knowledgable on what they are writing about. I don't read any other section; sports is my main concern.

I don't read The Stoutonia a lot. Most of the articles don't catch my attention. Maybe if more of the articles related to students, and were a little more on a light side.

Classroom etiquette

Cosmas A. Whitten

I have discovered many uneducated students in the field of classroom etiquette throughout my terms in college. Why, just today I was kicked in the elbow by a girl who wanted to rest her foot on the back of my desk. Thank you, that kick was inspiring and so I present my version of classroom etiquette. (Maybe I will be the next Emily Post)

This step is for beginners, it is called keeping your feet on the ground. Many students like to rest their feet on the person's chair, desk, or arm who sits in front of them. This can be very annoying.

Feet should remain directly in front of you. Sit up straight, this makes you look more attentive so the teacher will not target his "Lets see who is paying attention" questions at you.

The next step in proper classroom etiquette is to know when to talk to your neighbor and when to keep your big trap shut. Before the bell rings is the proper time to talk about what happened over the weekend.

Once class has begun I find it very annoying to have to listen to who went home with who stories. I, and I hope I speak for many, do not give a hoot about what you did this weekend. If it must be told just pass a note then surrounding students can listen to the teacher.

Another classroom no-no is to come to class smelling like-really gross. Students should take a shower a minimum of everyday if they truly want to smell like "roses" and make the teacher (and the person sitting next to you) happy.

Here is another really unmannerly thing that students should not do in class. Chewing and spitting in class. In the old days a person was arrested if they spit on the sidewalk. Please people, keep your bodily fluids to yourself.

This is really disgusting, I see it happening mostly in the winter months. Some people blow their nose and then attempt to make a basket with the kleenex into the trash can. Of course I am always the one who sits by the trash can and the snot tissue never makes the basket, it usually lands near my feet and unravels to show its contents to all.

Excuses, Excuses, who wants to hear them. Quit your whining about your test score, it is your problem if you were not in class on the day the material was covere . Maybe you will remember show up for class next semester when you have to take the class over.

I am a person who always likes to eat but I am able to withstand food during class time. One thing about people eating in class is that it makes me hungry. The other thing is that the sound of wrappers and chewing can be obnoxious. I do find humor in seeing an obese person chow down in class.

Now cut out this article and tape it to your notebooks in case of an emergency. I hope to hear that next year all classrooms seat well mannered, eager to learn students.

Seeds of Change

For mom

Gene Emahiser

Sunday May 10th is a day we set aside to honor our mothers. On this day sons and daughters will send cards and flowers and/or possibly take their mom out for dinner. Nice things are said by both parties. All around, it's a nice time for the family to give some credit where credit is greatly overdue.

For some women, this day is a not day looked forward to. They are not happy to remember that they have once carried a child. They are not all excited to be around those people who hold mothers in high esteem for this one special day.

These women are less than excited because they have no children to tell them that they are great, even though they once carried a young child. It is on this day, Mother's Day, that they reality of the loss they suffered in having an abortion becomes evident.

For what ever reason they chose to have an abortion, the pain and emptiness can never be just brushed off. In a generation where abortions equal the number of full term pregnancies, we can no longer stick our heads in the sand and ignore the problem.

Being a man, I can never fully understand the feelings that a would-be mother goes through after an abortion. I won't even try to act like even have a clue. Even though I can't fully understand, I can still see the hurt and bitterness that has wrecked many women's lives.

I have seen too many lives devastated by one act of selfishness. Abortion doesn't just affect the women or the man involved. The hurt and bitterness that destroys that women from the inside out, eventually ends up poisoning the people around her. Ironically, these are the people that she cares the most for and care the most about her.

Fortunately, there is hope for these women. Even though some of these women receive counsel, they cannot ever get rid of the guilt that they carry. All that most counsel available in the world does for the individual is help them live with their guilt or, worse yet, it teaches them to lie to themselves so that they can believe that they have done nothing wrong. All the while, their conscience is telling them they are guilty, guilty as charged. The truth is that they can never completely get rid of the guilt their sin by themselves.

The guilt that comes from an abortion is like that of any other sin. It follows you until God frees you from it. This is the Good News that which has held you back and enslaved you has no power anymore. Jesus's death and subsequent resurrection broke the power of sin and death in our lives. We are now free to live the life that God intended us to live, a life unto God not unto satan.

All that God requires is a heart after God, that is, a heart that is willing to love God 100 precent. God is looking for people that have it all together. He came to save the lost not the righteous. Don't wait for your life to get in order for God to have you. It will never happen. God is waiting right now to come into your life and break the power that is holding you back from being all that you were meant to be.

God's heart is not to send men and women to hell. Rather God wants the whole earth to be filled with people telling each other how much God has done for them and how great He is.

While I may never fully understand what you are going through, God is able. God is your creator. Don't you think that the Creator and Ruler of the universe would be able to to understand what you are going through? If you are troubled or hurt or bitter, don't take it out on your friends, take it to God.

We always invite students to express interests they may have--how we can be of assistance to them. I don't know that we go around seeking students to get involved. That is something we don't do. We're not an employment agency looking for people. We would like to see students get involved simply because church means something to them. We invite folks to get involved.

One Point Perspective

A short story

Jean-Marie Dauplaise

Just the other day someone said to me, "God you're short. I never realized how short you really are."

Well, for starters, I hardly feel I merit being addressed as any sort of deity. Why do so many people begin sentences with "God" in conversations thoroughly unrelated to religious discussion?

Phraseology aside, however, I will go to my grave happily if I never hear someone tell me I'm short again. Startling as it may be, I have been aware of my stature for quite some time now.

When I was a junior in high school I reached five feet. I was thoroughly elated. I am now slightly under 5'2". Also, I prefer to say that I am petite rather than short, and I am not amused when taller people rest their elbow on my head and tell me I make a good arm rest.

Although there are, at times, disadvantages to being shorter than average, I can honestly say I'd rather be 5'2" than 6'2".

In crowd situations it is not fun to be short. It is sometimes dangerous. I've been elbowed and nearly trampled to death during crowded nights at the bars. House parties are even worse, which is why I very seldom attend them. Also, it is extremely difficult for me to find someone in a crowd, since all I can see are backs and shoulders. Occasionally I'll pass someone my size or smaller and smile. It's good to know I'm not alone in my plight.

Another problem with being short is having my age guessed at half a decade less than it actually is. I can walk into a bar with my under age brother and the bouncer will card me and not him. This must be a great plus uptown for all the youngsters lucky enough to be tall since they don't card anyone over six feet.

Shopping used to be extremely difficult for me. Thankfully big, baggy clothes are acceptable now, but when I was in high school I might just as well have been an archeologist for all the digging and searching I was forced to do. Clerks would roll their eyes when I asked if a particular item came in size 1. Luckily, we had uniform skirts at school, so I only had to worry about weekends and special occasions. Almost everything had to be altered.

I now wear a size that most stores have in stock, but they usually only get one item of any given style in my size. There will be fifteen of every size but mine on a rack and after ten minutes of searching, the sales clerk will saunter over and say, "If you're looking for something small we sold it already. You could try the Petites section."

Anyone who has ever shopped in the Petites section knows that the clothes are generally gaggingly ugly. Either it's pastel heaven with more ribbons and lace than a baby shower, or a polyester nightmare with the same fashion statement in mind as the waitresses at Walgreen's luncheonette.

I also feel that the fashion industry, in addition to making shopping more inconvenient for me than for those lucky enough to wear an average size, should be ashamed of themselves for charging me the same price for a pair of jeans as someone whose jeans require three additional yards of denim to manufacture. If the huge sizes cost twice as much, fat people would buy less food, lose weight, and probably be a lot happier.

My friend Sue, who is 5'3", and I occasionally exact our revenge by browsing in Big and Tall stores and observing the shopper's reactions. I haven't tried anything on, but it's a humbling experience to behold a pair of green nylon slacks that would easily accomodate Sue, myself, and the car we drove to the mall in.

Anyone who thinks I am not justified in complaining is either six feet tall or taller, has never been elbowed in the eye at the Marion, was never called shorty, squirt, midget, shrimp, or half pint, and has never had anyone sing Randy Newman's memorable song "Short People" while looking them in the eye.

Neitzke, Gille present a senior exhibition

by J.M. Dauplaise

At 3 p.m. on May 5, the first of a series of Senior Exhibitions opened at the Third Floor Gallery in Applied Arts. The show was presented by seniors Robert Neitzke and Diane Gille and had a large turn out.

The show featured both artist's prints and included life drawings by Gille and sculpture by Neitzke. The artist's styles worked well together and were well recieved by gallery visitors.

Neitzke's "Portrait of Connie Lingus" was of particular interest to those attending the show. It is a typical example of Neitzke's whimsical color serigraphs. It features a shade of green used frequently by Neitzke with accents of pink. The imagery is ambiguous and draws varying conclusions from its viewers.

Neitzke is a Studio Art major concentrating in Printmaking. He will be graduating in May and hopes to pursue his MFA after graduating. As of yet he has no particular school in mind.

"My work is based in two areas." said Neitzke. "I work both with environmental awareness and eroticism." The two areas seem rather unrelated, but Neitzke explains, " Eroticism is a nice break away from the more serious subject of environmental awareness."

Neitzke describes his erotic work as being fun and whimsical. "It's not pornographic.", he said. "I like doing things which are ambiguous; that make the viewer curious. We see blatant erotic images everywhere, on billboards, in magazines, and on television. My images are more subtle. You see what you want to see."

On the more serious side, Neitzke is deeply concerned about our invironment and the seeming disregard it receives. "People seem so unconcerned with the situation. Where are we going to live if we destroy the Earth?"

Diane Gille, an Art Education major concentrating in drawing and printmaking, will be graduating in December of 1987 after finishing her student teaching tenure in Chetek, Wis. next fall. She will be teaching Elementary and High School students there.

After graduating Gille hopes to work towards her MFA and to teach at a High School level. She would like to move to the Detroit area.

Gille's work is primarily based on the figure, incorporating her life drawing work with her print imagery. Her print "Figure on a Couch" is an example of her meshing the two areas.

Of her non-figurative work Gille says, "I enjoy exploring linea and geometric shapes. Most of my non-figurative work takes this approach.

Color figures prominently in Gille's work and she displays a great sensitivity in its use. Despite the vibrancy of the colors, the images transpose a feeling of tranquility to the viewer.

"Bob's work and mine complement each other," said Gille, "and I think that makes a show successful." The show will run May 5-8.

Studio art senior Robert Neitzke explains the environmental awareness his prints often display. Neitzke along with Diane Gille, art education senior, whose prints deal with the figure,presented their senior show at Applied Arts upstairs gallery.

In his office Dan Riordan takes a moment from his work. Riordan has just written 'Technical Report Writing Today', a textbook in use across the country. In addition to writing Riordan teaches literature and writing courses at Stout.

'Technical Report Writing Today' written by Stout Doctor Riordan

by Stevie Voll

Dan Riordan has been teaching at the University of Wisconsin-Stout for 17 years and now he has written and published a technical writing book.

The book, Technical Report Writing Today, third edition, is designed for technical writing classes, but according to Riordan the book can also be used in a technical research and reporting class as well.

He said the book has received "pleasant reception" and "is being adopted around the country by colleges and universities" and is even being used out of the country in places like Germany, where it has been reviewed.

Riordan said that he worked on putting the book together from December, 1985 to December, 1986. It has gone into its first printing and he is revising the book for a second printing.

He said that writing the book was sort of like starting a small company, because he had to hire typists, letter writers, consultants and technical researchers.

The book contains a lot of writing from students he has had in the past and present, which are used as examples of different types of reports. He also said that being a teacher brought him ideas from students.

> "Literature is hard to teach
> —Dan Riordan"

Riordan graduated from the University of North Carolina in 1970, with a doctorate in American Literature. He attended St. Edwards University in Austin, Texas, for his undergraduate in English where he was also an editor on the school paper.

In 1970, he moved from the South to the North, Menomonie and UW-Stout, where he has taught technical writing, freshmen English, and literature classes in the English Department. From 1973-1977 he was chairman of the English Department. He said, "Administration was fun, but I like teaching more."

Seems that he really enjoys teaching; Riordan said, "Literature is hard to teach." In his literature classes he likes to point out to students that literature is worth knowing about and finding out, and it is.

Literature can open up a person to new insights into life. He also said that another reason he enjoys teaching is that he learns from his students by explaining and listening. His American literature class is full of facts and clues and is worth taking.

Clues, Literature, Facts Technical Report Writing Today, third edition. Dan Riordan.

Guitarist Michael Bird to play Pawn

by Stephanie Weiss

If you like the musical style of Dan fogelberg, Billy Joel and Jim Croce, the Pawn Live has an entertainer to fill your "live-music-blues" bill.

Michael Bird, who left the United States Air Force in 1976 to develop his talents as a musician, will be performing at the Pawn Live on Friday, May 8, and Saturday, May 9, at 9:15 p.m.

After leaving the Air Force, Bird stopped in Tennessee and landed on Nashville's Music Row, where he was immediately in demand as a singer and songwriter.

Once in Nashville, Bird became a staff writer for Creative Workshop/Southern Writers Group. In 1984, he was named senior writer for Hook, Line and Synchro, the innovative new ASCAP-affiliated publishing house.

Bird's musical talents have reaped success. His composition, Cold in July, brought him his first position on the Billboard chart and went Top Ten on the Independent Chart of Music Row Magazine. In addition, Bird has released an acoustic, solo album, entitled Michael Bird, which has been bringing industry response and recognition.

Currently touring the American College circuit, Bird has shared the stage with Nicollette Larson, Terri Gibbs, Gamble Rogers, Doc Watson and others.

There is no charge for either performance.

Lotsa Men

Denise Cain

At yet another party this weekend, I found myself defending last week's column: WHAT GUYS THINK GIRLS WANT, BUT WE REALLY DON'T.

Obviously, idle confusion has hit the Stout campus. Desperate, lonely men are asking, "What DO women really want?"

Well, our needs are simple: food, shelter and clothing; the same three elements psychologists have professed for eons. There are a few other needs my panel of women demand, so I included them in this week's column:

WHAT GIRLS REALLY WANT FROM GUYS

1. A girl wants a guy who lets her eat unlimited amounts of chocolate. A girl's chocolate drive should never be denied.
2. A girl wants a guy who has his own room.
3. A girl wants a guy who is sensitive to her department store clothing needs.
4. A girls wants a guy who does not mind scrubbing the mold out of the Tupperware containers in the refrigerator.
5. A girl wants a guy who is athletic. He must be able to support her.
6. A girl wants a guy who is responsible enough to pay off her college loans.
7. A girl wants a guy who shaves fairly often. Whisker rub burns are something a grandfather gives, not an available, attractive man.
8. A girl wants a guy who is religious, he must worship the ground she walks on.
9. A girl wants a guy who does not wear cowboy boots. No sense bringing back country music.
10. A girl wants a guy who weighs more than she does. (This is a personal demand of my own.)

Included in this week's column are recipes that are super easy and fast to make, and, of course, the Log Jam recipe quenches any thirst.

Log Jam Long Island Iced Tea, 22 OUNCES OF FUN!

22 oz. glass jammin' with ice

Fill the glass with equal parts of:
vodka
rum triple sec gin

Add: sweet and sour, enough to fill the glass 3/4 full Fill the remainder of the glass with Coca-Cola and garnish with a lemon wedge.

Easy Chocolate Cookies

1 pkg. Pillsbury Plus Devil's Food cake mix
1 cup coconut
1/2 cup oatmeal
3/4 cup margarine, melted
2 tsp. vanilla
2 eggs, slightly beaten

Canned milk chocolate frosting, melted milk chocolate Hershey bars, or melted Plain M & M's

In a shallow baking dish, toast the coconut and the oatmeal for about 5 minutes or until the coconut is lightly browned. Stir as needed. Mix together with a spoon: cake mix, margarine, eggs, vanilla, toasted oatmeal and coconut. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 10 minutes. Cool for 30 seconds on the cookie sheet and remove. Frost when completely cool with chocolate frosting. Makes 24 cookies.

Mounds Candy Bars

First Layer: 2 cups graham cracker crumbs
1/2 cup melted margarine
2 Tbsp. sugar

Pat into a 9 x 13" pan and bake in 350-degree oven for 10 minutes. Second layer: 2 cups flaked coconut

1 can sweetened condensed milk

Mix over very low heat and spread over crust. Return to oven and bake 15 minutes, or until lightly browned.

Third layer: 2 cups chocolate chips

Melt chocolate chips in microwave or in double boiler and spread over cooled bars. Makes 24 bars.

Student designers host style show

by Jill Huppert

Design '87, a dinner style show to be held next weekend, will feature couture garments designed by UW-Stout student designers.

Thirty designers are participating and have submitted over 100 garments for the show.

"There are a wide range of styles and designs, so it should be very interesting," said Joanne Cryer, chairman for the show.

Design '87 will feature textile surface design, lingerie, eveningwear, outerwear, and careerwear. Individual designer's garments will be grouped together and featured in sets, Cryer said.

"It is strictly a show to give the designers a chance to show some of the things they've done this year," Cryer said.

The show, sponsored by the Apparel, Textile, and Design Association (ATDA), will be held on Friday, May 15, in the Crystal Ballroom of the Student Center. A social hour will begin at 6:00 p.m., with dinner at 6:30 p.m. and the style show immediately following.

Design '87 is the third annual design show sponsored by ATDA, but some changes were made for this year's show.

In the past, the Spring Show was a contest. Garments were judged and prizes were awarded to winning designs. Since there was a design competition in this year's Promotion's Fashion Show held during Parent's Weekend, the ATDA committee decided to eliminate the competition and add a dinner to their show.

"We thought the dinner would make it a little bit nicer than just a fashion show," Cryer said.

Since there is no contest, Cryer said the committee could be liberal on accepting garments for the show. "We did not discriminate based on garment construction," she said.

Designer Barb Schwartz entered two designs in the show. Schwartz feels designers can be "more expressive in designs for this show," since they do not have to meet any criteria for judging. "It should be a shorter and more entertaining show," she said.

Some designers felt there was a lack of incentive to enter this year's show because it was not being judged.

"Competition is important," said Wendy House, designer, "you can be rewarded and it gives you a measure of how good you are."

"It's O.K. without competition," said Gina Gwin, designer, "but with competition it just makes it more exciting."

There are still some tickets available for the design show, although seating is limited. For tickets, contact Joanne Cryer at 235-1874. Cost is $10.00 per person.

Witchhunter

Bill Krueger

WITCHHUNTER AT THE RENDEZVOUS

If you went to Dance Dimension last Saturday, you were missing the best rock-n-roll show I've seen in Menomonie. Witchhunter was playing some classic rock-n-roll that had everybody dancing. In fact, I found it hard to get onto the dance floor. The stage was filled with spiderwebs. The band was dressed in spandex and they weren't afraid of playing loud.

Witchhunter is a band out of Minneapolis. They've been together since last December. Everyone in the band is an experienced musician. The band consists of Deacon Dark (lead singer), Tim Allen (guitarist), Lance Dean (bass), and Bam Bam (drummer). That's right, the drummer's name is Bam Bam.

Deacon Dark has an exceptionally good voice, except that it sounded a bit distorted Saturday night. He appears to put 200 percent into his singing.

Tim Allen plays the songs with some originality, while keeping the right sound to the songs. He also sings for the band.

Witchhunter considers itself a classic rock show. Their play list includes hard rock songs by Ozzy Osbourne, Judas Priest and AC/DC. It also includes classic songs by Thin Lizzy, Steppenwolf and Ted Nugent.

Deacon Dark thinks the band really has something. He says that everywhere they play, people love their music. He especially loves Menomonie. He said everyone here is really great, and he appreciates everyone coming out to see them.

The band is working on getting a video on MTV. Since they are a young band they don't have too many originals. They hope to be getting a recording contract soon. With all the focus on music coming out of Minneapolis, I think they have more than a very good chance of putting out a record.

With all the equipment they had, they could have played in a place three times the size. I think these guys are good enough to fill a place that size back in Minneapolis. They did come out sounding really great.

Witchhunter really loved playing here and they hope to be back. A bartender at the Rendezvous said that she really loves the band and everyone else does, too, and hopes they come back. It's a possibility that they will be back in a couple of weeks, if they can fit it in their schedule.

If you live near the cities, you should probably go see them. Otherwise you might be able to see Witchhunter in a couple weeks.

Student art at Furlong

by Jennifer Tooley

The 1987 Annual UW-Stout Art Department Student Art Exhibition opened Tuesday evening at the J. Furlong Gallery in Ray Hall. Sixty-six pieces are exhibited, representing fourty-three Stout artists.

A crowd of approximately thirty-five people attended the opening, most of whom expressed admiration for the representative pieces.

> "It's seemed fairly representative
> —Richard Walters"

Many patrons payed particular attention to a piece entitled "Suburban Bliss" by Rick Hutter. Comments overheard included, "Have you seen the one with the toasters ?" and "Hey! This is just great!".

Hutter seemed pleased with the comments."Anytime you do anything, you like to be recognized and acknowledged. Acknowlegdement is crucial."

"Suburban Bliss", a serigraph, is a showpiece for Hutter. It has been in two national shows, including the LaGrange National Show in LaGrange, Georgia and For Love Or For Money in Lofton, Oklahoma. "This is one of my stronger pieces." said Hutter.

Kim Nernberger, who had three pieces exhibited, was also the recipient of a $100 Materials Award from an anonymous doner from the Campus Art Store.

"The award will come in very, very handy." said Nernberger. "I can't wait to go in and say charge it! I'd like to thank the doner."

Two of Nernberger's pieces, "Journey and "Tortilla Flat" were inspired by her trip to Arizona over Spring Break." Tortilla Flat' is a basic landscape, Journey' contains images and symbols representative of the trip."

This was Nernberger's first time in a exhibition; after being rejected by the Arts West show in Eau Claire, the representation in the Stout show "felt really good!".

Like Nernberger, Richard Walters was also exhibiting his work for the first time. His untitled wire and plaster sculpture was an assignment for a begining sculpture class. "This was my first sculpture class; we're just told to do whatever. It felt pretty good to be selected!" said Walters'.

Walters' is an Industrial Design major and though he enjoys studio arts, he will stick with industrial design because he is "assured of a job."

Students whose work was represented were also pleased at the opportunity to see other students work. Said Nernberger, "There was a lot of nice work. You really never get a chance to see what other students are doing until a show like this- it gives you some great ideas.

Walters'agreed. "There was some nice stuff. It seemed fairly representative."

In a written statement by the juror for the show, Mr. Gene Hood, Director of the art gallery at UW-Eau Claire, said "I have tried to pick a representative sampling of strong work...Strong work is good work...art work should communicate, be proficient, and be meaningful visually or intellectually...I was surprised at the strength of the work...Virtually everyone had something worthy of inclusion."

Mentioned for special significance by Mr. Hood were (alphabetically) Jean-Marie Dauplaise, Jef Maynard, Marlene Michels, Stephanie Molstre, Stevie Voll, and Jeanne Wilkkinson.

This show will run through May 21.

The Annual Art Department student exhibition opened May 5, and will run through May 21. The show featured a wide representation of student work sculpture from Richard Walters, untitled (top), Jane Murden, picnic lunch wood and plaster (far left), Lisa Charlton, untitled - wood and plaster, Richard Hutter, Suburban Bliss, serigraph, (upper left) ceramic pieces by various artists, Karen Heagle untitled painting. These pieces are just a fraction of the 43 artists represented in the show. The show is at J. Furlong Gallery.

Versatile entertainer, Bill Miller plays a near full house at Pawn

by James Simmers

Singer, songwriter, and storyteller, Bill Miller, performed last Friday and Saturday night in the Pawn to nearly a full house.

Miller has a unique style of music which ranges from folk and country to some sixties and seventies rock tunes.

He was born and raised on an Indian reservation in northern Wisconsin and his Native American heritage surfaces in his performances by way of some unusual and very original acoustical guitar licks. His mix of a popular playing style, accompanied by an almost tribal beat, was the basis for an evening of very interesting music.

Although Miller originally had planned a career in the art field, he picked up music as a hobby in his early teenage years. He never believed that he would make music his living and subsequently attended art school. During this time, he supported himself by playing in a rock band, but he soon tired of that type of music. Rock and roll was too limited for a man who wanted to sing songs that were personal and about families and friends. He soon sold his electric guitar, bought an acoustic one and began to play and sing about his past, people he loved and about himself. Soon after, he recorded his first album.

fresh and spirited talent

Miller now uses his music as a sort of counseling and healing for youths affected by alcohol and chemical dependency. He feels he is giving them a chance to depend on something else (like music) besides drugs and alcohol.

This sets a purpose to his music while giving him a chance to set a favorable image of the Native American people. This is very important to him since he feels that he is a constant representative of the Indian people and their culture.

Although he has had no formal training, Miller attributes much of his success to people he has met through his travels. He is not afraid to ask questions and has learned much from people and groups as diverse as Charlie Daniels, The Nitty Gritty Dirt Band and The Allman Brothers to name just a few. This attitude has shown Miller the road to success. It should lead to even bigger and better breaks for a very talented and deserving musician.

Miller's second album has just recently been released. Titled "Old Dreams and New Hopes," it features music inspired by and performed with many of his respected friends and contemporaries. According to Miller, it is a very special and "down home" kind of album. It is available on record or tape by contacting:

Wind Spirit Music
P.O. Box 210794

We hope the Pawn will continue to offer such fresh and spirited talent as was seen in Bill Miller. His music was as captivating as his songs were inspirational. With any luck at all, we will see him again next year.

Men tracksters win own triangular meet

Blue Devils tracksters won in an impressive victory in the UW-Stout triangular meet on May 2nd. Blue Devil's next challenge will be the WSUC outdoor conference meet at UW-La Crosse May 8 and 9.

The Blue Devil Men's Track team had an impressive 119 point first place finish at the UW-Stout Triangular May 2. The two other teams competing were UW-Eau Claire, placing second with 47 points, and third place finisher UW-Superior with 20 points.

Head Coach Steve Terry said that the meet was a good tune-up for the conference meet this weekend. "Everyone had a good effort. The times were not spectacular, but people were running outside their events."

> "We will have to put it all together to pull off a big one > —Paul Bons"

Stout dominated the meet in most events including the 110 High Hurdles where they took the top four place finishes. Junior Dan Doucette led the men in the event with a time of 15.3 seconds and a first place finish. Sophomores Brian Kohls and Zack Adams finished second and third in times of 15.5 and 15.6 seconds respectively. While junior John Zastrow came in fourth with a time of 16.5 seconds.

In the 400 meter Intermediate Hurdles Freshmen Bob Woelfel and Tim Smalstig continued the hurdle power as Woelfel ran the event in 58.3 seconds earning him a second place finish, and Smalstig finished fourth with a time of 1 minute, 2.7 seconds.

On a faster track, Devil sprinter Kenute Connell ran a 22.7 second 200 meter dash earning him a second place finish while Brian Kohls took fourth with a time of 23.5 seconds.

Kenute Connell also took second in the 100 meter dash as he finished the event in 11.3 seconds. Stout freshman Gary Malinowski finished in third place with a time of 11.4 seconds.

The Stout distance crew pulled one first place finish as Paul Bons completed the 1,500 meter run in a time of 4 minutes, 4.2 seconds. Matt Christenson took fourth place in the 1,500 as he completed the race in a time of 4 minutes, 11.3 seconds.

The middle distance runners held strong as they had the top three finishes in the 400 meter dash. Dan Doucette won the event with a time of 50.6 seconds. While Mike Todey landed second with a time of 51.2 seconds,and Kevin Kohl took third place, running the 400 in 52.1 seconds.

Bodybuilder Tim Kinney poses down foes in two competitions

by April Whitney

Bodies, bodies, bodies, nurtition, diet, good health, what is becoming of the good old partying college student? Could we possibly be getting smart? People are becoming more aware of good health and nutrition these days. Smoking is definately out, and proper eating and exercise habits are becoming the popular things to do.

Let us examine a day in the life of Tim Kinney. Tim is a body builder and he starts out his training program with a morning bike ride. He spends numerous hours in the field house lifting weights, then he returns to his bike to end his total miles for the day at about 50 miles. All of this exercise pays off for Tim because he has been accomplishing his goals.

Tim recently competed in the Mr. Madison body building contest and walked away with the "Mr. Madison" title. "The competition is tough but it's worth it. You train so hard for a contest and you feel good about winning," said Kinney. That is what life is all about, winning because no one likes a loser right.

Tim also competed in the Mr. Collegiant U.S.A contest in Milwaukee this past weekend. He dropped a weight class and beat his competition. Tim usually cuts down his weight for bodybuilding contests so the definition of his muscles can be clearly seen. Tim normally weighs about 215 pounds but during compition he is at a slim 180 pounds. The proper diet and exercise program is a must for Tim, for he needs to be at his peak performance during competitions.

> "The competition is tough, but it's worth it
> —Mr. Madison Tim Kinney"

Tim recieves a lot of support from his friends. Many of them went to Milwaukee to watch him compete. "Thanks to everyone for the support, it really lifts your spirits when you have friends there cheering you on," said Kinney.

Tim wants to take some time off from the competition for a while. He does not plan on competing for another year or so but he has been considering entering a couples contest with his girlfriend Bonnie. "Bonnie wants to wait a couple of years before we compete together as a team, but it sure will be a lot of fun!" said Kinney.

Tim plans on graduating next December although he doesn't see becomming a professional body builder in the future. "Those guys are huge," says Kinney.

Tim started lifting weights when he was in Junior high school. He said that when he was in 8th grade he was so small that all of the kids would give him a hard time. To get involved with bodybuilding was really a dare from one of Tim's old buddies. He is glad he has come this far with the sport, it is one of Tim's favorite hobbies.

The partying side of Kinney is still alive. After his last weeks competitions he has been putting some of his weight back on and becomming a partying college student again. "Which is nice because now I can relax and have a good time before I graduate," says Kinney.

Congratulations to you Tim, or shall we say Mr. Madison. Your hard work has paid off and you have come out a winner.

No fish story

Paul Emerson

So am I the only one you know with a head the size of Detroit or what?! Gilbert Goddfrey, on the Elephant Man.

It was a dreary Friday afternoon. The rain had dulled my high spirits of tomorrows fishing opener. It was to be the first fishing opener I had ever packed up and headed north for.

In fact it would only one of a few times I have gone fishing since my youthful days when every summer I would have to visit my grandparents at their summer cabin up by Cable, Wis.

You see, like many parents do, mine took one of their vacations during the year the first two weeks of July. Being the "baby" of the family, and an unwanted pest by my two sisters still around town, I had to take a little vacation myself.

So every summer I left Little League and my friends behind, at least for one of those weeks, and scuttled on up to the cabin with my grandpa.

Every morning we'd go fishing. Gramps would be up before the sunrise, and wake me soon after. When I think back, I find it hard to believe I once eagerly arose at 4 or 5 A.M. (No one else believes it now either.)

After a little snack, we'd be on the road. One morning to Nelson Lake for Northerns, the next to this little lake gramps knew of. He called it Lost Lake, and told me Bud Grant owned the land around most of it.

Gramps would unload the boat off the top of his "fishing car", an old beater that ran like a top. If we went for Northerns, he'd use a motor, but if we went for Bluegills and Crappies, he used the oars. (Seeing as I always got appointed as the "official rower", I liked fishing for Northerns better.)

I had never had much luck going for Northerns, but I used to catch Bluegills right off the boat. Many times both of us would catch our limit (50).

After returning back to the cabin, my gramma would always have a big breakfast waiting for us. After eating, we would clean the fish. This would give me stock of fillets to take home, my favorite food.

Gramps is gone now, so is gramma, but in memory of all the good times I had with them, I chose to dedicate this column to them.

By the way, I missed the fishing opener, oh well, maybe next year!

Netters to compete in NAIA tourney

by Paul Emerson

With John Leehy and Tony Pheifer leading the way, the UW-Stout Men's Tennis Team captured the District 14 Tournament Team Championship over the weekend on the courts behind the Johnson Fieldhouse.

"This is very satisfying," exclaimed head coach Bob Smith. "It goes to show what hard work will do."

Winning the title assured Stout of a berth in the NAIA national tourney to be held in Kansas City, Mo., May 18-23.

Stout's number five singles player Tony Pheifer stated the NAIA berth is nice but, "it's kind of anti-climatic because we missed the NCAA's. We'll have fun though, and I hope we do well."

Although Stout climbed to the number nine spot in the District 3 national rankings, only the top eight teams are invited to the NCAA's national tournament.

The netters now head into the WSUC championships this weekend in Madison, Wis. They are heavily favored to take their fifth consecutive conference title as they hold all of the top seeded spots in both singles and doubles.

"Anything can happen, but it looks very good going in," said Smith confidently.

Pheifer added that, "It's pretty much the same teams as districts, but a lot of guys play over their heads at conference."

Stout totaled 31 points in the tourney, followed by UW-Eau Claire, a distant second with 15 points. UW-Stevens Point took third with 12 points, followed by UW-La Crosse with 8, UW-Oshkosh 7, UW-River Falls 2, and UW-Milwaukee, which failed to score any team points in the meet.

In the singles competition, an unusual match-up saw two Stout players battling for the singles title. Number one seeded John Leehy beat unseeded teammate Tony Pheifer in the final, 6-4, 6-0.

"I guess I went into it with a negative attitude, because John is so tough," said Pheifer. And added that, "but I gave it my best shot, 100 percent."

Amazingly, Leehy and Pheifer also teamed up to take the title in the doubles competition, as they beat McGuire-Link of Eau Claire, 6-2, 7-6, for the title.

"Both of these guys have worked very hard all season," said Smith, who had to both coach his team and play the role of the tournament director.

Other netters competing in the tournament were Mike Friedman, who was beaten by Pheifer in the semi-finals, 6-2, 6-4.

Mark Paine advanced to the quarter-finals before also being ousted by a teammate. Paine lost to (John) Leehy in a close three set match, 6-2, 3-6, 6-7, (lost the tie-breaker 7-5).

Bill Johnson and Todd Trabant, (who filled in for injured Tony Snoeyenbos), both lost their third round matches.

In other doubles action, Friedman-Johnson (Johnson filled in for Snoeyenbos), advanced to the semi-finals before being ousted by McGuire-Link, (Eau Claire), 2-6, 4-6. While Paine-Trabant lost their second round match to Johnson-Fraser, La Crosse, 6-2, 4-6, 6-4.

John Leehy will be Stout's lone representative at the NCAA national meet. While Tony Snoeyenbos and Mike Friedman have been chosen as alternatives in both singles and as a doubles team.

Lady tracksters tune-up for conference meet

by Denise Cain

The UW-Stout Women's Track team competed at the UW-La Crosse Quadrangular May 2. It was a low pressure, open meet with UW-La Crosse, UW-Stevens Point and UW-Oshkosh also competing.

Lisa Heimmermann led the way for the Lady Devils as she had a personal best in the 800 meter run with a time of 2 minutes, 21.3 seconds.

Head Coach John Miller said Heimmerman had the best run of the day. He added, "Lisa has gained confidence in her running. She has a definite chance of placing in the top five or six at the conference."

Maureen O'Neill also had a personal best at the La Crosse meet as she cut her 400 meter intermediate hurdle time by a second, finishing the race in a time of 1-minute, 10.4-seconds.

Shotputter Renee Leffel had a personal record in the shot as she hit 37-feet, 10-inches in the event.

In a faster event, freshman Kristin Mauk ran the 100 meter dash for the first time since eighth grade in a time of 13.1 seconds. Mauk came back to run the 200 meter dash in a time of 27.0 seconds.

As the women's team looks forward to the outdoor conference meet this weekend, Coach Miller commented, "We are hoping for the best performances of the year. How they perform will be determined by how much effort they put into their training all year and how psychologically ready they are to compete."

Women's captain Ann Meyer said that she is looking for the mile relay to have a strong finish at conference. She also mentioned that the shot put area has the depth to do well at conference. The outdoor conference meet will be held at UW-La Crosse May 8 and 9.

Golfers get in swing

by Darron Vanman

While the pros on the PGA tour play all year round, the Stout men's golf team plays two seasons, fall and a short spring season.

The swinging Blue Devils opened their spring season with a tournament at the College City Classic in Northfield, Minnesota on April 23.

Coach Sten Pierce stated,"Our fifth place finish was adequate. The spring training and tourneys are designed to uncover talent, improve golf swings, and streamline playing management techniques."

Individually, freshman Charlie Brown shot a fine 71 to take second place behind Rick Berta of Eau Claire, who shot a winning score of 70. Coach Pierce commented, "You'll be hearing alot about this young man before he is done."

The Blue Devils then packed up their clubs and headed for Green Lake, Wisconsin. The site of the Lawsonia Collegiate Tournament on April 24.

"The course was in great shape, the pin cuts were tough, and we played good and bad," stated Pierce.

Jim Maquire tied for first place honors with Dave Wente of Parkside, as both shot identical rounds of 78 on the par 72 course. "Jim broke his wedge during the warm-up and decided to use a completely different set of irons. It seemed ill-advised at the time, but it worked out fine. Golf is a crazy game," related Pierce.

The Blue Devils overall took fourth place in a heavily dominated WSUC field. "Most of the players struggled with their game. Lawsonia (golf course) is a monster, and it doesn't let up. It is the site of the WSUC championship next fall so it was a good experience for us," said Pierce.

Devils title hopes dashed as Oshkosh clinches state title

by Chris Riba

For the third time in six years the Blue Devils baseball team are the WSUC northern division champions. The title earns them a birth into the national tournament.

The Devils finished the conference season with a record of 12-4 and a one game lead over second place River Falls.

"We've been working hard for a long time," said coach Terry Petrie, "I was happy for the players, we could of quit because of the people we lost."

The Devils' picked up the championship with victories over River Falls on Saturday and La Crosse on Sunday.

The Devils won game one over River Falls 4-2, but lost the second 3-2, putting them into a must win situation Sunday with La Crosse. They dropped the first game 8-0, but then captured the conference title with an 8-1 game two victory.

Mike Charbonneau picked up the win and Karl Drezek the save in the victory over River Falls. The win raised Charbonneau's record to 4-0 and lowered his ERA to 1.64

Jeff Kloes and Bob Effinger led the offensive assault, with Kloes going 3 for 4, including 2 doubles and a RBI. Effinger went 2 for 3 and also had a RBI.

Kloes led the team in hitting for the season with a .557 batting average, 8 doubles and 3 home runs. Effinger was second with a .547 average, 4 round trippers and scored 17 runs.

The Devils dropped the second game 3-0. Dave Crabtree picked up the loss, his only one of the season to go along with 3 victories. The offense was held to only one hit which was a second inning single by Effinger.

The conference title looked as if it might be slipping away when the Devils dropped the first game to La Crosse 8-0. Kloes rapped out all 3 hits for the Devils. Right-hander Gary Busch was saddled with his first loss of the season.

The offense snapped out of it's dry spell, in the second game, by scoring 8 runs on 7 hits. They were led by Tim Buswell who was 2 for 3 and Kloes who was 1 for 1 with 3 walks.

Righty John Schmitt won his 3 straight game to keep his record perfect for the conference season.

With the northern title under their belt, the Devils had a chance to capture the state title on Tuesday in Oshkosh. They lost both games, the first 8-3 and in the second Kloes' 2 home runs couldn't make up the difference as they lost 9-5.

The district 14 tournament will be played here on Saturday with the Devils taking on UW-Parkside, M.I.E. or UW-Milwaukee. Game time will be 12:00. The winner will move on in the national tournament.

Coach: Bob Smith

Team's Accomplishments this season include:
Instead of electing one individual for the week, we decided that these six guys equally deserved the Stoutonia's athlete of the week. BECAUSE: The team went undefeated in the WSUC,7-0 for the third straight year. Not only did they win, but they swept all of the individual matches, for a perfect 63-0 match record in the WSUC. The past weekend they won the District 14 championshps which qualified them for the NAIA tourney. This weekend the team is heading for its fifth straight WSUC championship. In the final District 3 poll, Stout was ninth. They missed qualifying for the NCAA tourney by one spot. Senior John Leehy was the only Stout player to make it to the NCAA.

Coach's comments:

"These guys are very dedicated to the sport
—Tennis Coach Bob Smith"

"I'm not sure we have the most talented players, but we work the hardest in the conference. We have developed slowly over three years together. We work hard and well together," explained Coach Smith on Stout's recent dominance of the WSUC.

"These guys are very dedicated to the sport. They have learned how to set goals, and that is important. They haven't let too much stand in the way of their goals," Coach Smith said.

Athlete's comments:

John Leehy, Stout's number one singles player and NCAA qualifier, says the team practices hard from September to May. He says the players take the summers easy, playing mainly for recreation only.

Leehy said he started playing tennis competitively when he was a freshman in high school. But he blossomed when he came to Stout. "I came to play here because my senior year they were the WSUC champs, and I could tell they were building a good program."

Leehy made steady improvement throughout his Stout career. He went from sixth, to third, to second, to the first singles spot this season.

John commented on why Stout dominates the WSUC, "We practice so much more than any other conference team. I'm pretty sure no other WSUC team practices in the fall like we do. We only have two indoor courts, but Coach Smith gets the fullest from them."

This will be Leehy's first NCAA tourney which starts next Wednesday, the 13th, and he said, "I will do the best I can. I've played three of the top five guys and came pretty close to beating them. I'm very confident."

This is the Stoutonia's last athlete of week for the year. The tennis team exemplified the entire Stout sports program. A program based on men and women who compete for themselves and for Stout, not some monetary compensation.

Blue Devil Receiver Ron Wise waiting for big chance at NFL

by Stout Sports Dept.

Ron Wise, the second leading all-time receiver in Blue Devil football history, met last week with officials of the Chicago Bears in hopes of signing an agreement with the NFL team.

Wise was timed, weighed, and measured by the club at their Forest Park, Illinois headquarters.

"We'll all just keep our fingers crossed —Rich Lawrence"

Wise had previously been placed on the negotiations list with the Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League, but declined a contract offer with the Canadian Club in hopes of signing a free agent accord with an NFL team.

After finishing the 1986 football season with 48 receptions for 640 yards, including two games where he had 150 yards in receptions. Wise was rewarded for his efforts by being named an honorable mention all-American by the NAIA, yet was only selected honorable mention all conference (WSUC) squad, though leading the conference in receiving.

At the present time, Wise remains un-signed but is still being considered by some NFL clubs and will anxiously await a call as the reporting dates for the coming fall season draw closer.

"Ron may have to wait a while, and he may get a call tomorrow, it's really just a waiting game," stated Rich Lawrence, UW-Stout head football coach.

"Being in the right place at the right time is so important, particularly for a wide receiver. We'll all just keep our fingers crossed," added Lawrence.

In the field events Stout continued to perform well. The men took the first three places in the high jump. Chuck Klann leaped to a height of 5-feet, 10-inches hitting first place; and Scott Romenesko and John Zastrow both jumped 5-feet, 8-inches tying them for a second place finish.

In the hammer throw Randy Miller placed first with a 128-foot, 7-inch toss; and Brandt Olsen hit 122-feet, 6-inches, earning him a second place standing.

Dan Doucette took first in the long jump with a leap of 20-feet, 4-inches. John Zastrow finished second with 19-foot, 10-inch jump; and Brian Kohls landed in fourth with a jump of 19-feet, 3-inches.

Aiming high in the pole vault for Stout was Scott Romenesko as he finished first with a vault of 14-feet, 6-inches. John Zastrow placed second with 14-feet, and Derrick Bridley vaulted to a third place finish with a height of 13-feet, six-inches.

John Zastrow continued to show his efforts in the field events as he placed first in the javelin with a toss of 121-feet, 5-inches.

Next up for the Blue Devils is the WSUC outdoor conference meet to be held at UW-La Crosse May 8 and 9. Coach Terry mentioned that they are looking forward to another good conference meet. He stated, "This team has the potential to be the best team in the history of the school."

It will be the last conference meet for seniors Matt Christenson, Scott Romenesko, Steve Hoeschele, Kenute Connell and Paul Bons.

Tri-captain Paul Bons said that his team goals for conference are to place in the top three. He commented, "We will have to put it all together to pull off a big one. It will take a good effort by everyone."

Tri-captain Scott Romenesko stated that the team has been training for the conference meet all season. He added, "In order to do well at outdoor conference we must come together as a team like we did at indoor conference."

Tri-captain Matt Christenson said that the Blue Devils team is strong in all areas this year but added, "It will take team unity with a lot of personal bests to do well at outdoor conference. With a little luck we will get second."

Building collapse slowing construction

Jill Huppert

Nobody was hurt when a portion of the Keller Machine Shop building collapsed Monday afternoon.

A contractor, Pember Excavating, was digging in front of a building on Crescent Street when the collapse occurred.

The work was being done as part of the construction project to link utilities from UW-Stout's main campus to the North campus, according to John Enger, associate director of University Relations.

Construction workers began digging along the side of the building where there was a full basement, said Roger Bailey, Office Manager at Pember Excavaing. "There were footings clear down on the first part of the building," Bailey said, "But there was no footing under that one side."

> "The architects should have known what they were up against
> —Jeff Keller

"Once they (the workers) got to it and found out what was there, they moved away. But because of the soil and the way the building was designed, it didn't do any good," Bailey said.

"The architects should have known what they were up against," since they had surveyed the area before construction began, said Jeff Keller, owner of the building.

Keller was concerned when workers began digging close to his building. "But, I really didn't have any say in it because the area they were digging in is really not my property," Keller said, "They have the right of way to dig there."

Keller is unsure of the amount of damages or if the building is repairable. Keller Machine Shop is temporarily out of business until the building can be repaired or they can relocate, Keller said.

The utility construction project, which was running ahead of schedule, will now be set back about two weeks, Bailey said, depending on what they decide to do with the building.

Construction linking North and South campus utilities will be set back due to the collapse of Keller Machine Shop, which is temporarily out of business until the building can be repaired.

Cooperative Programming applications delayed till fall

by Tracy Lea Landis

The financial officer of UW-Stout's student government has announced that applications for funds from Cooperative Programming will not be accepted until the first days of fall semester.

Cooperative Programming, which began last year, provides additional funding for events which are co-sponsored by two or more organizations on campus. This year $13,000 was allocated to Cooperative Programming by the Stout Student Association (SSA).

Applications for Cooperative Programming funds will be accepted and hearings will be held shortly after school starts in the fall, said Todd A. Nelson, vice-president of financial affairs (VPFA) for the SSA.

Nelson made the remarks during Open Forum at the meeting of the University Programming Board (UPB) on Tuesday, May 5.

"A lot of problems developed in regards to segregated fees and Cooperative Programming," VPFA Nelson told UPB members, who represent programming commissions that book bands, speakers and other events on campus.

"It's creating an accounting problem," said Nelson.

Nelson explained that he was working on computerization of the financial records concerned. He said that he is also revising the Cooperative Programming application form so that it conforms to the new record-keeping system.

Nelson, who is responsible for managing the accounts of all organizations funded by SSA, said that he expects this change to solve the "accounting problem" caused by tracking Cooperative Programming funds through the accounts of groups using the funds.

"It's going to provide a more accurate basis to establish what is in commission accounts," said Nelson.

Nelson explained that it would be impossible to make these changes and hold hearings on applications before the end of this semester, especially considering the time that would be necessary to advertise the deadline for Cooperative Programming applications.

"I really would have a hard time not giving everyone a fair chance," said Nelson.

"I'd really like to see more people who don't normally receive funding get more out of this," Nelson added.

Handicapped Organized Women is a new club on campus this year

by Julie K. Ragatz

There is a newly formed organization at UW-Stout which is especially designed to aid the handicapped women on campus.

The purpose of the group, Handicapped Organized Women (HOW), is to provide emotional support, educate disabled women in the community by developing a positive image, teach independence, and foster growth and unity through the sharing of experiences.

The group was started at the beginning of the second semester after an organizational meeting last fall.

President of the group, Carol Banks, said that there are many other HOW organizations around the United States, but the one here at UW-Stout is one of the only ones on a college campus and therefore more focused on the college aspect of disabled women.

"What we're looking for is guidance and support from other people as far as making the right move in making career choices," said Banks.

She added that being a woman in a lower income group and also having a disability to contend with can be very difficult. Those in the group need all the support and encouragement they can get, she said.

Banks also pointed out that having a disability doesn't necessarily mean being in a wheelchair. There are many types of disabilities, including learning and mental disabilities, as well as those that are physical.

Group member Mary Jo McCabe commented that she "hopes to see the group become a support group where disabled women can share ideas and explore alternatives."

Because the group is so new, they are working on lining things up for next year when they hope to have more involvement and be more well known.

One thing they are trying to focus on is bringing in women speakers who are disabled and also successful in a career.

Banks added, "I think I've got more confidence since working with the people from HOW; enough that I can look for a job and hold it."

Banks explained that it doesn't matter whether a person is just recently disabled or has been disabled for a long time, because they all have the same needs pertaining to becoming involved in a satisfactory career.

Anyone interested in the group or wanting additional information can contact Carol Banks at 235-5718.

Kinship kids and their parents met Saturday with members of Sigma Tau Gamma for a mini-olympics and barbecue.

Sig Tau little sisters co-sponsored the event, which included activities at Nelson Field and then awards and refreshments at the Sig Tau house.

"The kids enjoyed the day," Sig Tau little sister Lisa Garofalo said. "Everyone had a lot of fun."

The mini-olympics consisted of track and field competitions, and other various events including egg and spoon races, sack races, obstacle course, and balloon fights.

"The day went really well," Garofalo said. "Parents came and were able to spend time with their kids and Sig Tau members."

The event was put on by Sig Tau to fulfill their community project which they must do each semester. This is the second time the little sisters have participated in this type of event.

"Twenty-two kids showed for the event, and quite a few parents," Garofalo said, "and we had a larger turn-out than last year."

Sig Tau plans on making this an annual spring event. "We hope this will continue to grow and we can have more and more participants in the future," Garofalo added.

The little sisters started planning the event one month in advance. "Everyone in the fraternity worked hard in putting this together," Garofalo said. "We had a lot of fun doing it, though."

On behalf of Sig Tau and the little sisters, Garofalo expressed her gratitude to local merchants, who donated awards for the event.

Money donated toward Stout's second century

by Julie K. Ragatz

The University Foundation Board is currently continuing work on the "Toward Century II" Capital Campaign which began in October of 1984.

The name of the campaign comes from the approaching second century of UW-Stout which will begin in 1993.

The purpose of the initiated program is to make Stout as competent in the quality of education in it's second era as it has been in the past, according to Dave Williams of the Foundation Board.

The campaign is an effort by the Foundation Board to raise funds larger than usual, concentrating in the area of curriculum development.

Other areas in which the Foundation hopes to procure larger funds are faculty and staff development, instructional equipment, library and learning resources.

A more separate and distinct campaign was aimed at the faculty. James Bensen, Dean of the School of Industry and Technology, is the chairman of that particular area.

So far there has been $1.4 million donated in written pledges, and the faculty and staff is responsible for $311,360, almost 25 percent of the total.

"The faculty and staff really responded fabulously. They really cared about what went on here at Stout," said Williams.

He added that it helps when teachers ask other teachers for pledges, because there is more of a peer approach.

In the long run, Williams said, the students will benefit the most. The faculty and staff will be better trained, and as a result they will in turn be even more competent in the classrooms than they are already.

"Students should know that the faculty doesn't just show up, collect a paycheck and leave," said Williams.

With better tools to work with, not only will the quality of teaching and learning improve, but so will the quality of the university as a whole.

Bensen said, "Faculty and staff are dedicated to Stout, and they make a difference. I am delighted, proud, and pleased with the team effort from top to bottom. The campaign has been an outstanding example of Stout spirit."

Williams added, "I think it's excellent that faculty cared enough about students and their education to pledge and give as much money as they did to the Toward Century II campaign."

Coach recovering

by Steven Lemire

Coach John Zuerlein is recovering from head injuries he suffered in a fall while rock climbing. The accident occured on May 1 while Zuerlein was leading his outdoor skills class on a two-day hike in the Chequamegon National Forest.

"According to his doctors, John is still in a coma state even though he can open his eyes, respond to stimuli, speak words, even feed himself and walk with assistance," said Warren Bowlus, chairman and director of physical education and athletics at UW-Stout.

"His condition has improved dramatically since ten days ago," said Bowlus. "He is out of the intensive care unit though he is still under close observation."

Participants in Peer Mentoring Program recognized at reception

by Julie K. Ragatz

A reception for all those participating in the Peer Mentor Program was held last Wednesday at the University Counseling Center.

The Peer Mentor Program is sponsored by non- traditional students, which include those over 23 returning to college or starting for the first time, or those who have children. They aid other non-traditional students in their first semesters here at UW-Stout.

Many of the students who have been mentors in the program were in attendance, as well as those who are receiving assistance.

> "We have more to learn from them than they do from us
> —David McNaughton"

Mary Burbach, a student currently receiving aid through the program, said that there are "a lot of questions that new students have, whether they are non-traditional or traditional, and it's nice to have someone to call to answer those important questions."

Burbach feels that the program will continue to grow and the campus will have more non-traditional students because there is a program to cater to their needs.

"Incoming students are going to have the same questions and needs as the students now," Burbach said.

Toni Kunstman, a mentor, said that the program helped her feel good about herself and she liked the idea of being able to help someone else.

"If they know they've got support, they don't feel so awkward about going to school," Kunstman said.

Dick Manor, vice president of the Organization of Adult Students Involved in Stout (OASIS) and also a mentor, added that the program "helps non-traditional students ease into university life and provides a positive attitude for them as they enter the university."

David McNaughton, director of the Counseling Center, commented that the non-traditional students are helping the university break away from some of it's more traditional roles.

"We have more to learn from them than they do from us," said McNaughton.

Chancellor Bob Swanson said he was very pleased with the progress the program has made, and that the university is "specially interested in this group."

The 13 mentors were all given certificates of appreciation for their service, and they all said they enjoyed doing it.

"We're proud of the people and energy put into the program," said Shirley Murphy, coordinator of the program.

She added that Stout already offers more than most schools when it comes to non-traditional student services, including a special lounge area in the Career Resource Lab of the Counseling Center.

A non-traditional student conference is being planned for next April.

Award goes to Prichard

by Rhonda Olson

Neal Prichard, a professor of industrial and marketing education at UW-Stout, has received the Professional Excellence Award in the university vocational teacher category from the Wisconsin Board of Vocational, Technical, and Adult Education,(VTAE).

Robert Sorenson, state VTAE director, commended Prichard for his work with both the association and the field of vocational education. Sorenson wrote to Prichard, "It is people like yourself, with the kind of support and dedication you have shown, that helps make the Wisconsin VTAE system one of the best in the nation."

SME Donates Book to Library Learning Center

by Rose Shakal

The Society of Manufacturing Engineers (SME) has won an award in the form of a book, which they have donated to the Library Learning Center at UW-Stout.

The title of the book is "The Tool and Manufacturing Engineer's Handbook: Quality Control and Assembly," and it was awarded to the Stout SME Student Chapter -88 by the National SME Headquarters.

"This is the second book we've won and donated to the library," said Steve Schmitz, student chairman of the organization.

"We felt it was the best way that the resource could be used," Schmitz stated. In this way, faculty and other students can use it too, he added.

The Stout SME organization won the book for having the largest membership increase in Region Six, which consists of five midwestern states, Schmitz said.

Their membership now is at 175, which is the largest in the nation, Schmitz said.

SME is a very active club. They have biweekly meetings, and conduct tours of industries once a month. In addition, they bring in a technical speaker from an industry twice monthly.

> "We felt it was the best way the resource best way the resource could be used
> —Steve Schmitz"

"We do this to give students an opportunity to see what's going on in industries," Schmitz said.

SME also presents members with the opportunity to take a nationally known certification test every semester.

"This test is the first step to becoming a certified manufacturing engineer," Schmitz explained.

SME also offers the shadow program to club members. With this program, students can go to a company of their choice, and follow an engineer around for a day to watch and learn from them.

Students can walk in the engineer's footsteps, Schmitz said.

Brad Zoern, active club member and officer, said that he would like to encourage underclassmen to get involved in SME early in their college careers.

"I have benefitted greatly from the speakers, the tours, and the shadow program," Zoern added.

The faculty advisor, Charles Yost, has been there for the club, and has contributed immensely to the SME organization, Zoern added.

SSA President advocates late night study areas for "alternate space"

by Tracy Lea Landis

At a meeting with members of the Student Center Advisory Committee last Friday, students who would like the plans for finishing the student center to include late night study areas aired their concerns.

James Falkofske, Stout Student Association (SSA) president, discussed the need for a study area where students could enjoy food and beverages.

The Student Center Advisory Committee, which reviews the plans and policies of the Memorial Student Center, obtained approval from the SSA in April on the tentative plans for developing the unfinished area under the Great Hall referred to as the "alternate space."

The "alternate space" is an area on the first floor of the new student center building which was left unfinished during construction to allow for later expansion of the facilities.

SSA senators were told by members of the Student Center Advisory Committee during discussion of the motion to approve development that there would be opportunity to negotiate details of the plan.

Falkofske first expressed concerns about the need for late night study areas through an undated letter addressed to the Advisory Committee. Falkofske's letter was also signed by seven other SSA representatives.

Falkofske's letter made several points, including objections to the use of any of the the "alternate space" as an exhibit area.

"The Furlong Gallery was designed to house exhibits such as those included in the proposal," Falkofske's letter said.

> "I don't think of going to the student center to study
> —Rae Ann Van Ells"

"I would instead ask that this space be designated to a large study area with low-maintenance furnishings," the letter said. "This would serve as a quiet area for students to study while at the same time allowing these same student to consume food and beverages."

The letter also suggested that the study area of the building be open 24 hours per day.

Falkofske told Advisory Committee members that he was making this proposal "so that if (students) have to burn the midnight oil, they will be able to."

Committee member Richard Kuss, an instructor in the English Department, suggested that the multi-activity area proposed by the committee in their plan could serve this purpose, as could space, Kuss said, that might be found in academic buildings on campus.

Discussion of priorities in the use of student center space was bought out when Rae Anne Van Ells, the student committee member representing the University Programming Board (UPB), disagreed with Falkofske's solution to the study space and refreshment problem.

"I don't think of going to the student center to study," said Van Ells, "I go there to meet people."

Bob Johnson, student center director and non-voting member of the committee, pointed out that student segregated fees pay to maintain the building. Johnson estimated that it would cost $13,000 per year to keep the building open 24 hours a day.

"Obviously, there is a need for a study area," said Johnson.

"We need to take another look at this," Johnson added.

Johnson suggested that the committee review the plans for the "alternate space" when they meet again next fall and the committee discussed ways of soliciting input on the plan from students.

Food and Beverage Colloquium Held

by Nitin Nadkarni

The School of Home Economics sponsored Food and Beverage Merchandising Colloquiums each Tuesday in April.

The Colloquiums were a means to publicly announce a new concentration being offered, under the auspices of the Home Economics in Business Program. This concentration is called Food and Beverage Merchandising.

The new concentration will train the students in merchandising skills, as well as teaching management and research skills.

A career in this industry would expose one to the totality of the food industry, said Thomas Phillips, program director of Home Economics in Business.

In addition, positions are available as lobbyists, media specialists, researchers, trainers, and developers of informational handouts about products uses, Phillips added.

"This industry is a growing industry and the students have a lot of opportunities," said Phillips, who went on to explain about the six facets of food and beverage merchandising.

Food and beverage manufacturing is one facet. Companies such as General Mills and Coca Cola fall under this category.

The second area is food ingredient companies, who manufacture commodities, such as sugar and salt, which are required by the industry.

Brokers, who represent another segment, stimulate demand for food and beverage products, and act as middlemen between manufacturers and retailers.

Wholesalers form the next category. They purchase a variety of food and beverage products from many manufacturers to distribute in a certain geographic region.

Retail outlets, including convenience stores and supermarkets, form the fifth category.

Speciality food merchandisers are a new segment of the retail food business. They deal in speciality food products like imported food stuffs or high quality and gourmet food.

> "Our guests have offered valuable suggestions to improve the new concentration > —Thomas Phillips"

The Colloquium was also a means to assist in the academic development of the new program and give the students an oppportunity to listen to the industry leaders in this field.

Jane Kirby, food editor of Glamour magazine, shared her insights of how media is used to create a demand for more than 2,000 new food and beverage products entering the market each year.

Michael Minor, Vice President of L.J. Minor Co., explained the history of the food base manufacturer. Minor made it clear that sellers of foods and beverages must know their products in order to have a competitive edge.

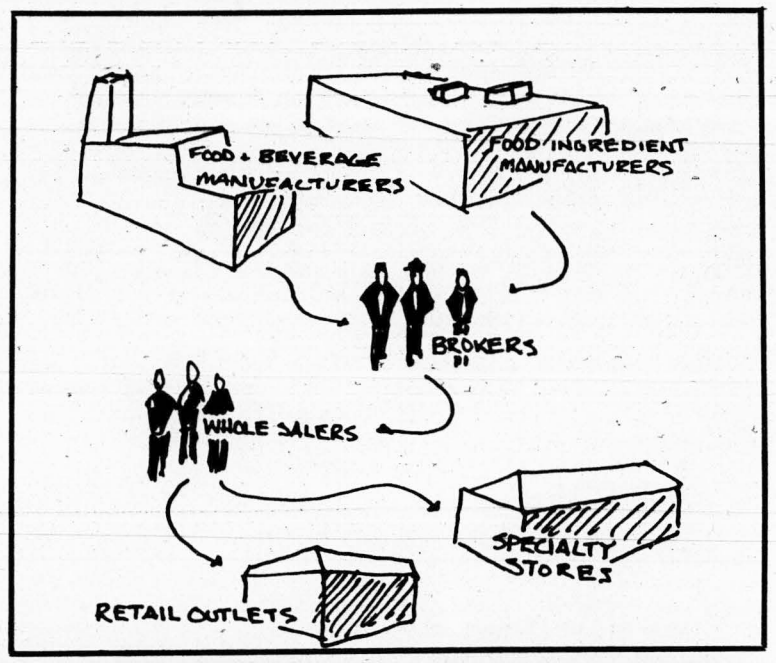
The President and CEO of Baraboo SYSCO Food Services, Jim Wickus, outlined the functions and responsibilities of food and beverage wholesale distributors and their support staff.

Wickus promoted the virtues of selling products on the basis of value, not cost.

Founder and President of the Tom Thumb Stores, Wallace Pettit, spoke about the different laws and regulations affecting the store industry. Convenience stores offer many new opportunities and are an ever-growing industry, Pettit said.

"Our guests have offered valuable suggestions to improve the new concentration," said Phillips, "and this has been very encouraging for us"

Phillips expects the new concentration to start with a moderate level of enrollment.



New officers introduced at IRHA Banquet

by Valerie Clark

A year of hard work and satisfaction was recognized last Wednesday evening at the annual Inter-Residence Hall Association (IRHA) banquet.

With a mixture of nostalgia and anticipation, the 1986-87 executive board was recognized for it's contributions throughout the year, and the 1987-88 board was introduced.

Agnes Duda, former president, spoke about the past year and some of the most noteworthy accomplishments that resulted.

"Because of all of you, we were able to rise to our fullest potential--we made a difference," Duda said.

"With all of your hard work we managed to pull off a successful Residence Hall Awareness Month; the words "residence hall" are heard more frequently around campus, and DORM magazine is changing it's name," Duda added.

As her last duty as IRHA president, Duda introduced the incoming president Juanita Mack.

Mack addressed the crowd briefly, conveying her excitement about the upcoming year.

"It will be a challenge to continue fulfilling the worthy goals IRHA is known for, but with help and support from people like you, I know we will meet and rise above that challenge," Mack said.

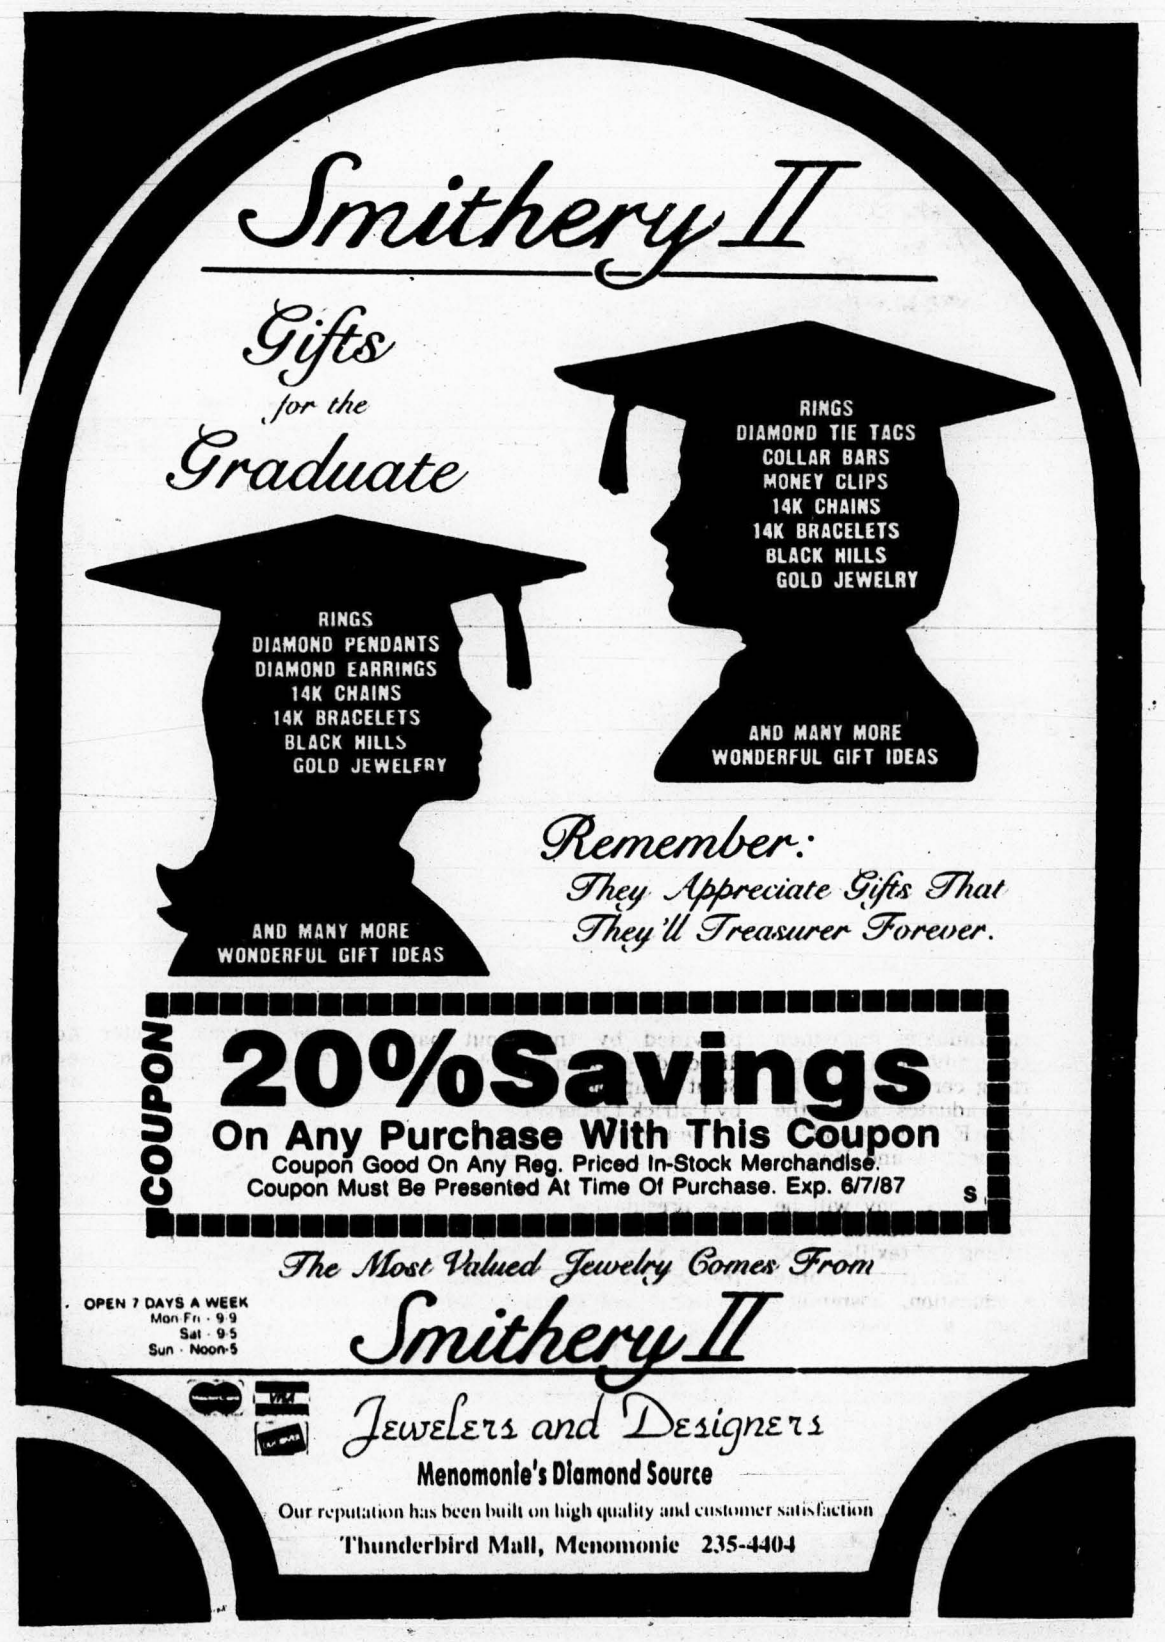
Mack then introduced the other members of the board, including Vice President/Treasurer David Asp, Conference Communications Coordinator Amy Abell, Secretary Scott Jenkins, and IRHA Senator to the Stout Student Association (SSA) Steve Uslabar.

The evening also included a slide show, which recapped the year's highlights, a presentation of the Hall of the Year Award to Fleming Hall for the second consecutive year, and the induction of recipients into the National Residence Hall Honorary (NRHH).

The new members of NRHH include: Jeff Baryenbruch, Kathy Bastin, Mark Budde, Agnes Duda, Susan Grzincich, Gary Hammen, Sandra Kampen, Dan Kunst, Matt Landgraf, Timm Marr, Frank Moravec, Diane Whitman, Juanita Mack and Lisa Endres.

The NRHH Scholarship was awarded to Shari Thede, president of Hovlid Hall.

The evening ended with a performance by Dudley Riggs, a comedy improvisational group from Minneapolis.



Students design hospital's cafeteria

by Mary Raymond

Nine University of Wisconsin-Stout students are lending their expertise and talent to a design project at Eau Claire's Luther Hospital.

The students, working in groups of three, are redesigning the hospital's cafeteria in exchange for a concrete project to put into their portfolios.

According to Stephanie Ripley, an art major with a concentration in interior design, "it's really good experience to be working person-to-person with a client. It put a different perspective on the work."

Ripley is teamed up with Margaret Larson and Karen Bruemmer, also art majors with concentrations in interior design. Ripley said her group spends approximately 10 hours a week outside of class working on the project.

Larson has also gained a new perspective on teamwork while working on the Luther Hospital project. "It's a little different having to work with a group on a design project rather than working by yourself," she mentioned. "You have to incorporate three people's ideas into one plan."

Each group of students spends time each week on various areas which are specified by the three instructors overseeing the project.

Ideas on lighting, seating, walls, doors, color coordination, and furnishings are then presented two days a week to be critiqued and analyzed by other students and the three instructors.

Stu Fullarton, assistant professor of habitational resources, said the students are designing under conditions very similar to those which professional designers work under.

"I've never worked with a client before," commented Larson. "This is more real than a class project because of the specific guidelines."

According to Fullarton, "(students) have to go through the same decision-making process. They have to see what the client needs and know how they can give them that while keeping everyone happy."

Fullarton said he came into contact with Karen Haugen, chief dietician at the hospital, through another instructor at Stout. Hospital officials had already had several professional designers working on the project but still had to spend time on design.

Allowing students to work on the project will give the hospital more design possibilities without consuming too much of the budget allotted for the project. The students are not being paid but the hospital is providing an expense account for travel and presentation materials.

Fullarton, a specialist in lighting and design, contacted Magdalena Laszkiewicz, who teaches industrial design classes, and Mitchell Spencer, an expert in facility planning at Stout, and the three set up the two credit independent study course.

Each group of students will propose an overall solution for the design of the cafeteria and present it to Luther Hospital's Board of Directors.

"This has been a very good experience for the hospital and the students," Fullarton added. "And we as the instructors have really enjoyed it too."

"She (Haugen) really liked the preliminary sketches and was impressed by some of the solutions," Fullarton concluded. "The students brought up ideas the hospital never dreamed of--but that's why you hire design professionals."

18th Congress opposes plan for alternate space; debate goes on

by Gretchen Eke

A motion recently passed by the 17th Congress of the Stout Student Association (SSA), which supported a proposal for development of the unfinished area beneath the Great Hall, was again under scrutiny.

At the second meeting of the 18th Congress Tuesday, a motion to rescind that decision failed by five votes.

This motion was brought out after another motion, which stated that the 18th Congress was opposed to the proposal, was tabled.

Before the vote was taken to table it, Vice-President of Financial Affairs (VPFA) Todd Nelson said, "If this passes, we'll have on record that the 17th Congress approved it and the 18th Congress opposed it. If anything, the decision should be rescinded."

"Because we are the current government," President James Falkofske said, "We have the last say in what the students' opinions are."

It was brought out that the 17th Congress voted to support the proposal the night they were presented with it, without checking with their constituents.

"They weren't fulfilling their responsibilities as senators," Off-campus Senator Tom Aumann said, "They didn't know what their constituents thought about it."

Senator Dave Asp, who is also the chairman of the Student Center Advisory Board, the committee which submitted the proposal, said that a survey was taken regarding it. "It was brought out to the people," Asp said.

A concern of the 18th Congress was that as new senators, they did not know enough about the proposal to vote on it, which led to the decision to table it, Nelson said.

"A presentation is the best way for everyone to understand the proposal in order to vote on it," Off-campus Senator Jay O'Neil said.

Asp said that the information about the proposal was available to the senators and their constituents.

In other business VPFA Todd Nelson mentioned that in a proposal by the governor, Municipal Charge Backs, reimbursements for municipal services, would be assessed to the students to cover fire and police protection, waste disposal.

Nelson said that there would be a nine dollar increase in tuition and a ten dollar increase in segregated fees. "Some of our money may go, for example, to pay for the UW-Madison Hospital if this goes through," Nelson said.

Nelson said it would be better to strike the tuition increase and raise segregated fees $19. "We want to pay only for what we (Stout students) use," he said.

Nelson said that this proposal was made because there are no property taxes assessed to this state property (UW-Stout), and that the assessment could begin as early as next year.

Food Styling Spring Tea Boasts "Swan" Theme

by Steven Lemire

The annual Food Styling Spring Tea met with success last Thursday as 50 Stout students, faculty members and other guests enjoyed the buffet of decorated pastries and light sandwiches.

The tea, which ran from 10:00 to 10:30 in the morning, followed a swan theme, including carved melon swans, cream puff swans, swan meringues and the swan shaped ice carving.

Food Styling Professor Mary Ann Townsend lent her personal collection of over 30 gold, silver, brass, ceramic and crystal swans to the class to enhance the swan theme.

"Food Styling is an upper division course offered in the Food and Nutrition Department each semester," said Townsend.

"In addition to this one public event, students style food from each menu category; they also learn flower arranging and food photography," Townsend continued.

The symbolism of the swans was described on invitations which were sent to some 50 guests, including 20 students.

"Swans are large majestic birds weighing 30-40 pounds and having a 6-8 foot wingspan. These magnificent birds are the epitome of grace, beauty, and elegance. The swan, however, is a symbol of great complexity. Almost all meanings are concerned with the white swan which symbolizes sincerity. To Christians, the white swan is purity and grace and represents the Virgin Mary."

Calligraphy for the invitations was done by Hotel and Restaurant major Rochelle Buhr.

Fieldhouse Addition

Ground breaking for a $4.4 million addition to UW-Stout's fieldhouse will be held at 9:15 a.m., Saturday, May 16.

State Representative Richard Shoemaker, university officials and student athletic representatives will be on hand at the brief ceremony which will take place near the southeast side of the fieldhouse.

Contracts have been awarded on the project and construction is expected to begin May 18. General contractor for the building will be the Hutter Construction Company of Fond Du Lac. Plumbing will be done by Tri-State Mechanic, Inc., Ashland.

Heating, ventilating, and air conditioning will be handled by Badger State,Inc. of Eau Claire, and the balancing will be done by TAB Services LTD of Altoona. The electrical work will be done by Poellinger Electric, Inc., of La Crosse.

The project includes remodeling approximately 10,000 square feet of the existing physical education building and adding approximately 80,000 square feet.

The additional footage will contain locker rooms, weight training facilities, offices, laboratories, racquetball courts, and a large multi-purpose gymnasium which will be used for physical education, recreation, and athletics.

The completion date for the project is December of 1988.

65 mph Speed Limit

In recent weeks many states have changed their interstate highway speed limits to 65 mph. Wisconsin is also considering making the change.

Companion bills, Senate Bill 166 and Assembly Bill 240, have been introduced in their respective legislative houses.

This legislation would establish a speed limit of 65 miles per hour on rural interstate highways. An estimated 450 miles of Wisconsin highways would be involved in the rate increase.

The new limit would not go into effect until official signs are erected. The bill would provide for a forfeiture of not less than $30 or more than $300 if violated.

Mundy Recognized

On behalf of the of the Educational Activities Committee, Jack Ganzemiller, chairman, commended Mike Mundy, student member, on his dedication to the committee.

Over the past few years, Mundy's attendance, contributions and offers to participate in subcommittee work have greatly enhanced the ability of the committee to move forward in several areas to improve the educational community at UW-Stout," Ganzemiller wrote.

Ganzemiller's memo concluded by stating that Mundy will be leaving the committee next year and will be sorely missed. "He certainly represented the Student Senate Association on our committee in the true sense of 'shared governance'."

Bridge to be Replaced

Governor Tommy Thompson has approved a $598,000 contract to replace a bridge and make other improvements along WIS 64, southeast of Sand Creek, in Dunn County.

The contract includes replacing the Red Cedar Creek Bridge and the approaches. The Red Cedar Creek Bridge must be replaced due to deterioration of the bridge deck, said Fred Ross, director of the Eau Claire district's Department of Transportation (DOT) which includes Dunn County.

"The DOT is improving the West River Road intersection because motorists can't see far enough ahead for safe driving. The accident rate for this intersection is twice the average rate for that type of road," Ross said.

"The contractor, American Materials Corporation of Eau Claire, will correct the sight-distance problem by grading and filling a dip in the road near the intersection." Ross added.

WIS 64 is the main east-west highway through northern Dunn County, linking the Bloomer-Cornell area with the Twin Cities. That section of WIS 64 carries about 590 vehicles a day.

Construction will begin in May or June and will be completed in August or September, depending on the weather.

Companies Gain Expertise

Walker Brothers of Augusta, Ashley Furniture Industries of Arcadia, and Vollrath Refrigeration Inc., River Falls, are three companies who have benefited from the expertise of UW-Stout students this year.

The three manufacturers were selected for a pilot program at UW-Stout. The program gives the companies access to the skills of a team of advanced level students.

In a class which was offered for the first time this spring, students developed a new product for each company from idea to design drawings.

At the beginning of Spring 1987 Semester, the students visited each plant to analyze the firm's capabilities and proceeded to brainstorm for ideas.

Approximately seven ideas were presented to each firm in a midsemester session and each company selected one idea for the students to develop. The three companies will see models and illustrations of the final product at a presentation scheduled for May 14 on the Stout campus.

Fight back

The cost of residence hall telephones will inevitably be rising next year, thanks to a new contract recently signed by the State Department of Administration (DOA) with Centrax (Wisconsin Bell.) This new contract will affect residence hall students at Madison, Milwaukee, Oshkosh, River Falls and Stout.

Initially, the contract looks good - the actual monthly charges will drop from $13.05 to $11.61. But it is not until you look at the whole picture that the real truth comes into focus.

Centrex will no longer offer a summer disconnection discount, and the company will now be charging students nine cents per call, as opposed to the present system of figuring the per call charges into the final bill.

The present annual charge for a resident hall telephone is $146.47. This figure will drop to $139 with the new contract...unless residents actually use their telephones, in which case the rates would increase at a rate of nine cents per call. What a deal!

That means that if a resident makes one call per day, he/she will end up paying $30 extra by the end of the year.

And how will roommates keep track of how many nine-cent calls each makes? They will have to use the honor system and keep a tally sheet next to the phone. That ought to work well.

The Stout Student Association (SSA) and the United Council, a systemwide association of student governments, have joined forces with the Citizens Utility Board (CUB) to oppose rate increases. They encourage you to let your SSA representative know how you feel. Petitions are also available in the SSA office.

You are encouraged to fight for a more reasonable contract. It has gotten too easy for the State Department of Administration to overburden the students in an effort to save tax dollars.

Where will it all end? All of this looks good for state legislators, but can students really afford to let this continue?

Fight back!!

Seeds of Change

Final analysis

Gene Emahiser

The time has come for me to say goodbye. This will be my last column for this year.

There are many things that I would have liked to have said, but lacked the time or space. There have also been things that I have said that I wish I hadn't. Such is life.

In the final analysis, only three things last forever: God, His word, and people. A man would do well to invest his time in these three things. There is no permanence or satisfaction in anything else.

If I can leave my readers with one thing, this small concept would be it. My whole life is based on a philosophy that teaches me to pour my life into these three things that I shared before.

Over the last nine months, I have sought to destroy the myths, rituals, and preconceived notions that many people hold, which in turn holds them back from God. I have written about everything from wimps and communism to radical Christianity. In doing so, I hope I have caused many of you to think, ponder, and/or question your own philosophy and lifestyle.

I realize that I've caused many of you to become angry, both with me and organized Christianity. I wish to apologize to you if I've said anything contrary to either the spirit or the letter of the teachings of Christ.

To all the people who have supported me over the last year, I wish to offer my gratitude. I know that it could not have been easy or comfortable to stand behind me each week. Your unwavering commitment will not go unnoticed, I assure you.

I would also like to thank those who took the time and effort to drop me a line, to question my logic, reasoning, and intentions. You've caused me to question and challenge myself and I know that God has strengthened me and given me faith because of you.

It should also be recognized that some of the credit and/or blame for my column goes to the men who hired me: Tim and Brian. These men challenged me and taught me and yes, defended me.

Throughout the year, I sowed "seeds of change" everywhere I could. Some of these seeds fell upon fertile soil. These people will go on to change the world for the better.

Another portion of the seeds fell among thorns. These people wanted to believe, wanted change in their life, but the cares of this world, including the fear of man, rose up next to the seed and choked it off.

A third portion of the seeds landed upon gravel and stones. These seeds sprouted quickly but died shortly after they were planted because they could not receive the water and nutrients that they needed to remain strong. These people are the "Lone Ranger Christians." They hear the word and the seed grows. They change and grow for a while, but soon, because of a lack of fellowship, further instruction and cultivating, they die and become a casualty of the war.

Lastly, some of these seeds fell on the wayside and before they could take root, the birds came by and ate them. These birds are the people who have set themselves against God in such a way that it is their intention to destroy or pervert the word of God whenever it is preached. These people are in a fearful place.

If you have read this column at all during the last year, then you have been exposed to a "seed of change." God will hold you responsible for how you responded to His word. If God's word has fallen on anything other than fertile ground in your life, you need to ask God to plow and cultivate you and bring you back to a place where your soil is soft and pliable.

Know this. It is God's chief desire that you return to a state where He can use you to accomplish His plan.

"Cease striving and know that I am God; I will be exalted among the nations, I will be exalted in the earth."
Psalms 46:10

Spotlight/ Chancellor Swanson

Subject: Issues affecting the Stout community

by Lisa Young

No matter what kind of organization you are involved in, there has to be a leader. The success of your group depends upon the leadership and organizational skills of that person. Chancellor Robert Swanson plays the leading role at the University of Wisconsin - Stout.

Chancellor Swanson is from Superior, Wis. He completed his freshman year, and spent the following three years in the Army during World War II. He then returned to Stout to earn his bachelor's degree.

While at Stout, he has held a variety of roles. These roles include student senate president, graduate assistant, faculty department chairman, assistant dean and dean of the School of Industry and Technology and dean of the graduate college. He has been chancellor since 1972, and will soon become the senior chancellor in the UW system. Chancellor Swanson was an industrial education teacher for 15 years, so much of his free time is spent woodworking.

Chancellor Swanson also has the opportunity to travel a great deal. He has been to Malaysia, Wales, England, and China, working to develop international studies programs.

STOUTONIA: What did you think of The Stoutonia this past year?

CHANCELLOR SWANSON: The paper is always interesting. I especially like to look at the editorial, not so much to see which side of the issue was discussed, but for the issue itself. And I don't want to underestimate the student voice in the Campus Slant. It is important to hear what students have to say.

STOUTONIA: What would you suggest to improve The Stoutonia?

CHANCELLOR SWANSON: I would like the relationship between The Stoutonia and the student government to improve. Up until 10 years ago, there were hardly any problems between those two groups. I encourage the leaders of The Stoutonia and the student association to inform me of pro-

Well done

Dear Editor:

This letter is addressed to the students enrolled in this semester's Outdoors' Skills class. To say that you performed nobly in an adverse situation would be an understatement. Having taken this trip with the Outdoors' Skills class myself a few years ago, I know only too well both the fatigue factor and the rough terrain which you had to encounter while seeking help for your instructor, John Zuerlein.

I have worked with Mr. Zuerlein on numerous occasions providing leadership and RA training. He believes strongly that oftentimes people's limits are self-imposed, that individuals can do more than they think they can, and that by pulling together, a group can resolve almost any problem. Your performance on Friday night, May 1, confirmed John's beliefs. In each case you made the best decision possible. You worked well together and accomplished the task of obtaining help for your instructor as quickly and efficiently as possible. My congratulations to you all. Each of you should be very proud of yourself for your performance in handling a very unexpected and serious situation.

Sincerely,
Anne Ramage Assistant Director of Residence Life

Narrow-minded

Dear Editor:

For the last six months, I have especially looked forward to reading the "Seeds of Change" column in The Stoutonia. The reason for this is not because I agree with the point of view put forth by Gene Emahiser; quite to the contrary, I think that they are the most contemptuous and narrow-minded pieces of journalism that I have ever read. I think that his obvious lack of knowledge of the human experience is surpassed only by his lack of respect for those who disagree with his rigid opinions.

Perhaps what I enjoy the most about his column is the fact that it always seems to draw a response for the following week's editoriai section. In a day when apathy seems to run so rampant throughout our universities, it is very comforting to see that people still take the time to respond to this person who continually tries to manipulate our minds with guilt and his personally biased interpretations of the Bible. Thank you, Stoutonia, for generously giving us all the opportunity to express ourselves.

Until recently, I have been satisfied merely with reading what is offered in The Stoutonia, but Gene's column in the May 7 edition (inappropriately titled "For Mom") has angered me more than I can say. His meager attempt in the first paragraph to pay homage to the loving and irreplaceable mothers of this world was blunt, matter-of-fact, and grossly insufficient at best. He chose instead to use the majority of his column to brutally assault the consciousness of women who have made the extremely difficult decision to terminate an unwanted pregnancy. Thank you very much, Gene, for your attempts to defile the one day of the year that we have officially set aside to honor our beloved mothers.

Gene, of course, would attempt to justify this by hiding behind the Pro Life cause and claiming that CAMPUS SLANT/ What do you think of .9¢ per call next year for dorm students?

by Dan Banach

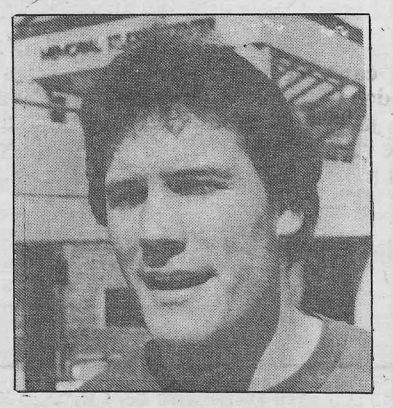
Randy Buttke,
Psychology,
Junior,

It doesn't seem fair. It doesn't make a whole lot of sense as far as everyone else not paying extra.

Sue Meyer,
Graphic Design,
Senior,

It seems like another way to rip off the students. It does not seem fair just to charge dorm students and not the rest of the customers. It's another way to make some money.

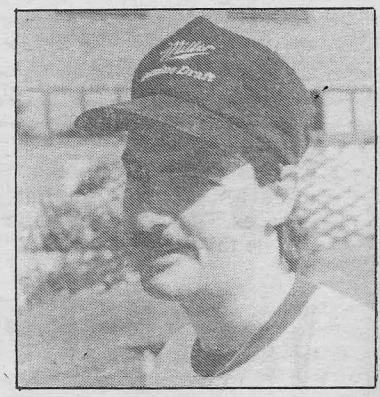


Kirk Ermatinger,
Business Administration,
Senior,

I don't think it's fair. My phone bill is big enough the way it is. I can't understand what the increase is going to be used for. We have enough fees the way it is now; we don't need an increase in our phone bill.

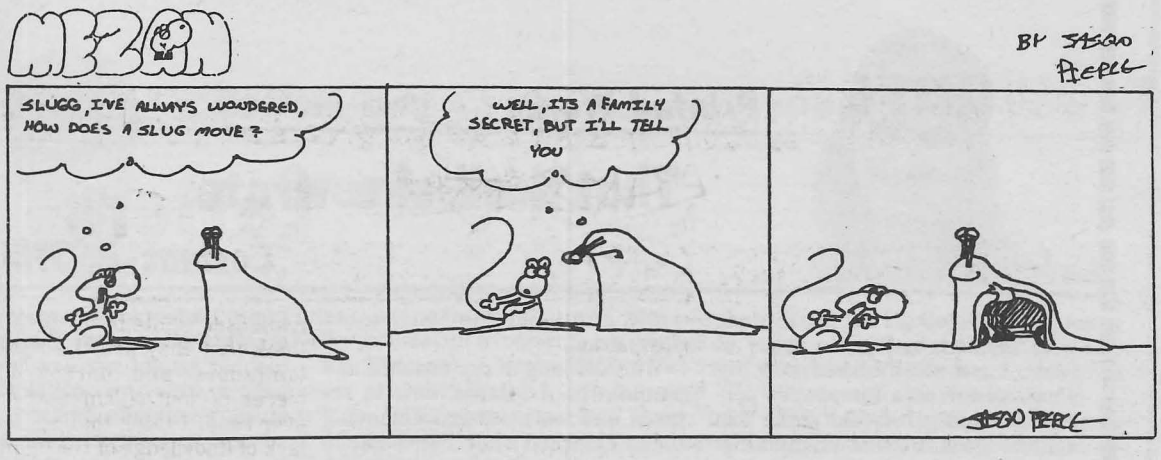
Meredith Basinger,
Clothing Textiles and Design,
Freshman,

I don't agree with it. I think campus students pay enough for long distance service the way it is. It's to much to ask from a college student; we already have enough to pay just going to college.



Pat Brogan,
Business Administration,
Junior,

I don't think it's fair. The phone rates are already high enough. It's like tuition hikes; it's not fair for the students. I think a lot of students will cancel the service.



Cryptic Notes

Substantial losses

Tim Hopkins

"God is silent. Now, if only man would shut up." Allen Konigsberg

Due to our penchant for mousses and cosmetics of all kinds, America has never looked better. Our only problem is that in our quest for the ultimate fantasy we have disgarded reality.

Our fascination with trivia grows while we choose to look the other way concerning substantive issues.

As an example of our fascination with the trivial, notice the way that Americans delved into the speculative relationship between Gary Hart and the "attractive, part-time actress" Donna Rice.

I wonder if the story would have gotten any play if Donna Rice looked like something you would find in a live bait shop? It probably would have helped the Iowa campaign to have a front page story in the Des Moines Register proclaiming, "Hart breaks down ugly barrier."

I sensed the coverage of the "Rice Affair" had gone overboard when I heard Tom Brokaw report that the boat which Hart, Rice et al. took to Bimini was named the MONKEY BUSINESS. The smirk on Brokaw's face indicated that he at least enjoyed the absurd dimensions the story was assuming.

Who knows, if Hart had gone to Bimini on the CHASTITY BELT he might still be the Democratic frontrunner?

It would not be startling to learn that the "Hart Stopper" story was leaked by the White House to divert attention from the Iranscam hearings.

So far, the hearings have featured regulars from another world. I especially enjoyed former National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane's testimony that the only major mistake in the contra aid program was the program's covert nature. To put it another way, the only bad thing about the contra aid was it was illegal.

McFarlane clarified the Reagan administration's total disregard for the legislative branch as the Minneapolis Star and Tribune reported "Mc Farlane said he personally had no doubt that Congress did not want 'any money raised for the contras.'"

Better than McFarlane's smooth presentation this week, I loved the righteous indignation expressed by Richard Secord when he was questioned about possible personal profits derived from the Iranian arms deal.

Why question the fact Secord had $8 million deposited in a Swiss bank account after the arms deal? He has announced his plan to give the money back.

he is merely trying to enlighten the masses to the effect that abortion can have on one's mental health. What a clever little "cop out" that would be. In reality, as is made apparent by the style of this particular column, he was only trying to spread those emotions that he utilizes most often - guilt and shame. Perhaps he does this in hopes that they will come to him for the help he offers. Most of us have had the misfortune of being subjected to Gene's insultingly monotonous "performances" outside of the Stout library. Performances given from the pedestal that he has so piously placed himself upon. If so, then we know that he is supposedly the only one who can save us from our own miserable and unhappy existences. Of course, he claims he can do this with the help of "his" God, of whom he miraculously seems to know every desire.

I can only imagine how these women felt as Gene ruthlessly violated their psyches and attempted to reach in and strangle any sense of self-esteem that they may have. Whether abortion is right or wrong is irrelevant to the point that I am trying to make. What is important is that everyone try to consider the source when reading this type of callous drivel. Behavior such as Gene's in this instance is beyond comprehension.

Gene also took his usual shots at the Human Services professions when he remarked that "...it (counseling) teaches them to lie to themselves so that they can believe that they have done nothing wrong." This is just another example of how Gene can so fluently expound upon something that he knows absolutely nothing about.

In conclusion, I would like to remind the people who have either directly or indirectly experienced an abortion, that Gene can never truly know what this issue is all about. Therefore, he has absolutely no basis for referring to it as a "act of selfishness." To accept his opinion on this would be the equivalent of accepting a third-graders opinion on the Theory of Relativity.

I would like to take this opportunity to apologize for this member of my own gender who has refused time after time to show women even the slightest inkling of the respect that they so richly deserve. He made reference in last week's column to "being a man." Because he insists on thrusting his personal opinions upon the public, perhaps he should spend a little less time worrying about his manhood and concentrate a little more on acting like a human being.

Sincerely,
Peter G. White

blems or concerns. If you have any questions about anything, come and ask me. I want the students to know what is happening around campus - there are no secrets - except for private matters that are too personal to discuss.

STOUTONIA: What do you think should be done with the space under the Great Hall?

CHANCELLOR SWANSON: Originally, it was suggested to put an art gallery in that area. But the gallery was relocated in Ray Hall, and worked out real well there. Bob Johnson, director of the student center, wanted a craft shop to go into the empty space. There were suggestions to put in a theatre or an indoor skating rink, but cost was a significant factor. We could also rent the space. We would have to find something that would capitalize on the shape and size of the room. We are still planning all of that out.

STOUTONIA: Is it possible to take a tour up in the Stout tower?

CHANCELLOR SWANSON: No, that has always been a great myth. The unsafe, steel ladder going up to the top makes it too great of a hazard to allow any one up there.

Printed Works

That's all she wrote

Cosmas A. Whitten

This is it, folks. I am finally done with my four enjoyable years at Stout. I am also finished with my short career as a newspaper person. I suppose I should make this column good since it is probably my last, (unless some big newspaper reads my column and thinks I am awesome and offers me a giant salary, wishful thinking huh.)

Looking back on my years in college, I have thought about all the different people who have helped to change my life. Some people have given me so much that it has even changed my personality. Many teachers have taught me so much that has helped to change my way of thinking.

Of course, the most important people who I have come in contact with were my teammates and coaches of the Stout gymnastics team. For eight months a year we were together in a tiny gym for 20 hours or more per week. We were also together during our meets and during the time spent in hotels while traveling to our meet destination.

With the help of my coaches and teammates, I learned how to set goals and work toward achieving them. I learned what it feels like to accomplish something and I also learned what it feels like to fall while trying something new. I learned to be a fighter, though; I always picked myself up and tried again no matter how much I hurt.

I would like to thank the people who coached me for four years in college gymnastics, Head coach John Zuerlein, and his assistants Kay Carter and Scott Gay. Together we learned how to make dreams come true.

Besides being in athletics, I was working toward a degree in Hotel and Restaurant Management. I learned so much from all my teachers. I know I did, since I have found a job.

There are a few teachers who stick out in my mind as really making a difference. I sat in his class shaking in my shoes, not wanting to take the class. Later he asked me if I was from a small town. I quietly answered, "Chicago." This teacher taught me how to yell at people with my squeaky mouse voice. Thank you, Phil.

Another teacher from whom I learned a lot was my fast foods teacher. Yes, I am entering the field of fast food, as I have wanted to since I was 17 years old. I remember sitting down and talking for hours about the fast food industry. Thank you, John.

There are so many teachers and students that I could go on about as to how wonderful they are but I just do not have the space to do so.

Around March I was feeling like I did not want to leave school and enter the "real world" but now I feel ready. I would just like to remind all students graduating that "Commencement" does not mean the end but the beginning.

Good luck, everyone, with whatever you plan to pursue. May all your dreams come true and may tomorrow be the best days of your life.

One Point Perspective

Don't do it

Jean-Marie Dauplaise

Despite the fact that it is Monday night and the last week of school (excluding finals week which follows instead of preceding graduation in the usual anti-logic mode employed in scheduling the school year), I saw quite a number of drunk students weaving across the street at 9:30 this evening.

I was thoroughly disgusted since I barely have enough free time to eat and sleep these days. We are in the midst of HELL WEEK boys and girls, and the tennis courts are full of tan athletes, the bars are full of inebriated revellers, and if that's not bad enough these same people get up the next day just in time to bask all day in the sun and become gloriously tan. Enough already, GO TO SCHOOL!!

And, as if I don't have enough to worry about as it is, I'm still uncertain where I'll be living next year or with whom.

Housing has always posed a problem for students. If it's not one thing, it's another. Either your landlord won't fix your stove (that's been broken for seven, count them, seven weeks) and won't even take ten dollars off your rent for the inconvenience, or your roommate calls the cops on you because he/she is afraid to tell you to turn down the stereo.

Some general rules to follow when selecting a dwelling and roommates are,

1) Don't live in the dorms, excuse me, residence halls, unless you a. despise privacy of any sort, or b. enjoy group showers.

2) Don't share a room, especially if you're a slob or an art major. If you're a slob and an art major it should be a law. I haven't had my own room yet, but I've decided I have no other option. I am a slob and an art major.

Drawbacks to sharing a room include; incompatible schedules. If you stay up late and sleep late your roommate will inevitably go to bed early and get up early. Likewise, if you're a slob, you'll end up living with Felix Unger, and if you're neat you'll end up with Oscar Madison.

3) Don't move in with a good friend, or even a marginal friend. If you live with strangers you won't feel bad when you decide that living with them is impossible. It's a lot harder to tell friends they're getting on your nerves.

4) Don't agree to take turns doing dishes. Aslo, it is advisable to install cameras in the kitchen to record who uses which dish. Otherwise, stacks of dishes that Nobody used will accumulate rapidly, especially of Fridays. When everyone returns on Monday all memory of ever having prepared or eaten anything during the past week seems to disappear.

5) Don't expect a guy to keep the bathroom clean. Most males will only clean the bathroom when their mother visits. This cleaning consists of wiping up surface scum and large dirt chunks with their least favorite rommate's towel.

6) Do not live next door to vandals. Your mail box may be in jeapordy, your life is.

7) Don't sign a 12-month lease. Trust me.

8) Don't take responsibility for the bills. Try to live with at least on Applied Math major capable of deciphering the phone bill. I would also like to personally apologize to my roommates for my irresponsible behavior regarding bill payment. I really need a personal accountant, I admit it.

9) Don't trust landlords named Clyde or Butch.

10) Don't live with anyone who would call the police on their own mother.

Bottom Line

Greatest hits

Rich Brueckner

"...more than just a bottom line or a lucky shot in the dark."--Neil Peart

So, after two years of columns, it's time to drop the final punch line. Writers sometimes take this opportunity to really lay into the instructors that pissed them off. Not me.

Instead, I think it would be more appropriate to review the damage already done.

Sexual themes have often been targets of satire. Even religious zealots use sexuality to attract attention. For instance, there was a column last year that read:

"Last year's gimmick for Rusty was Dynamic Sex. This year it was Josh with Maximum Sex. God only knows who they are going to get for next year's slogan--Excruciating Sex."

Several columns commented on the universality of the dating scene:

"The initial encounters with a date can be some of the most wonderful experiences of your life. It's a satisfying sensation that approaches that of a new car smell."

"The screw-ups are easy to catalog; we remember them despite ourselves. This is because many of our screw-ups tend to comprise our sex-lives."

"A comedienne recently told women that they will marry the man of their dreams only to wind up 15 years later with a recliner that burps."

Then there were the age-old analogies as to why beer is better than women:

"You can share a beer with your friends.

You don't have to worry about your friends seeing you with a heavy beer."

Meanwhile, there were the reasons why women might think that beer is better than men:

"A beer always satisfies.

A beer always goes down easy"

Beer is a topic that many students can relate to. The Menomonie Mice beer crackdown left me with this reaction:

"What happens during a crackdown? The police use informants and question people with stamps on their hands. They storm the house and grab the beer. It's kind of like when another school's rugby team rolls into town."

My favorite was the Haineyvision column:

"The trouble began a long time ago. Haineyvision had been granted a monopoly by conscientious city fathers who couldn't be compromised by anything but the finest teenage hookers."

Reflecting back now, I suspect that the root of all this is the belief that there is no greater joy in life than causing stress to those who are unhappy without something to bitch about. Thank you for your support!

That's all folks!

Hutter, Spraner show personal work

by J.M. Dauplaise

Tuesday, May 13th marked the opening of Rick Hutter and Noreen Spraner's Senior Exhibition. The show opened at three p.m. at the Applied Arts Third Floor Gallery.

The large crowd attending the opening was treated to a spectacular show. Hutter and Spraner succeeded in impressing the gallery visitors with both the atmosphere they created and the quality of the work shown.

Hutter's "Fallen Go-Go Girl" was definitely his showpiece. The four edition serigraph done in hot pink and gold glitter set off by the black halftone image of a 60's go-go girl turned on its side drew extremely favorable reactions from those in attendance.

The print reflects the influence of Hutter's earlier "Gold Record", which was derived from the popularity of the 60's girl groups, such as The Supremes. Printing directly on 45 r.p.m. records Hutter transferred a multiple picture of his mother which looks very much like Jaqueline Kennedy-Onassis to create his own "girl group".

Hutter's paintings provided a more personal glimpse into the artist's life, incorporating photographs within fields of color done in oil. In "Catherine", he paints a slightly muted yellow over the photograph of a home which is surrounded by a divided field of black and earthy red.

"I think everything relates well as a whole," said Hutter, "it shows how one thing develops into another; how one idea is derived from a preceding one."

Spraner's work also recieved a positive reaction from those attending the opening. Her work reflects a strong sensitivity to color. This is evident both in her subtly colored lithographs and in her paintings.

The series of four lithographs entitled "After the Fall" explores the play of color off of the litho image. "Parts Within", which featured hand colored lithographs provided a nice expansion upon the "After the Fall" series.

Spraner's painting, "Recoil" was an intriguing piece. A myriad of images could be read in the delicately hued, impastoed canvas. The image metamorphosed from an egg to an embryo to a cell and conjured opposing images of birth and engulfment.

Regarding her work Spraner explains, "My images are emotional. Many of them have been a working out of things. They include elements from my unconcious. I'm trying to achieve a sense of something I can't explain, if I could explain it I'd write it down."

Overall, the show was very impressive and includes some not to be missed pieces. The show will run May 12-16. The last Senior Exhibition of the year will open May 18 and features the work of Sandy King, Jef Maynard, and Greg Parr.

"Change begins with the individual" - Easel talk with Jerry Bowker

by Stevie Voll

Easel talk with Jerry Bowker on Friday afternoon in the painting lab at about 3:00. Where the creative kids hang out.

Jerry Bowker is currently substitute teaching for the Stout Art Department as a painting instructor. In the past, he has taught drawing and painting and fundamental design courses at Stout. He mentioned that he is the only teacher on the staff who also works for the grounds department.

Jerry graduated from Stevens Point in 1968 and from Northern Illinois in 1971 with an MFA in painting and drawing. While in graduate school the intense part of the Vietnam war/ conflict was taking place.

On campus, there were movements and activities: Anti-war activity, the civil rights movement, feminist movement, Gay liberation movement had just gone public, Black nationalists movement, and people were questioning the values of the larger society.

Of course, if I might say that there are still movements and activities right here on the Stout campus: people buying ice cream cones, joining business clubs, going out to bars, frisbees, playing roles of sunbathers, even hair, should I bob it or perm it, and well, there aren't a whole hell of a lot of people around who are questioning much of anything these days.

Now, somebody tell me, when is this going to change?

Bowker came out of graduate school and moved to Albequerque, New Mexico. As a painter, he said he enjoyed the light quality and open space down there and he also said, "it seemed irresponsible to pursue career and self interest goals when there were so many social and environmental problems that needed attention."

While in New Mexico, there was much controversy over the Black Mountain range in the four corners area; an area which the Indians held as sacred. After a few years, he moved back to northern Wisconsin and joined in on what was known by underground writers as the "Voluntary Simplicity Movement."

> "Art should make a contribution to the changes that need to be made in society"
> —Jerry Bowker

The movement was about people who were moving away from the larger part of society and getting in contact with nature. "To treat the land with sensitivity and sacredness rather than destroying."

It was then he stopped painting, "I saw it as an expression of the larger society that placed its aesthetics on paper or canvas rather than actually trying to live one's life in a responsible manner. It involved the accepting of one's impact on the environment."

After about ten years, he resumed painting again. He stated that in some way he wanted to regain that contact with nature as living in close relation to nature did not allow a direct means for personal growth and quote, "Art should make a contribution to the changes that need to be made in society."

About painting, he said he was attracted to the Abstract expressionist movement as he is attracted to nature, as it does not need to represent anything (sidenote, it doesn't have to look like a cow). "Within the context of language of abstract art, I have the freedom to explore the ongoing problem of what it means to be a human being."

"So what is finding out what oneself really is? What is our potential? What is our range? What can we know about ourself?" An analogy was made: being an artist allows the individual the ability to open up to finding out what one is really about, what a strange world it must be to the lifetime cashier at Kwik Trip. Can a person really get in touch with oneself in front of a cash register? Adding up a Snickers? Subtracting a bottle of hair spray?

Bowker said he enjoys working in the Art department as it is a great place to be involved with others who are interested in art. Working for the grounds crew, he can be working with and caring for the surrounding environment.

Staff photos by Jeff Altenburg

At the Communication and Technology students, Wayne Parmley and Rob Kilgore, have their photo collages on display. The collages were inspired by the work of David Hockney. There interest was an independent study on the part of Parmley and Kilgore. Both students plan on furthur exploring the idea.

by Gretchen Pemberton

Wayne Parmley and Rob Kilgore, both Stout students, have stepped outside class assignments for photography and ventured into an artistic approach for capturing subject, known as Photo College.

Parmley, a third year Graphic Design student, specializing in photography, said he was greatly influenced by David Hockney's book Cameraworks.

Hockney, originally a painter since the early sixties, said he first made photo collages as paintings and then as works by themselves.

Parmley said, Hockney was "influenced by Picasso in design theories and how you look at things."

Photo Collages contain a series of shots, which are later joined, taken from the same position. Sometimes another medium is added, such as pencil or charcoal.

Parmley explained, "When you're looking at a subject or scene, not all areas are seen at the same time, the eye follows an instinctive pattern."

Viewing the subject matter in a photo collage is more revealing than a single photo in a "frozen" state.

Kilgore, a sophomore majoring in Psychology, started shooting two semesters ago after borrowing Hockney's book from Parmley.

"I've really taken off with it." Kilgore said. In one of his collages, one-half of the photos are taken from a Saturday afternoon and the other half on a Sunday morning.

Kilgore said, "It is the passage of time, captured in the series of photos, that makes it more interesting."

Parmley appreciates Hockney's approach to photo collages because the "technique is looser which allows more freedom, without being incredibly hung up on the technical aspects."

Both Parmley and Kilgore plan to investigate this means of creative expression further this summer.

Stout offers elementary photography, color photography and advanced black and white along with the choice of independent studies.

Kilgore's and Parmley's photo collages can be viewed on first floor of the Communication Technology building. (The old student union.)

Chocolate

James Simmers

Give me chocolate or give me death
Said by somebody who really had his priorities straight.

Aaaah, the rich, dark, bittersweet decadence of chocolate. It is certainly the most deadly of all the deadly sins and and yet by far the most tempting. Chocolate cake, chocolate ice cream, chocolate milk and chocolate bars are all just another way to say inches on the waist. But the most enticing of all of these cocoa delights by far is the little known chocolate truffle.

Chocolate truffles are actually just a kind of over-qualified fudge shaped into little balls and rolled in cocoa. They were named as they were for their unfortunate circumstance of resembling a dark and rugose, subteranean, ascomycetous fungi named "truffle." Although this was not a very glorius namesake, the chocolate truffle overcame its harsh beginning and became one of the most popular and sought after of all confectionaries.

The greatest asset of the truffle is that it is chocolate in its purest form. Any ingredient in a truffle that does not originate from a cocoa bean is most likely there just to enhance, not change, the purity of the chocolate (if that is possible). Also, any liqueur can be used in your truffle to suit the flavor to whatever your personal tastes may be. If so desired, vodka, whiskey or other harsh, grain-type alcoholic beverages can be used to give your truffles that extra little kick to the head.

Following are two of my personal favorite truffle concoctions. Incidentally, truffles should always be prepared over a very low heat. Crockpots and hot pots are perfect for this type of preparation, so feel free to to try these recipes in any dorm room. But be sure to lock all the doors and windows. You would not want to have to share, would you?

Orange Truffles
12 oz. real chocolate chips
2 sticks butter or margarine
2 Tbl. cocoa
1 tsp. vanilla
1 Tbl. orange juice concentrate
2 oz. Triple Sec
2 oz. whole milk
extra cocoa for rolling

Melt chocolate chips and butter or margarine together over very low heat until smooth. Add remaining ingredients and stir constantly over very low heat for fifteen minutes. Refrigerate for 2-3 hours. Shape hardened mixture into balls and roll in cocoa.

Smirnoff Nut Truffles
12 oz. real chocolate chips
2 sticks butter or margarine
2 Tbl. cocoa
1 tsp. vanilla extract
4 shots Smirnoff Vodka
4 oz. chopped walnuts

Melt chocolate chips and butter or margarine together over very low heat until smooth. And cocoa and vanilla extract and stir constantly over very low heat for fifteen minutes. Remove from heat and add vodka and walnuts and mix well. Refrigerate 2-3 hours and shape hardened mixture into balls. Cover with chopped walnuts if so desired.

Enjoy

Hot Jazz sing to enthralled audience in Mabel Tainter

by Karen M. Heagle

The word hot can mean "extreme heat," or another shade of the meaning according to Webster is "producing exciting emotional and physical reactions by means of strong rhythms and improvisation. Said of jazz."

Jazz music that was hot was performed by a vocal group from Eau Claire called, appropriately, Hot Jazz at the Mabel Tainter Memorial on Friday. The group is led by Al Accola with two women Lorie Carpenter and Marti Jannusch, and two other men, Kurt Niska and Micheal Swedburg.

Hot Jazz excited a nice sized crowd of varying age groups. Playing to various age groups is important to Accola. "We try to be as diverse as possible." In an effort to be diverse the group played contemporary jazz as well big band jazz and anything in between.

The first set appealed to the followers of the big band era opening with a rendition of "Route sixty-six," followed by the classic, "Tuxedo Junction."

Backed up by a 10 piece band from around this area playing reeds, percussion, bass, keyboards, the group's range of vocal styles came through. I enjoyed the harmonious blend of "boo-bops," etc. that were incorporated into their many songs.

The second half of the show was popular jazz that the younger members of the audience could relate to. Songs like "Nobody Loves Me Like You Do," once done by Whitney Houston, "Bop til You Drop," done by the Nylons, and "Sing a Song" from Earth, Wind, and Fire left the audience throbbing. The costumes in the second set seemed to be more balanced and visually interesting than in the first set. Every so often I wanted to have a little more volume but, maybe that is my taste.

The group had stage character. Especially Accola, whose animated facial expressions kept the audience happy - if the music wasn't enough. But even when Accola left the stage the other vocalists were just as fun to watch as listen to. Let's Rock, a rhythmic tune that concluded the first set was an example of Carpenter, Niska, Jannusch, and Swedburg stage ability.

The vocal group just completed a commercial for Wisconsin Tourism, and it has plans to play at several festivals and music competitions this summer around the state. Accola hopes to take his group to the Ordway in St. Paul and similar major music halls in the cultural centers of America.

The group has been performing for five years. Four years ago they played right here at Stout. Accola chose the name Hot Jazz seeing it on a t-shirt. The name stuck and the members have no intention of changing it.

If Friday's audience's thundering applause was any indication, Hot Jazz is a vocal group with talent and potential.

Grids presented the best of Stout designs

by Jennifer Tooley

A design show entitled "Grids" was held this past weekend in the Student Center. This was a joint exhibition of work by the graphic design, industrial design, and interior design concentrations within the art department.Over 100 students participated in the show, yet it is unlikely that you, if you are like most Stout students, even heard that the show was held.

This is very unfortunate. The work that was presented by the students was exceptional. A multitude of ideas, presentations, projects, and inventions were displayed. There were outlines for building renovations, product labeling and campaign designs, models of innovative health equipment, and countless other projects. All were impressive and all were designed by Stout students. Yet few of you even know what your fellow students are producing on a regular basis on the Stout campus.

I was able to spend about a fourty-five minutes at the show on Friday afternoon. I'm glad I did. I intended to come back on Sunday and spend a bit more time; the posters said that the show would run through Sunday. Yet when I called the Student Center on Sunday morning to find out the exact times, I was told that the show had been taken down the night before. I did some more calling and found that this was true. Maybe if you did plan to go, you found that the show had already left. Again, this is unfortunate.

It seems that the Student Center, the only facility on campus with a space even large enough to consider holding a show of this size, will only allow an event three days time. The time setting up and taking down a show like this would take three days alone. It seems uncomprehensible to me that a university that encourages students to gain practical experience and involve themselves in realistic projects cannot even provide a space, and a time, and an encouraging atmosphere in which to display these projects.Given this situation, students outside the art department are very unlikely to ever know how much quality work students are producing.

Susan Hunt, an instructor in the art department, was a co-ordinator for the "Grids" show. She and other faculty members have found these problems to be a continuing source of frustration. "The art building is isolating- it is an overall problem with people understanding what design is. Three days makes it more difficult."

For now, the prospect of a similar type of show for next year is questionable. The hassles are simply to great. There has been talk of finding larger gallery spaces on campus, but this is just talk. In the meantime, quality student work will continue to go relatively unnoticed on campus.

Super Valu sponsors $10,000 prize cooking contest held in Home Ec.

by James Simmers

Last Friday in room 208 of the Home Economics Building, Super Valu Food Stores sponsored the "Country Cooking Jamboree" cook off.

The fourteen participants competing for the $10,000 grand prize had all been winners at regional cook-offs sponsored by Super Valu which had been held earlier in the year across the nation. Contestants who hailed from as far as New Mexico and as near as Deerfield, Wisconsin entered their treasured family recipes in the competition.

All of the entries were judged not only on taste and presentation, but on how they related to American heritage as well. The judges also viewed a four minute presentation made by each participant explaining their recipe and how it tied into the contest's theme.

The panel of judges included; Michael Bartlett, editor in chief of Restaurant and Institutions magazine; Richard Thomas, owner and manager of the Creamery Restaurant in Downsville, Wisconsin; Ellen Carlson, food editor for the St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch; and Betty Vines, former faculty member in the School of Home Economics.

The winners and all the other entries will be presented in a cookbook

Dr. Anita Wilson was the main organizer of the program at Stout's end. She attributed the success of the contest to the contestants, faculty and students all working together. She also added that since Super Valu stores were sponsoring the competition, it was a nice tie-in with the new food and beverage merchandising currently being offered by the university.

First place was awarded to Margaret Zigert of Deerfield, Wisconsin for her entry of Scandanavian potato salad served with herb toast. Second place went to Helga Resland of Des Moines, Iowa for her bean and butter bread recipe and third place was awarded to Martha Davis of Inman, South Carolina for her rather unusual presentation of chunky chili stew with cornbread dumplings.

The winners and all the other entries will be presented in a country cooking cookbook soon to be offered by Super Valu food stores.

Devils strike easy win over Parkside

Devil's slugger Jeff Kloes takes a good cut at the plate during Stout's District 14 playoff doubleheader with UW-Parkside. Kloes, a senior, has set 8 new school batting records in his illustrious career for the Stout Devils baseball team. While also being named all-conference, all District 14, and the State's MVP player this season.

by Chris Riba

UW-Parkside proved to be no challenge for the Blue Devils' baseball team. The Devils swept them and captured the District 14 title, allowing them to advance into the NAIA area 4 playoffs against Missouri-Southern today in Joplin, Missouri.

The Devils' explosive bats produced 29 runs in two games, while the defense held Parkside to only 4 runs. Stout took the first game 12-2 and the second 17-2.

In the first game Tim Buswell and Jeff Kloes lead the offensive attack with Buswell going 4 for 5 and Kloes 3 for 5, as the Devils exploded for 18 hits and 12 runs.

> "We're going to play our game, we'll play the best we can
> —Coach Petrie"

Mike Charbonneau picked up the victory by pitching 6 1/3 innings, allowing 6 hits and 2 runs. Joe Schopp came in and closed the door, getting the final two outs to pick up the save.

The twenty minutes between games was not enough to cool the red hot Devil bats as they scored 17 runs on 16 hits. Tim Osowski's second inning grand slam and Sean Boho's pinch hit homer spearheaded the offensive attack.

Dave Crabtree was the winning pitcher. Tim Feurst and Brad Resch each worked an inning of relief in the victory.

The Devils now play today in Joplin, Missouri against defending area 4 champs Missouri-Southern (33-20).

"We're going to play our game" said coach Terry Petrie, "will play the best we can."

If the Devils survive these games they will advance to the NAIA national tournament May 26-30. Mike Charbonneau will be starting the first game and Dave Crabtree will be on the mound for the second.

Men tracksters take third in conference outdoor meet

by Denise Cain

It was a hot day for a heated outdoor conference meet May 8 and 9 as the the Stout Men's Track team finished third with 96 team points. UW-La Crosse won the meet with 170 points and UW-Stevens Point finished second scoring 113 team points.

Overall, the Blue Devil men tied for second place with Stevens Point in the WSUC. Stout track finished second in the indoor and third in the outdoor meet while Stevens Point took third in indoor and second in the outdoor meet. The combined finishes tie both teams for second place.

The team goal was to finish in the top three with hopes of taking second place. Tri-captain Matt Christenson said that he was proud of everyone on the team. He added, "Our third place finish was not because of a lack of effort; Stevens Point had an excellent day."

Junior Dan Doucette had an impressive day as he finished first in the conference in the 400 intermediate hurdles with a time of 53.97 seconds, and first in the 400 meter dash, running the event in 49.49 seconds. Jeff Fimreite also placed in the 400 dash as he ran the event in 49.94 seconds earning him a fourth place finish.

Doucette also competed in the 110 meter high hurdles placing sixth with a time of 16.12 seconds. Sophomores Zack Adams and Brian Kohls finished the 110 hurdles ahead of Doucette placing fourth and fifth with times of 16.04 and 16.07 seconds respectively.

Team leader Paul Bons continued to show his running talent as he placed second in conference in the 1,500 meter run with a time of 3 minutes, 47.38 seconds. Continuing down the track, Bons placed fourth with a time of 5 minutes, 25.9 seconds in the 5,000 meter run.

> "Our third place finish was not because of a lack of effort
> —Matt Christenson"

Kenute Connell accomplished the sprinting for the Devils as he ran the 200 meter dash in 23.29 seconds, earning him a third place finish and finishing fifth in the 100 meter dash with a time of 11.94 seconds.

Bob Hackley earned another first place for Stout as he completed the 3,000 meter steeple chase in a time of nine minutes, 49 seconds.

Scott Romenesko and John Zastrow came through for the Blue Devils as they took the top two finishes in the grueling decathlon. Romenesko scored 200 points in the final event to beat Zastrow who was injured in a pole vault fall. Romenesko finished first and set a new school record with 6,146 points while Zastrow finished second scoring 6,135 points.

In the field for the Devils were Randy Miller, Brandt Olsen, Gary Klopp and John Zastrow. In the hammer, Miller threw the weight 149 feet, 8 inches, enough to earn him a second place finish while Brandt Olsen finished fourth with a toss of of 137 feet, 6 inches.

In the long jump field event, Klopp landed a fourth place finish by jumping 22 feet, 7 inches. Zastrow had a successful day in the pole vault as he hit 14 feet, six inches securing a second place finish.

Paul Bons, senior track standout, said he feels the team has accomplished their season goals. In view of next year's goals Bons added, "Next year's team has the ability to come back and repeat what happened this year, and do as well or better."

Ruggers cap season with 18-4 victory

by Slash La Freniere

All good things must come to an end. Last Saturday the UW-Stout Centaur rugby club ended their year of competition with a 18-4 victory over the Milwaukee Black and Blues city club.

The victory was satisfying for two reasons, one was that the Centaurs defeated a team that was the national junior league champions last year, and the second is that the Stout ruggers closed out the year with a fine performance from all those who played on Saturday.

The match began with both teams sizing each other up until Centaur player Tim Anderson broke through past the Black and Blue back line to score a try. What wasn't supposed to happen happened, The Centaurs had the lead 4-0.

Play continued at a fast pace and what ever attack the Black and Blues mounted, the Centaurs thwarted and came back just as hard. Late in the first half Anderson was called upon to kick a penalty kick from long range and was successful, giving the Centaurs a 7-0 half-time lead.

The Stout ruggers began to believe in themselves and in the second half they really came on. Scott Leaderman picked up a lose ball and ran forty meters to score a try. Later in the second half, John Wangen scored a try after picking up the ball from a scrum and powering his way into the try zone, giving the Centaurs a 15-0 lead.

Milwaukee managed to score a try during the half but afterwards they could not mount a serious scoring threat. Anderson made another penalty kick, bringing the final score to Stout 18, Milwaukee 4.

Last Thursday the Centaurs faced their arch-rivals, UW-Eau Claire and were defeated 11-6 in a match that the Centaurs should have won.

Stout had many good scoring chances but each time that they were close to scoring, a favorable call went to Eau Claire. The match featured many hard hits and intense play by both teams. Mike Hackworthy suffered a sprained ankle during the match and was replaced by Brian La Freniere.

Stout's six points came from the foot of Anderson, who made two penalty kicks. Stout was close to the try line many times in the second half. If they could have penetrated the try zone and made the ensuing conversion for the six total points, they would have won the match.

On the year as a whole, The Stout ruggers finished with 10 victories and 9 defeats. In the fall season the Centaurs posted victories over Ripon College, Northern Michigan University, UW-Stevens Point, and UW-Milwaukee. Stout was beaten by University of Minnesota, Eau Claire, UW- La Crosse, and the St. Paul Pigs.

In the spring season the Centaurs defeated Loras College, Carleton College, Bloomington city side, Ripon, and the Milwaukee Black and Blues. Defeats were suffered at the hands of Eau Claire, La Crosse, and Northern Michigan.

The Stout ruggers also played three matches in the winter, defeating Eau Claire and losing to Luther College and Stevens Point.

Centaur players Billy Ries and Scott Leaderman will graduate and will not return for next fall. The rest of the players should return depending on how their grades come out. Knock on wood.

The leading scorer for the Centaurs was Tim Anderson with 94 points on the year; 28 in the fall, 12 in the winter, and 56 in the spring. Jim McGuine led the Centaurs with eight try's on the year, good for 32 points.

The President of the Stout rugby club is Todd Anderson, with Todd Harvey as Treasurer and Brian Bohne as Match Secretary.

Netters continue dominance WSUC with fifth straight title

by Paul Emerson

Defending a title the following year after winning it the year before can be a difficult task in just about any sport. But the Stout men's tennis team made it look easy for not just the second, but the fifth year in a row.

The netters are the WSUC overall men's tennis champions after taking seven of the nine flights at the conference meet held at Nielson Tennis Stadium in Madison, WI. over the weekend.

Stout won the meet with 59 team points accumulated in the two day event. Coming in a distant second was UW-Eau Claire with 38 points, just edging UW-Whitewater which had 37 points for third place.

The scoring system awards 7 points for first place in each flight, five for second, four for third place, and so on down the line, (sixth place gets 1 point.)

After points are added up, the team champion gets 7 points, 5 for second place, etc. The same system is used for the dual match results, and the two scores are added up and a overall conference champion is determined.

Stout won both the duals, and the tournament to become the undisputed conference champs with 14 points. Eau Claire came in second, (in duals also), with 12 points.

The netters had the top seeds in all nine flights in the meet. And had a participant in all nine championship finals.

In the first flight, Stout's John Leehy won his final 6-1, 6-4, over Lorant Trompler of Whitewater. Leehy, a senior, combined with senior Tony Pheifer to take the number two doubles flight over Link-Mcguire of Eau Claire, 6-4, 6-2.

Stout's only loss in the singles flights was in the second flight where senior Tony Snoeyenbos lost in the final to Brian Zowin of Stevens Point in a three set battle, 6-3, 3-6, 1-6.

Snoeyenbos and doubles partner junior Mike Friedman lost their second flight doubles final to Rolfing-Washburn of Eau Claire, 5-7, 3-6. Friedman though was far more successful in his fourth flight singles final, beating John Massa of Whitewater, 6-4, 6-3.

In the third flight Stout's Mark Paine, a junior, won his final over Ted Stuckslager of Whitewater, 6-3, 6-2. Paine and doubles partner Todd Trabant, also a junior, combined to take the third doubles flight over Massa-Stewart of Whitewater, 6-2, 6-4.

In the sixth and final singles flight junior Bill Johnson took the title with a 6-3, 6-3 win over Al Olson of Eau Claire.

The netters coach Bob Smith is currently attending the NCAA championships at Salisbury State, MD., with Stout's two participants, John Leehy, and Tony Snoeyenbos, who received a last minute invitation. Thusly Smith was unavailable for comment.

Next week the netters compete in the NAIA National Championships in Kansas City, MO. The tournament runs Monday thru Saturday, and unlike the NCAA meet, the entire team will compete.

"This is Woody Wall telling you, you don't have to play a sport to be one."

The critics have spoken. Now it's my turn.

One student gripes, "I would like to see better sports coverage especially of female athletics, in particular basketball."

What do you want to see, more skin? Well stay tuned pal, a new Women Athletes of Stout calendar featuring many never before seen pictures of jockettes in tight fitting uniforms is in the works. A new exclusive feature for the sports section of the Stoutonia next year.

Another student quips,"I would like to see more in depth and accurate coverage of sports next year. I would like to see all the writers be more knowledgeable on what they are writing about. I don't read any other section, sports is my main concern."

At this time I will now remind all interested persons that the Stoutonia is currently accepting applications for sportswriters for the 1987-88 school year. Of course they'll have to go by my discretion first. Good luck!

With that off my chest, I will now continue with my original thought ideas. (More suggestions on possible improvements are always welcome!)

The end of another successful UW-Sports campaign is now upon us. Seeing as this is to be the last issue of the Stoutonia this year, and fortunately my last column of the year also, I would like to thank a few people on the sports staff for a job well done.

First of all, a big thanks to Cosmas Whitten, who had the privilege of being my boss for the majority of this past semester. Coz is graduating this year, and will be missed by all of us. Good luck and keep in touch.

And thanks to a great staff, Denise Cain, Slash La Freniere, Darron Vanman, Chris Riba, April Whitney, John Pelishek, and Tim (T.J.) Nichols.

They have all worked diligently every week and succeeded in me losing hours of sleep, stood by as my GPA shrunk, gave me an ulceric condition in my digestive tract, and chuckled when I complained of "gray" hairs. (And I've only had this position for two weeks.)

And I can't forget Al Kloss and Dave Norstrom, who put in overtime on the layout this week.

Seriously though, the job of sports editor is both an interesting and challenging one. In the next year I look to improve throughout the year on sports coverage in the Stoutonia. (And watch my GPA make a near miraculous recovery from the disastrous past year.)

In closing, congratulations to all those who tried and succeeded this year, and to those who didn't, keep trying.

UW Stout: the year in sports

Blue Devil cagers can't make fast start last

by Paul Emerson

After busting out of the gate by starting the season with a school record 12 straight victories, the Stout men's basketball team struggled the second half of the season as injuries plagued the team.

The Blue Devils finished a very respectable third in the WSUC with a final 9-7 mark, and spotted an 18-8 overall mark. They ended their season with an upset loss to La Crosse in the first round of NAIA District 14 play-offs

Being ranked as high as eleventh in the NAIA Division II top twenty poll was a highlight of the season for the Blue Devils. It was Stout's first appearance in the national poll since 1975.

The team will lose six seniors including all WSUC and NAIA District 14 player Brian Ellingson. Earning hon. men. all-WSUC honors was Tom Gomolak, while other seniors who will be missed next year include Ron Hunter, John Patterson, Rick Wynveen, and Dan Shervey.

Next season the Blue Devils will see four returnees combine with several transfers and a talented and promising crop of freshman from this season for head coach Dewey Mintz to draw from.

Women gymnastics team takes third in WWIAC

by Cosmas A. Whitten

The 1986-87 Stout women's gymnastics team proved that a rebuilding year really pays off as Stout placed third in the WWIAC Conference Meet, the highest finish in the history of women's gymnastics.

Stout gymnasts improved their season's average by ten points better than last years. Gymnasts placed 10th in the NAIA National Meet with their season's highest score of 126.50.

Stout's Patti Roenitz set a new school record on the balance beat with an 8.65, and tied the school record of 8.70 on the floor exercise. Roenitz was named all-conference and all-District 14. She placed in every event in the conference meet including a first place finish on the balance beam. Roenitz was voted as this years MVP and scored the highest points for the team's point total.

Next year's gymnastics team is looking ahead at big goals including a possible second place finish in conference. Stout only loses two gymnasts. They are Senior Tammy Dennis who has been an Academic-All American for the past two years. Dennis was also voted as the most consistant specialists this year (Dennis is a Uneven Parellel Bar worker). Dennis was also voted most improved in her sophomore year, the year she made finals in the NCGA national meet.

The other Senior leaving is Cosmas Whitten, Whitten made all-conference and all-District with her third place finish on floor in the conference meet. Whitten was also named an Academic All-American. Whitten was voted Most Improved and Most consistant All-Around this year.

Head Gymnastic's Coach John Zuerlein was quoted earlier this year, "This has been one of the most enjoyable and determined teams I have ever coached."

Swim teams look to future

by Darron Vanman

The sport of swimming, of course, involves stroking vigorously from wall to wall, from 22 seconds to over five minutes. You should try it sometime, you'll find out fast it's no easy chore. But our swimmers make it look it easy, like they did all season, qualifying 12 for nationals, that's a lot for a small team.

Coach John Miller said, "Our best meet of the year after conference was the national meet. Mainly because we point for that meet. We qualify as many as we can. The performances were tremendous (including Wendy Heineke's 2nd,3rd, and 4th place finishes to earn her three individual all-american honors)."

Coach Miller's predictions for next season: "I'm hoping we can be as good or better than this year. A lot of things could happen. Our long term goals is to have both teams place in the top 10 at nation."

The swimmers lost two men to graduation, Stu Boese and Kurt Siebert, and only one woman, Cheryl DeBaker.

Besides Heineke earning all-american, DeBaker, Jackie Gilbert, Lara Perkins, Laurie Potter, and diver Natalie Wicks all earned honorable mention all-american for their relay efforts.

Boese, Siebert, Steve Kostrova, and Mark Kukuzke all earned honorable mention all-american for their two relay efforts also.

The swim team had four academic all-americans (must have a 3.5 gpa and place high at the national meet) Boese,Siebert, and Bob O'Reilly for the men, and DeBaker for the women.

Track team is best in school's history

by Denise Cain

The Blue Devil men ran all over the W.S.U.C. competition in both the indoor and outdoor conference meet as they placed second overall. It was the best finish for track in the history of the school.

Head Coach Steve Terry commented, "Our conference finish shows how our program is moving forward. Hopefully, we will challenge La Crosse for the conference title in the near future."

Other highlights of the season include the upper classmen trip to Florida to compete in the prestigious Gainesville Relays. At the relays, the Stout men proved to be as talented as many scholarship athletes.

Five seniors who have participated in track for the past four years will be competing in their last meet this weekend. Those five dedicated athletes include:

Paul Bons Four time letter winner, conference placer all four years in such events as the 1,500 5,000, 1,000 and 800 meter run and the 2 mile run. Paul has also qualified for nationals three years in the mile and the 5,000 run. Paul leaves behind a school record as a member of the 4 x 800 meter relay team and is currently a tri-captain.

Steve Hoeschele Four time letter winner, conference placer in the mile and 800 meter relay, and the 600 meter run. As a sophomore Steve was voted most improved. As a junior Steve received All-American honors in the 4 x 800 meter relay.

Matt Christenson Two time letter winner, conference placer in the 1,500 meter run. Matt is Currently a tri-captain.

Brandt Olsen Four time letter winner, conference placer two years in the hammer throw. Brandt held the school record in the hammer throw until this year.

Scott Romenesko Four time letter winner, conference placer all four years in events such as the pole vault, decathlon and pentathlon. Scott qualified for nationals in the pole vault his sophomore year. Currently Scott holds the Stout record for the decathlon and is a tri-captain.

Reflecting on his Stout running career, outstanding track athlete Paul Bons commented, "I will remember the people I ran with more than my performance times and placings."

Football team waits for next year

by Paul Emerson

The Blue Devils football squad finished the season with a deceiving 2-8-1 overall mark, including a 2-5-1 WSUC slate. They were in a lot of games they could have one, were it not for a high number of turnovers which thwarted their efforts.

The team will graduate just eight seniors this year, including all-American Brandt Olsen, hon. men. all-American Ron Wise, and first-team WSUC player Scott Romenesko. Other seniors include Daniel Murphy, Jim Gorecki, Eric Austavold, Doug Swidak, and Curt Coshenet.

"As for the seniors, it's a shame they can't enjoy what they helped us build," said head football coach Rich Lawrence. Who will be entering just his second year at the helm next fall.

The Blue Devils will return 17 of 22 starting positions this fall, and hope the year of experience under their belts will result in a definite improvement.

"I think with the year of learning and a good off-season of working together and living together, we will be an improved ball club next year," said Lawrence.

Next season will see assistant coach Mike Wyatt becoming the offensive coordinator for the team. Wyatt stated that the team will have a scrimmage on September 5, before the season opener September 12.

Devils season a successful one

by Chris Riba

WSUC northern conference champions, WSUC coach of the year, WSUC and NAIA district 14 MVP, district 14 champions, NAIA area 4 participants and numerous school records are only a few of the accomplishments of the Blue Devil baseball team.

Coach Terry Petrie was named coach of the year by the other coaches in the WSUC. His overall record of 256-323 sports a .434 winning percentage. He credits his success to the hard work put in by his players, "the players worked their tails off. They went through a lot of 6:00 am practices in the off-season and the work paid off."

The Devils' picked up their third conference championship in 6 years. They beat UW-Parkside last Saturday for the district 14 title and are playing in the area 4 playoffs today in Joplin, Missouri. Sporting a 24-19 overall record, 12-6 in conference, the Devils' strong pitching and explosive offense ripped through opponents.

All of the feats were accomplished by a starting line up that included 4 freshmen. The team was lead by senior catcher Jeff Kloes.

Kloes who was named honorable mention all American last year was named WSUC player of the year. He also was picked as district 14 MVP. Kloes is the third of Petrie's players to make district MVP. Tom Armstrong was named in 1982 and Kurt Heffel followed in 1983.

All individual awards are as follows; all conference: Karl Drezek, Tim Buswell, Jeff Kloes, Mike Charbonneau, Bob Effinger, and Dave Crabtree. Chris Larson and Greg Osowski were honorable mention.

All NAIA District 14: Chris Larson, Karl Drezek, Tim Buswell, Jeff Kloes, Mike Charbonneau, and Bob Effinger.

Along with these awards Bob Effinger and Jeff Kloes set school records. Effinger set a new home run record with 10. Kloes set new records for hits 73, doubles 15, season batting average .510, most career at bats 495, most career hits 196, most career doubles 30, and most career RBI's 126. There are still more records that Kloes can reach in the area 4 playoffs.

Seniors playing in their final season for Stout include Jeff Kloes, Bob Effinger, Karl Drezek, MIke Dukat, Greg Osowski and John Rademaker.

Lady netters fourth place finish is best ever

by Paul Emerson

A young but talented Stout women's tennis team came on towards the end of their season last fall to finish fourth in the WWIAC overall standings. The fourth place finish is the best ever finish for Stout women's tennis according to head tennis coach Bob Smith.

The netters finished their WWIAC slate with a 4-4 duals match mark, (fourth place), and a 4-11 overall mark.

Starting the season with just one senior, Jean Feyen, the Lady Devils had their work cut out for them. Also bolstering the line-up were junior Mary Malloy, who was slowed by a freak injury early in the season, at number one singles.

Two sophomores (Tara Stahel and Karen Blau), two freshman (Susie Blietz and Jill Peters), made up the rest of the six varsity spots. Blietz was Stout's top player most of the season, placing second in the WWIAC meet at her number three singles spot. Blietz also earned first team all- WWIAC honors.

Next fall the Lady Devils look to improve on this seasons marks as five of the six varsity players will be returning, and a talented crop of junior varsity players is ready to challenge. "The future looks bright for Stout women's tennis," quipped Smith.

Blue Devil Netters take fifth straight WSUC

by Paul Emerson

After just successfully defending their WSUC title for the fourth consecutive year, the Stout men's tennis team is near the completion of yet another very successful season.

For the second straight year the netters had a member in each of the nine finals in the conference meet, (six singles, 3 doubles).

The netters captured the District 14 championship and qualified for the national tournament in Kansas City, MO. They also spotted a perfect mark in the WSUC dual matches, taking each match by the same 9-0 margin.

Stout finished the regular season schedule with a 31-12 mark, including some big wins over some big opponents.

The team will lose three seniors who have played an integral part of Stout's successes in the past few years. The three are John Leehy, Tony Snoeyenbos, and Tony Pheifer.

The netters made several trips this season, first traveling to Las Vegas for an invitational at UNLV where the competition was all Division I caliber. And a spring break swing to Florida.

With four returning members who saw extensive varsity action this season, the future is looking very good for Stout in men's tennis.

Wrestlers prove better than record indicates

by Cosmas Whitten

The UW-Stout wrestling team proved better this year than their record this season indicated as Stout wrestlers placed sixth in the WSUC Conference Meet.

"This year we set the presidence. We can't measure this team by wins or losses, but by the tremendous strides taken to develop the program," said wrestling Coach Mike Early Junior Wayne Hendrickson nearly gained all-American honors at the Division III National Meet. Hendrickson, who wrestlers at the 167 lb. class, was the only Stout wrestler to participate in nationals.

Hendrickson finished his season with a 25-12 individual record and placed first in the region. Hendrickson made the all-Conference second team and was voted as this year's MVP.

Senior Keith Rusch followed with a second place finish in the region meet. Rusch wrestled at 118 and made the all-Conference third team. Rusch along with senior Chris Coupland were the wrestling team Co-Captains.

Voted Most Improved was sophomore Rich Rupp. Rupp wrestled in the heavyweight class and made All-Conference second team.

Wrestlers are looking forwards to their upcoming 1987-88 season with much anticipation.

Women hoopsters improving

by April Whitney

The women's basketball program at Stout is slowly improving. The past season record was 0 wins and 22 losses but coach Lynda Lee is trying to turn this program around and is encouraging hopeful players to try out for the team next season.

This has been Lee's second year coaching the women's basketball program at Stout and she feels that things are slowly turning around. Lee would like to make womens basketball a winning season sport but she feels that we lack a history of recruitment. "We need people who want to play college basketball to try out for the sport," says Lee.

Despite the past seasons record, the basketball team had a great season and a lot of fun. Basketball is a team sport that requires a team effort. The players had a fun time this past season and are looking forward to a hopeful winning season next year.

Lee's assistant coach for the 86-87 season was Valarie DeVries and the manager for the season was Tonha Lindquist.

Numerous awards were awarded this past season with Renee Kasten receiving; most valuable player, all conference, top field goal percentage in conference, top 10 scorers in the conference, and was ranked 7th nationally in rebounding. Kasten will be returning next year to play for the Blue Devils.

Other awards want to Justine Becker for most improved player, and Sara Zoll for the most inspirational player. Patti Cook is the only senior on this past year's team but she still has one year of eligibility left. As you can see, Stout's womens basketball team is a young one yet and most of the players will be looking forward to returning for next year's season.

Cross country have thoughts on the future

by Darron Vanman

Cross-country, what's that? Yes, it's a sport here at Stout just like football or golf. The gist of the sport is seven guys or girls running their nylon shorts off, up and down rolling hills (mountains,sometimes), and finally finishing the five mile or three mile courses by crossing a white line on the ground. Exciting? You bet it is, just wait till next fall.

The male striders (cross-country runner) had an interesting season. They didn't bring home any trophies, but they did lay the ground work for next fall. Coach Lou Klitzke said, "The LaCrosse Invitational was the guys' best. They did well, as individuals, many personal bests were set, including Paul Bons school record breaking 24:40."

Coach Klitzke added, "The guys also did well for the weather circumstances at Duluth(rains, tough winds,and a freezing chill). We weren't really trying to since we trained hard all week."

The lady striders had their best meet at the conference in Eau Claire. Klitzke said, "The women struggled all season with their numbers (less than five runners until conference), but we had five runners for the conference. They did quite well."

Klitzke's predictions for next fall: "We should be much improved for both teams. I'm hoping it well be one of our best years. I think we have a chance to top our best finish at nationals, eighth place for the men, and 15th or better for the women. So we will be nationally recognized."

The striders lost only two, Captain Todd Fox and Mick Smith. Bons was all-conference.

Women spikers complete best season ever

by April Whitney

The UW Stout women's volleyball team had a fine season this past year. The overall record for the team was 22 wins and 23 losses. The volleyball team competed in numerous tournaments throughout the season which included; The Winona State tournament in which the volleyball team won the first trophy in the history of the program here at Stout.

Lynda Lee is the volleyball team's head coach and Kathy Thompson assisted Lee this past season. Lee has really turned the volleyball program around this past year and her future goals include making Stout's volleyball team a winning one.

This past season has been the best volleyball season in Stout's history, which Lee says is something she is proud of. Lynda Lee is really looking forward to the up coming season and hopes it will be as good (if not better) than this past year.

This past year the volleyball team had two seniors; Valerie DeVries and Wendy Morrow. DeVries served as one of the co-captains along with Michelle Espe. Wendy Morrow was awarded the most valuable player of the 86 season. The most improved player award went to Carol Bufe and Maarja Aalgaard was voted the most inspirational player.

Lady tracksters in the groove

by Paul Emerson

The UW-Stout women's track team completed it's season last weekend in La Crosse at the outdoor conference meet by placing seventh overall in the two day event.

Head Coach John Miller said of the team, "they performed very well though there were some disappointments." He went on to say "there was a great deal of team unity that was evident throughout the whole weekend."

The two-mile relay consisting of Lisa Heimmerman, Michelle Ennis, Deb Lucas and Maureen O'Neill set a new school record. They shattered the old record by 14 seconds in setting a new record time of 9:52.

Junior Deb Lucas commented, "since we don't have a big team, it's really nice when we get together and push each other to run personal bests and break a school record."

In the middle distances, sophomore Kristin Mauk ran the 400 meter dash in a time of 60.08 seconds, placing her fourth in the conference. Mauk also led off the 4 by 100 meter relay, along with Liz Maztek, Maureen O'Neill, and Beth Class. Together they ran a season best time of 53.13 seconds.

The shotput team of Sue Schaefgen and Renee Leffel both made it to the finals on Saturday. Schaefgen made a toss of 12.05 meters placing her fourth overall, while Leffel placed seventh with a personal best throw of 11.67 meters.

Freshman Cathy Todey ran her first Heptathlon. The Heptathlon consists of hurdles, high jump, shot put, 200 m dash, long jump, javelin, and the 800 m run. Todey compiled 2063 points over the two day meet.

Junior Janet Turowski had a personal best in her leg of the 400 m sprint relay, with a time of 60.7 seconds. Other members of the relay were Maztek, Class, and Mauk.

In the high jump Barb Peterson leaped 1.53 meters placing her seventh overall. Peterson commented on the team size, "it is quality not quantity that matters, and we have a quality team on and off the track."

Head coach John Miller concluded the interview saying, "I was proud of each of the women on the team this year. Each performed up to and in some cases exceeded their best times, jumps and throws."

Golf team shows improvement; wins own invite

by Denise Cain

The 1986-87 varsity golf season was devastated by rain. Highlights of the season include the Blue Devil Invitational where Stout took first place.

The golf team was led by Paul Byron, a junior of Wausau, Wis., freshman Charlie Brown from Racine, Wis. and Jim Maguire, freshman of Green Lake Wis.

The team placed sixth in the conference meet. Coach Sten Pierce said that they were disappointed with their performance. He added, "We played good all fall and then let the wheels fall off when it really counted."

Currently the golfers are preparing for Summer tournaments and the Fall season by competing in Spring tournaments. Coach Pierce commented that they had a prosperous Spring. He stated, "Our overall play was good and consistent."

Coach Pierce has been busy recruiting for the fall season. Two Menomonie golfers, Steve Dahlby and Craig anderson, have transferred to Stout and will be on the Fall roster. Also many new freshman have shown interest in competing with the Blue Devil squad.

Paul Byron made all-conference WSUC, and was a letter winner. Other letter winners include: Charlie Brown, Jim Maguire, Brian Widder, and Steve Mongerson both December graduates and Tom Mc Lleland a junior.
